PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 76th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Edward P. McAdams, pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

We pray Thee, Almighty and Heavenly Father, to send down Thy divine spirit of counsel to direct the deliberations of this august body and to keep its Members conscious of their obligations to Thee, the author and giver of all blessings. Today we are struck with fear when we see so many nations reverting to paganism and barbarous cruelties in their efforts to crush out of the minds and hearts of their citizens the spirit of liberty which we have enjoyed since the institution of our well-beloved Government. We pray Thee, therefore, to give to these lawmakers the inspiration and power to frame such laws and enactments that will conserve our liberties and bring about progress and prosperity, to the end that other nations, following after the example of the United States in its fidelity to Christian ethics, may be confirmed in peace, governed in justice, and animated with love for their fellow men. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

The message also announced that Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. BORAH had been appointed members on the part of the Senate to the Joint Committee on the Commemoration of the One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the First Congress of the United States, pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 4, agreed to February 1, 1939.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 25. An act prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators;

S. 117. An act for the relief of Lulu M. Peiper;
S. 279. An act for the relief of Pherne Miller;

THE GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to your attention the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority yesterday bought for $78,600,000 from Mr. Willkie the power plants of the Commonwealth & Southern in the State of Tennessee. I want to know where you are going to get the money.

Another thing I would like to find out from the Members of this House is this: When you purchase all the public utilities of this country, where are you going to have anybody else who will be able to pay the taxes? Now we are coming to the point where you will have Government ownership of everything; where you will have this Government going into everything under this New Deal. The first thing you know we will have a Russian form of government, and we will have Mr. Roosevelt as dictator at the head of this Government. It is high time to stop putting the Government in all kinds of business. In the name of our American form of government, it is time that this New Deal government here in Washington be prohibited from buying or taking over all private property. What will be left of our American freedom or American individualism?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

RELIEF APPROPRIATION (H. DOC. 152)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

On Saturday, February 4, I approved House Joint Resolution No. 83, which appropriates $725,000,000 to continue the operations of the Works Progress Administration for the remaining 5 months of the current fiscal year.

I would have withheld my approval of this legislation on the ground of its inadequacy to meet human need and I would have immediately asked for a larger sum if it had not been for the provision that there shall not be a reduction of more than 5 percent of the number of employees on Works Progress projects prior to April 1, 1939.

This proviso leads to the conclusion that the Congress stands ready during the balance of February and the month of March to reconsider actual needs in time to increase before April 1 the appropriation for the last 3 months of the fiscal year.

In my message to the Congress on January 5, 1939, I recommended a supplementary appropriation of $875,000,000. This was based on a program to give employment to 3,000,000 workers during February and March and to reduce this employment to an average of 2,700,000 workers in June. This estimated reduction of 300,000 workers by June took full cognizance of the economic recovery which might reasonably be anticipated.

Because it has been necessary during the first week of February to utilize all working capital and pay-roll reserves normally maintained to protect the funds of the United States against overobligation, it will also be necessary immediately to reestablish these reserves from the supplementary appropriation.

The net amount available to finance the Works Progress Administration from February 1 to June 30 is therefore $725,000,000.

In discussing the employment that can be provided for 5 months with $725,000,000 first consideration is given to the winter months of February and March. The joint resolution requires that reduction in employment in those months shall not exceed 5 percent, which reduction, if carried out, would mean the discharge of 150,000 employees.

However, I call your attention to the fact that the rolls have already been reduced by 350,000 since the last week of last October. As no new assignments have been made during this period, there has been a large accumulation of able-bodied people certified to us as in need of relief—people, however, who have not been able to secure places on the work program.

The need of these people is so apparent and so deserving that the rolls, in human decency, ought not to be reduced during February and March by even 5 percent. After conferences with the Works Progress Administration it has been determined for the above reason to hold the rolls at the present figure of 3,000,000 persons during these 2 months.

To employ these 3,000,000 people at the prevailing average monthly cost of $61 will require an expenditure of $366,000,000.

This will leave $359,000,000 for the months of April, May, and June.

Under the terms of the joint resolution this sum must be apportioned over the entire period to June 30. The Administrator will have at his disposal an average of approximately $120,000,000 per month for these 3 months—providing an average employment of slightly less than 2,000,000 persons.

Two alternatives under the joint resolution are open to the Administrator. The first is to reduce the rolls abruptly by 1,000,000 persons on the first of April and provide an average employment of 2,000,000 persons during the ensuing 3 months. This would result in throwing this very large number of persons out of employment suddenly. Such a number cannot possibly be absorbed by private industry in time to prevent extreme distress.

And I call your attention to the fact that on the average every person discharged from the rolls has dependent on him or her three other persons. In other words the greater part of 4,000,000 Americans will be stranded.

The second alternative is to commence a week-by-week reduction on April 1 and to carry this reduction through to June 30. Even on the assumption that all reserves which under proper governmental procedure should be maintained, were completely expended by June 30, such reduction would require that employment by the end of June will be reduced to a figure well below 1,500,000 persons.

In other words the program of present employment would be slashed considerably more than one-half within a period of 3 months.

If, however, proper reserves were maintained at the end of the fiscal year, employment at the end of June would drop still further—to a figure of only slightly more than 1,000,000 persons.

Therefore, on a program of gradual reduction from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 persons would be thrown out of Works Progress Administration employment—or, with the addition of those dependent on them, from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 Americans would no longer receive Federal Government aid.

I ask that the Congress commence immediate consideration of these simple and alarming facts. The operations of the Works Progress Administration are of such magnitude that if a reduction such as I have above described has to be carried out, orderly and efficient planning requires that this be known definitely by the first week in March. It is equally important that the executive branch of the Government be informed at the earliest possible moment what additional funds, if any, will be available on and after April 1.

I invite the attention of the Congress to the fact that my recommendation for the larger amount was made to the Congress on January 5 and the joint resolution providing for a much-reduced appropriation was presented for my consideration more than 4 weeks later.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I report to the Congress that in my opinion an emergency now exists, and that the facts constituting such emergency are as follows:

(a) That the rolls of the Works Progress Administration should be held at the present figure of 3,000,000 through the winter months of February and March to prevent undue suffering and to care in part for those persons who have been certified as in need, but have not been given employment.

(b) That the funds which have been provided by the Congress, if not supplemented, will require a very drastic reduction in the Works Progress Administration rolls commencing April 1, 1939, which would result in removing people from the work program in numbers far beyond those that could be absorbed by industry with any conceivable degree of recovery. Widespread want or distress would inevitably follow.

(c) That the need for orderly planning of the Works Progress Administration program requires that the Administrator should know by the early part of March what funds will be at his disposal after April 1, and that, due to the time required for congressional action, this can be brought about only by my reporting to the Congress on the situation at this time.

I therefore recommend to the Congress immediate consideration of legislation providing an additional sum of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration to be available in the balance of the current fiscal year.

MEXICAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby instructed to furnish the House of Representatives, within 15 days from receipt thereof, answers to the following questions:

Is it true that the Mexican Government bartered oil from American and British properties expropriated for German, Italian, and Japanese products, and is increasing such barter arrangements?

Exclusive of oil, have not American investments in Mexico been eliminated, or decreased enormously in value, since 1929, and has not this process been vastly accelerated since President Cardenas took office?

Have reported loss of American investments in many fields led to reductions in United States-Mexican trade?

Is it true that the Mexican Government has just appointed a Minister to Berlin after the post has been vacant since 1937; that Japanese Government fisheries experts have served as honorary commissioners of the Mexican Bureau of Fisheries recently and Mexican youths are being sent to Japan for free fisheries education; further, that Japanese engineers constructed the Jalapa (Mexico) Vera Cruz Highway, and that Japanese have Mexican officials' fishing concessions on the west coast?

What has the State Department done to obtain adequate compensation for American holders of bonds in the Mexican national railroads expropriated in 1937?

Does the State Department have any evidence that Germany, Italy, and Japan had an agreement to absorb Mexican oil, including that now being shipped to the German and Italian navies, before expropriation of American and British properties? Did not such shipments start almost immediately after expropriation?

Is it true that Mexican real wages have fallen in the past 2 years?

Did the Ambassador inform the State Department beforehand that the railroads and oil properties would be expropriated or was that as Mr. Josephus Daniels was publicly quoted as saying later "a bolt from the blue"?

Has the State Department a full record of the American Ambassador's speeches and public remarks in the period prior to and after the recent major expropriations and does it endorse these?

What was the complete text of all speeches made by the American Ambassador to Mexico on the subject of expropriation and also the complete text of all his reports to the Secretary of State on this subject and on the subject of Mexico's relations with Germany, Italy, and Japan, as well as reports from other sources on the same subjects?

Is it satisfied that the American Ambassador in Mexico City is now taking steps to protect the remaining American investments in Mexico on a fair basis?

Did the State Department, as publicly reported, agree to the expropriation of any American-owned property in Mexico after the recent United States-Mexican agreement to adjudicate land claims was signed, and was any such property expropriated?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADVERSE REPORT (TO ACCOMPANY H. RES. 78)

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 78) requesting information of the State Department on Mexican relations, having considered the same, submit the following report thereon, with the recommendation that it do not pass:

Such information available to the Department of State as is consistent with the public interest has been furnished your committee and is on file.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the resolution be tabled.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is not in order at this time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the report as read stated that there was a statement from the Secretary of State on file in the committee room. My question, Mr. Speaker, is whether this statement of the Secretary of State, which is not being published here and which, in my opinion, is carrying out the secret diplomacy of the administration, is open to inspection by all Members of Congress?

The SPEAKER. Answering the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, the Chair states that disposition of the report, what should be done with it, whether it should be thrown open to all Members of Congress, is a matter within the discretion of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. FISH. And if the committee has taken no action, can the Members of Congress see the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that that is a matter that should be submitted to the chairman of the committee and the committee itself.

Mr. FISH. Can anyone outside of a Member of Congress see it? Can the reporters see it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not without the permission of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FISH. I thank the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday this week may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial on education.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a radio speech by me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. TAYLOR of Colorado, WOODRUM of Virginia, CANNON of Missouri, LUDLOW, THOMAS S. McMILLAN, SNYDER, O'NEAL, JOHNSON of West Virginia, TABER, WIGGLESWORTH, LAMBERTSON, and DITTER.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending this motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall be confined to the bill and shall extend to 4 o'clock, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3743, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriation bill carries the sum of $1,568,506,769. As found in the report and set out in the detail analyzing the various items, the bill is $30,000,000 plus less than the amount for comparable items in the bill last year. In the computation it is necessary to take into account some nonrecurring items. A full analytical statement of that is found in the committee report, and I will extend the statement of that in the RECORD and answer any questions a little later if it is necessary to do so.

This bill provides for something like 40 of the independent establishments of the Government. It would be physically impossible to take each one of those items and discuss it on the floor of the House, although it might be very desirable to do so. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts will speak later, both of whom are thoroughly familiar with the bill, and I am going to just touch the high spots in it that I think will be of interest to the Committee and try to answer questions, if you have questions on the various items.

At the outset I want to speak of the action of the committee in withholding a portion of the salaries of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Maritime Commission. The organic law provided a basic salary of $12,000 per annum for the Interstate Commerce Commission and for the Tariff Commission. Since the days of the economy bill in 1933 we have carried in this bill regularly a section dropping those salaries back to $10,000 a year, notwithstanding the larger amount carried in the organic law creating these commissions. We carry in this bill for the first time the Civil Aeronautics Authority and the United States Maritime Commission. Here again Congress has fixed the basic salary of $12,000. The committee did not feel justified in putting back the original amount for the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Tariff Commission in view of the present economic condition of the country and yet felt it would be manifestly unfair to those agencies to withhold a portion of the salaries and permit the larger amounts to be paid members of the Aeronautics Authority and the Maritime Commission; nor did the committee feel there were any such great outstanding duties imposed upon the Aeronautical Authority and the Maritime Commission that there should be any differential in the salaries paid to the membership of those two commissions.

All of those commissions are manned by distinguished, high-class citizens. Many former Members of this body are upon those commissions, but there are other agencies of the Government also. The Federal Trade Commission is one of the most important quasi-judicial commissions of the Government, on which there are two distinguished and able former Members of this body in the $10,000 salary bracket, and while it is not a pleasing thing to withhold a portion of an official's salary, on the other hand there should be some rule, some uniformity, about the situation. The matter is brought to the House for its determination. These members ought to be put up to $12,000 or held back to $10,000. The action of the committee in doing so was in nowise a reflection on the distinguished gentlemen who compose these commissions. So much for that. The matter was mentioned on the floor of the House yesterday.

The Aeronautical Authority is carried in this bill, and it is one of the new agencies created by the Congress to take over the duties of the old Bureau of Air Commerce, in the Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of Air Mail, in the Interstate Commerce Commission. This new agency has very important duties and functions to perform. We have given them $21,218,000 with which to operate for the fiscal year 1940, and of that $7,000,000 is for the purpose of improving airways, equipment, and safety devices upon airways, the remainder to be used for their general administrative expenses. This Authority requires a large and highly trained personnel. The committee feels that this Commission will approach its duties carefully and painstakingly, and particularly will give very careful attention to the development of high-frequency radio ranges and other very recent and important attributes of safety in aviation. The committee hopes that the Congress and this Commission will spend all of their efforts in trying to find ways and means of helping aviation and making aviation safer not only for governmental activities but for private activities as well.

The Civil Service Commission is given in this bill an increase of approximately a half million dollars. The report on page 7 shows a break-down of the duties of the Commission and the reasons for this increase in appropriation.

The Civilian Conservation Corps is carried in this bill and is given an increase of a little over $8,000,000 over the current fiscal year, which is almost entirely accounted for by the necessity for purchasing new equipment and clothing for the enlisted personnel. This corps is maintained at the present strength of 1,500 camps, giving approximately 300,000 men average employment.

The National Labor Relations Board is carried in this bill. We give them for the fiscal year $3,189,600 for its administrative expenses, which is $234,600 more than it has for the current fiscal year, but $40,000 less than the Budget estimate.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield now for a question, or would he prefer to conclude his remarks?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will yield now for a brief question.

Mr. COX. The gentleman, I am sure, knows that if there is one Member of this House whom I am willing to follow, so far as appropriations are concerned, it is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I am wondering just what the gentleman and his committee found in the hearings that commended the National Labor Relations Board to any special consideration on the part of the Congress. This is a judicial body, or, at least, it is supposed to be, but the injudicious manner in which the Board has carried on has brought the law into great disrepute and stands itself thoroughly discredited.

In other words, I am convinced that the Board does not function as a judicial body. The fact that it is partisan, that it acts not only as informant but as investigator, prosecutor, and judge, is well known to everybody in this country.

I am wondering if the gentleman and his committee could not have found it possible to cut down the appropriation for this activity to even a greater extent than has been done, and thereby give evidence of public dissatisfaction with the manner in which the Board has performed its functions. I believe the Board to be thoroughly disreputable and therefore deserving of no special consideration on the part of this Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The committee in appropriating $3,189,600 for the National Labor Relations Board or in withholding $40,000 of the Budget estimate in no wise undertakes to pass upon the fundamental question of whether or not there should be a National Labor Relations Board or whether the Board is properly performing its duties according to what I might think its duties should be or the gentleman might think its duties should be. The committee does not feel it is the tribunal to decide whether or not there should be a repeal of the Wagner Act or amendments to it, or what should be done about it. The committee has sought to provide a sufficient fund for the National Labor Relations Board to perform the functions Congress so far has placed upon it, and that is the sole inquiry the committee has carried on.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. COX. I have information from a source I consider worthy of belief that the National Labor Relations Board has initiated a campaign, which it is prosecuting with more or less vigor, that has for its objective the breaking down of the color line in the South. I believe in the handling of the labor problem and labor organizations that is unquestionably true. If it be true, does not the gentleman believe it might be well that there be some special investigation of the Board?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not care to express an opinion on some information that has been brought to the gentleman from some undisclosed source. I may say to the gentleman we had open hearings at which any Member of the House might have appeared if he had sought to do so, and nothing was brought to the committee in its official capacity along the line the gentleman suggests.

Mr. COX. There was no inquiry into that subject.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There was no investigation of the Labor Board. The Committee on Appropriations could not undertake to have an open, sweeping investigation of the forty-odd agencies covered by this bill. Congress has full legislative opportunity to make any change it may see fit in its wisdom to make in this law. It is not the function of the Committee on Appropriations to do it, and we have not sought to do it in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do not the hearings disclose that the members of the Board gave it as their opinion that whatever views they might have toward the sit-down strike were immaterial? Is it not also true that at page 1629 of the hearings they said the holdings of the Board were to the effect that an employer was not permitted to tell the workers they did not need to join any particular union? I know that is not a direct quotation, but is not that the substance of the testimony?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There was quite a full inquiry along that line, I may say to the gentleman, all of which relates to the matter of fundamental policy of the Board, which is not within the purview or function of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I realize the distinction, but does the gentleman believe we should continue to appropriate money for the dissemination of the doctrine that an employer cannot tell his workers whether they must join or not join a labor union?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I believe when Congress sets up an agency and in that law gives it certain functions to perform, the Committee on Appropriations should appropriate a sufficient sum for that agency to perform such functions until Congress changes the law.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Regardless of what the agency does?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Regardless—that is pretty broad.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know it is.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of course, Congress could withhold all appropriations. It is now within the province of the House, if it wishes to do so, to strike all appropriations from this bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know; but in connection with this item, for instance, when the bill comes in here with a recommendation from so distinguished a gentleman as is now addressing us, the gentleman realizes there is little chance of striking it out of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman that the controversies relating to the National Labor Relations Board are not controversies the Committee on Appropriations believes it can help the House to settle. Such controversies should be considered by a legislative committee or by appropriate legislation seeking to amend the law.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Did the gentleman's committee take into consideration the suggestion that has been made by the President that the Wagner Act ought to be revised or amended, which might change the functions of the Labor Board?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That suggestion would not address itself to the Committee on Appropriations. The National Labor Relations Act came from the House Committee on Labor, and the Appropriations Committee would not undertake to revise that law.

Mr. DONDERO. Inasmuch as the President had made the suggestion that the law should be revised or amended, the thought occurred to me that if a revision is made the power of the Board may be curtailed, and, rather than encourage the Board in the conduct of its present procedure, the appropriation might be curtailed and the expense reduced.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Congress can do that if it wishes to do so on this bill. It can do whatever it wishes to do about the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Appropriations Committee might well take the position that under any revision of this act the law might cost more, instead of less, to administer.

Mr. DONDERO. But it might cost less also.

Mr. RAYBURN. It might cost less, but that question is not before the Appropriations Committee, as the gentleman from Virginia has so well stated. It is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to follow the will of Congress in setting up commissions and, therefore, to give such commissions enough money to function properly. Whether the National Labor Relations Board has functioned properly or whether it has pleased everybody or has pleased anybody I do not know, and that is not a question that was before the Committee on Appropriations, as the gentleman from Virginia has well said.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that this Board has had before it since its inception 15,082 cases, and is it not also a fact that with all those cases, only in 6 percent of the cases was an order issued by the Board to cease and desist, the rest having been disposed of by agreement preceding the trial or by withdrawal on the part of the union or settled in some other amicable manner?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There are figures of that sort in the hearings, I will say to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is not that the fact?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know whether that is the fact or not. That statement was made in the record.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the testimony in the record of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is some testimony of that sort in the record.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If that is true, this Board has certainly done a mighty good piece of work in averting strife, conflict, and contention between employers and employees and has done this at a very low cost to the Government, when only 6 percent of a total of in excess of 15,000 cases were actually tried and in which an order was ultimately issued to cease and desist.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, following up the thought of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] and the gentleman's reply thereto, it is my understanding that in every case, with the exception of one, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the National Labor Relations Board in its findings.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I understand that is true.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me there?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the gentleman from West Virginia and the gentleman from Montana, I am asking the gentlemen if they do not know that 90 percent of the representation cases are not even made up or reported and the employees have no right of appeal?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me answer that statement. Those cases are settled, and whenever cases are settled they do not make headlines in the newspapers and that is the reason the public does not know about them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And the employees have to take the decision.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let the gentleman point out in the Wagner law where an employee can appeal from a decision of the Board in such cases. It cannot be done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This Board acts exactly as the Federal Trade Commission. They have the right to appeal from the National Labor Relations Board and only 6 percent of the entire 15,000 cases ever went to the court for final determination.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I challenge the gentleman from Montana, as long as he has made that statement—

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman can get that right from the Labor Board itself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I challenge the gentleman to point out to this House any day when I am on the floor a provision in the Labor Act that gives the employee the right to appeal in a representation case.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is on the same plane as the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That provision is not in the law and the gentleman cannot point it out.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will point it out to you; do not worry.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to get away from the National Labor Relations Board for a moment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Very briefly.

Mr. IZAC. Will the gentleman explain the difference of $40,000 between what the National Labor Relations Board requested and the amount the committee reported?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from California has asked the reason for the $40,000 cut in the appropriation, and I am pleased the gentleman has called my attention to that because I was caught in this discussion and got sidetracked.

The Budget allowed 50 new positions to the National Labor Relations Board—40 in the Department and 10 in the field service. The committee allowed the field positions, but did not allow all of the departmental positions, feeling that, on the basis of the evidence we had, they could very well absorb the additional amount of routine departmental work, and out of the $150,000 Budget increase for personal services in Washington the committee allowed $110,000, disallowing 10 positions, which were to be highly paid positions, averaging $4,000 a year each.

Mr. Chairman, of course, the largest item in the bill is the one providing for the Veterans' Administration and I want to take just a little time in going over this.

At the outset I want again to pay my respects, and I am confident I voice the sentiments of the committee, to General Hines and his assistants at the Veterans' Administration for the splendid budgetary control they have in that Administration. It is one of the largest Government operations, and if you will examine the hearings and follow the testimony, you will find that their budget is brought to the committee and to the Congress each year in clear and understandable fashion. Not only does the Veterans' Administration take great care in the preparation of its budgets, but other agencies might well take cognizance of one feature of their budget control, and that is the fact that they do not stop with the mere allotment of funds, but assigned to their budget officer are a number of field representatives who, through periodical visits, make complete general administrative and efficiency surveys of the management of all field stations. This method not only provides the Administration at all times with first hand information concerning the manner in which field stations are administratively utilizing and controlling allotted funds, but at the same time assures the best possible service to the disabled veteran at a minimum expenditure consistent with good management. Further, it tends to make the operating services more alert as to their responsibilities in incurring unnecessary obligations. By doing that large savings and greater efficiency result in the Government service.

I have here a chart that I will insert at this point which tells the story.

Five hundred and sixty-one million and ninety-three thousand dollars in this bill is carried for the Veterans' Administration. Of that, $97,000,000 is for administrative expenses, and in administrative expenses we find not only the clerical work in the Veterans' Administration but nurses, attendants, orderlies, physicians, and all of the personal services that are rendered to veterans. It may be interesting to note that the Government since the beginning has appropriated for veterans of all wars about $23,000,000,000, and about $8,000,000,000 of that has been for the World War veterans. This appropriation of $561,093,000 is, in reality, just a little less than the appropriation carried last year for veterans and for their services. Of this total appropriation of $561,093,000 the veteran actually receives in cash 84.49 percent of every dollar. In addition to that he receives in personal services, hospital services, domiciliary care and out-patient treatment, and what not, 12.9 percent; and the cost of administering this fund is 2.7 percent, which, I think, is a record that should reflect credit upon the administrative forces that handle this great appropriation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I rise to ask the gentleman some questions about the veterans' insurance. I understand there are 190,000 veterans who own governmental insurance policies, and upon those policies they pay an interest rate on their loans of 6 percent. I think it amounts to about $9,000,000 a year. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the fact that the Government can borrow money at less than 3 percent, that it is unfair and unjust to the veterans to charge them 6 percent on those loans, because the money must go to men who are in need, destitute, and mostly unemployed.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I am not familiar with the situation in reference to that insurance, but I do know that the veterans are getting insurance on a more liberal and cheaper basis than any other American citizen can get insurance for. I know that is true.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman tell me why they are charged 6 percent when the Government borrows money at 3 percent or less?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. For the same reason that we charge the Home Owners' Loan people a greater rate of interest than the Government can borrow money for. I do not think it is a fair criterion to say that because the Government can borrow money for a certain sum it must reloan it for the same sum. The overhead charge for that service is more than the amount for which the Government can borrow money.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman understands the difference between loans to home owners and loans to veterans on insurance. Loans to home owners have to be inspected, but, so far as the loans to veterans are concerned, there is no real expense on those loans.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But the veteran has the most liberal insurance privilege of any American citizen.

Mr. FISH. Not on loans.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know about the loans.

Mr. FISH. They are paying $9,000,000 to the Government on loans.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Of this $97,000,000, broken down, as you will see upon this chart, 2.7 percent of the total amount is administrative expense. The veterans get 84.4 cents of every dollar in cash and 12.9 cents in service.

Getting down, now, to pensions, $432,063,000 is provided in this bill for pensions. I shall insert in the Record a chart showing the number of veterans, the total number carried on the rolls of all wars being 604,213, with 246,067 dependents, or a total of 850,280 veterans and their dependents. As shown on the chart, the amount of money involved for pensions is $432,063,000.

That is the World War risk insurance which, as I have just stated, has given to the veteran of the World War the greatest insurance value that any American citizen has ever received.

I shall speak briefly.

HOSPITAL AND DOMICILIARY FACILITIES

The appropriation requested under this item for 1940 has been divided into two groups, namely, major reconditioning, replacements, alterations, and construction, $2,515,000; and construction providing additional beds, $1,500,000.

The first group, totaling $2,515,000, is for projects of major alterations, renovation of buildings, construction of recreational, shop, and laundry buildings, quarters, replacements of service lines, and other major projects through the accomplishment of which additional beds will not be obtained. The cost of these individual projects is over $25,000 and requires a recommendation of the Federal Board of Hospitalization and the approval of the President, in accordance with the policy approved and established last year, affording essential coordination of Federal expenditures for these purposes and the maximum in budgetary control of appropriated funds.

The second group are projects from which additional beds will be derived and a construction program providing 483 beds during 1940 is necessary in order to care for the progressively increasing number of neuropsychiatric patients. This program covers 75 female beds at Perry Point, Md., at a cost of $325,000, or 108—including administrative space at the same point—involving an expenditure of $450,000; 300 beds at Roanoke, Va., at a cost of $625,000; in addition to these three projects $100,000 is included in the estimate for 56 additional general medical and surgical beds at the Veterans' Administration Facility at Atlanta; in all, $4,015,000. I shall insert for your information detailed statements showing a comparison of beds available for the fiscal year 1938-39 and the estimated number available for 1940, divided as to types.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. On January 1 of this year the Government had taken care of its obligation in the way of paying insurance to the beneficiaries of every one who passed away during the period of the war, from April 1917 to November 11, 1918, date of the armistice. That was a tremendous amount of money—$57.50 a month in a majority of the cases went to the beneficiaries. Is that amount reflected by a reduction in the appropriation for the naval and military insurance in this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is.

Mr. COCHRAN. To what extent?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just to the extent shown on the chart before referred to. The gentleman will find a full statement in the hearings showing a reduction in that. The gross reduction is $13,264,000. The gentleman will find it on page 39 of the report.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman. There should be a reduction yearly as we discharge our obligations.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman tell me if that whole charge of hospital care includes the care of Civilian Conservation Corps and other Government beneficiaries?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It does not, because the Veterans' Administration is reimbursed from the C. C. C. funds for whatever they do for the purpose of the C. C. C.

This chart, which is available and will be in the lobby if you are interested in looking at it, tells the whole story in another form of the amount of money appropriated under Army and Navy pensions. Of course, there is no administration in this. This is the cash money paid as Army and Navy pensions, which is compensation. I believe the veterans rather have it called "compensation" than "pensions"; but you will observe we still have a pensioner of the War of 1812, who is receiving compensation from the Government. This chart shows the number of veterans of the war, the dependents, the total number of veterans and dependents; the amount of money paid in the 3 years of 1938, 1939, and 1940 to each of that group, and presents a very interesting study, and the manner in which these funds are being used, having been appropriated by the Congress for the benefit of the veterans of the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are others who wish to address the committee, and I do not want to consume too much time.

Unless there are some questions, I shall yield the floor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back 2 minutes. Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include certain extracts from hearings and other documents.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the latter part of the gentleman's request must be made in the House.

Without objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts may have permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want at the outset to express my appreciation to the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] and to the other majority members of the committee for their consideration in connection with the preparation of this bill. Also to the able and efficient clerk of your subcommittee, Mr. Orr. I do not know how the committee would get on without him.

TOTALS CARRIED BY BILL

Mr. Chairman, the total carried in this independent offices appropriation bill is the largest total that has ever been carried by the bill. Taking all items into consideration it carries a total of well over $2,300,000,000.

There is available to all a copy of the hearings on this bill. The hearings are 4 or 5 inches thick. They include over 2,000 pages. If my arithmetic is correct, if someone will paste a million dollars on each one of the pages of the hearings we shall have just about enough money available to meet the appropriations carried in the bill.

Leaving deficiency items out of the picture, the totals carried by this bill in recent years have been substantially as follows:

1937.....	880,000,000
1938.....	958,000,000
1940, the bill under consideration.....	2,360,485,000

Last year's bill, as it went to the President, for the regular agencies carried a total of $1,423,098,240, as compared with the total in this bill, $1,898,512,769. Last year's bill for the emergency agencies carried an authorization of $70,997,000 as compared with $67,950,000 in this bill. Last year's bill carried for permanent appropriations and trust funds a total of $101,822,740, as compared with a total of $394,022,260 in the bill under consideration.

In other words, there is an increase in the bill before you as compared with the bill for the current fiscal year when it went to the President last year, without deficiency items, of over $760,000,000.

About $300,000,000 of this increase is reflected in the so-called permanent appropriations and trust funds. The balance is in part due to deficiency items and in part due to increases in items appearing in the bill.

If we eliminate $100,000,000 advanced through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to R. E. A. a year ago, which, of course, was not included in this bill, you will find increases in the regular items carried in this bill amounting to some $328,000,000; of $30,000,000 in the permanent appropriations and trust funds, and a decrease of about $1,800,000 in the authorizations for emergency agencies, a total increase in comparable items of some $356,000,000.

Five items appearing in last year's bill do not appear in this bill: The Commodity Credit Corporation, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the Export-Import Bank, the Pan-American Exposition, and the Federal Communications Commission. Five appearing in this year's bill did not appear in last year's bill: the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the Maritime Labor Board, the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, and the United States Maritime Commission.

Of the 37 items included in this bill, 24 show increases, 6 are on the same basis as during the current year, 7 reflect decreases.

AUDITING BY GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

Last year I said something about the lack of proper auditing under the General Accounting Office.

At that time I pointed out that some 25,000,000 rental and benefit payments, aggregating $1,282,000,000, many of them 4 years old, had not been presented for audit. I am glad to say that the necessary papers have at last been furnished and that the General Accounting Office is at work upon them.

At the same time I referred to lack of proper audit of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Some steps have apparently been taken in the right direction but the audit of T. V. A. for 1934 and subsequent years has not yet been completed.

Progress has been made in the number of agencies audited by the General Accounting Office. There are still, however, a number of agencies not required to account by law and others not submitting accounts as required. PROPAGANDA

A year ago I also spoke about the development of propaganda set-ups in many of the agencies covered by this bill as well as other agencies in other appropriation bills. In the report of your subcommittee a year ago the following paragraph was included:

The committee views with disfavor the tendency to expend disproportionate sums for the printing of publications, often on high-priced paper and under expensive covers or the preparation of press releases, magazine articles, broadcasts, motion pictures, etc., the primary purpose of which is to build up a public demand for the services of the agency issuing the publicity. There has been some improvement in this respect, but the committee believes a substantial reduction of outlay in this quarter can be effected by many of the agencies without diminution of service.

That, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt reflects the opinion of your subcommittee today. While there has been some improvement, I call attention particularly to certain agencies covered by this bill.

The Social Security Board asks for a publicity force of 91 people at a cost of $245,540. The set-up includes the office of the Director, $24,600; the office of the Associate Director, $14,700; the office of the Administrative Assistant, $8,540; the Labor Information Division, $33,580; the Business Information Division, $14,300; the Press and Publications Division, $67,040; the special service staff, $15,440; the Field Service Division, $67,340.

During the past year the Social Security Board's publication division, as the record indicates, published 2,083 press releases, 484 special articles, 3 pamphlets, and provided 701 hours of broadcasting at an estimated commercial equivalent of $150,000. It seems to me the people of this country are pretty well aware that we have a social-security law and of the general terms of the law. I am frank to admit that I can see no justification for such a publicity set-up.

The Federal Housing Administration requests a publicity set-up of 76 persons at a cost of over $212,000. This service during the past year prepared a daily clip sheet for 2,300 publications, weekly releases for 842 publications, 200 special articles, 3 motion pictures, 166 exhibits, and more than 47,000 broadcasts having a commercial equivalent of $1,138,440. Again, I see no justification for such extensive publicity activity.

Other agencies which might be referred to in detail if time permitted are the Tennessee Valley Authority with a force of 32, at a cost of over $107,000; and the Rural Electrification Administration with a force of 31, at a cost of over $98,000.

It seems to me that further steps to reduce this type of activity are imperatively called for.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

I spoke yesterday of the Federal Communications Commission, and shall say nothing further in this connection at this time.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

I want to speak briefly in reference to the Rural Electrification Administration. The testimony in respect of this activity will be found on page 705 of the committee hearings. The attention of the Committee is directed to the steady and rapid increase in the administrative expenditure of this agency. In 1936 this expenditure amounted to only $743,000; in 1937 it was $1,143,000; in 1938 it was $1,520,000; in 1939 it was $2,402,000; for 1940 the request is $2,790,000.

Mr. Chairman, the paternalistic developments in connection with R. E. A. as emphasized in the hearings, I am frank to confess, have been amazing to me.

As the members of the Committee know, the original conception of the Rural Electrification Administration was that it should make loans for the purpose of extending electricity to those who were not fortunate enough to have had it theretofore. As things have developed, however, anticipated borrowers have not been available. As a result Uncle Sam has been organizing and nurturing borrowers. We have been setting up cooperatives for this purpose. We have been organizing them legally. We have been drawing up some 128 legal documents for them. We have been going before regulating boards in respect to franchise matters, rights-of-way matters, and so forth, in behalf of the cooperatives which we have set up. We have been going into court with respect to tax abatements and similar matters for these cooperatives. We have been helping them in the selection of their engineers for the electrical projects.

We have been helping them with specifications, with the analysis of bids, with the supervision of construction. When deposits have been made in rural banks we have been examining the banks in addition to the examination conducted by other Federal agencies. We have been giving training courses here in Washington, and when we have got the project going we have been affording guidance for boards of directors even to the point of the selection of bookkeepers.

All this work is being done, Mr. Chairman, because it is stated that it is necessary if we are going to secure repayment of the loans which are made by this activity.

I have here a copy of an application to the Tax Commission of Ohio. It is entitled: "In the matter of the Pioneer Rural Electric Corporation, Inc., taxpayer; application to obtain a reduction in the tentative assessed valuation of its property for the year 1938; memorandum submitted by the taxpayer and by the Rural Electrification Administration on behalf of the United States of America, a creditor of the taxpayer."

I call attention to two or three statements in this application. The application recites among other things that the taxpayer is now indebted to the United States in a total of $1,184,272. It recites further that the taxpayer has not at any time earned enough even to pay its operating expenses exclusive of debt service and essential reserves.

It recites further that the fact which is chiefly relevant to this proceeding is the earning power of the property; that in the year 1937 the gross operating revenues were $88,111.83; that operating expenses, including taxes but exclusive of interest and reserves for depreciation and future maintenance, were $88,084.35; that interest amounted to over $26,000; that reserves for depreciation and maintenance at 5 percent of the book value of the fixed assets amounted to some $50,000; that it appears, therefore, that for the first full year of operation there was a deficit of $76,731.32, or 87 percent of the gross revenues.

It further appears that there was a similar deficit for the first 8 months of the next year amounting to almost $50,000,000. The application recites that some deficit will continue for a period of years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman referred to a situation in Ohio with reference to some rural-electrification project. The figures that the gentleman referred to and the big totals—do they relate in any way to the Ohio situation?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The only other totals I have given in respect to the R. E. A. were the totals showing the amount of administrative expenditures nationally over a period of years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I thought. Those totals the gentleman gave last just before I interrupted were the totals that related to the R. E. A.?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The totals related to the R. E. A. administrative expenditures over a period of years with particular reference to the paternalistic work assumed by R. E. A.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, there are no operating reports available, as far as I know, for the cooperatives to which we have been lending, supposedly on a self-liquidating basis. If we have got to undertake all this paternal supervision to which I have been referring, and if after all that the financial status of the cooperative to which I have referred is any fair criterion, I am wondering how many of the loans that we have made are really on a self-liquidating basis and how much of the increasing expenditure of this character we are going to get back in the long run.

I think we ought to have operating accounts for all borrowers and I think the Congress and the country ought to realize the nature of the work we are doing in connection with rural electrification.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Mr. Chairman, I have long been a believer in the general objectives sought under the social-security law, but it does seem to me that it should be possible to administer that law with an appropriation of less than $22,000,000.

The attention of the Committee is directed in this connection to the rapid increase in administrative personnel from 6,800 in 1937, to 8,600 in 1938, to 9,000 in 1939, to 9,300 in 1940, with a total ultimately in view of 11,000.

The Committee's attention is also directed to the offices maintained in the field, 12 regional offices and 350 other offices, with an ultimate total of 1,000 offices in view.

The only activity which the Social Security Board administers fully is the old-age insurance activity. The principal work in this connection is the setting up and maintenance of the wage accounts. Forty-three million of these accounts have been set up and much of the posting is done by tabulating machinery. I find it difficult to believe a personnel here of 6,600 and a field set-up such as I have referred to should be necessary to efficient and economical administration.

The travel item of $1,000,000 also seems to me very liberal. It is suggested that closer supervision of motor travel in the field might result in a substantial saving in this respect.

Attention is called to the testimony of Chairman Altmeyer to the effect that existing tax rates for old-age compensation purposes are sufficient without any increase in January of 1940 to pay anticipated benefits until 1949.

TARIFF COMMISSION

The Tariff Commission requests an appropriation of $933,000, the same amount as was appropriated for the Commission for the current fiscal year. It seems to me it should be possible to reduce the appropriation for the Tariff Commission in view of the amount of work formerly within its field of activity now assumed by such agencies as the State Department, the Interdepartmental Committee on Trade Agreements, and the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would it be better to have the appropriation made to the Tariff Commission rather than the Department of State for reciprocal-trade agreements? Is there not a duplication of work there?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts there is, of course, one appropriation made to the Tariff Commission and an additional appropriation to the Department of State in this connection. That is one reason why it seems to me it ought to be possible to reduce the sum which we have been making available to the Tariff Commission.

For instance, under section 337 of the act which refers to unfair methods of competition, in the break-down for next year the Commission carries the sum of $20,668; yet from the hearings it appears that there was no formal action taken under this section of the act at all during the past year. Under section 338 of the act referring to discriminations, the Commission carries the sum of $39,335 for the next year, with little apparent work in this field during the past year. Under section 336 of the act, having to do with work under the flexible tariff provision, the Commission has allocated $37,820 for next year; and yet it appears from the hearings that no action has been taken under this section of the act for almost 3 years, since June 1936 to be exact.

I suspect the nearest the Commission has come recently to action under this section was in reference to the request for a determination of the comparative cost of production of cemented shoes in the United States and in Czechoslovakia prior to the conclusion of the so-called reciprocal agreement with that country.

As the older Members of the House recall, the Commission was requested to make an investigation in order to obtain the difference in cost in July 1937. The investigation was made mandatory by Senate resolution in August 1937.

Not until December of that year, however, were two non-technical representatives sent by the Commission to Czechoslovakia. The agreement with Czechoslovakia was actually concluded in April 6, 1938, and I remember well, several months after the conclusion of the agreement, at my office in Massachusetts receiving a formal statement from the Commission to the effect that the investigation had been discontinued. When the representatives of that Commission came before your committee in December last, they stated that no finding had ever been made as a result of the investigation.

The chief work of the Commission seems to be in the field of reciprocal-trade agreements. Its work in that field must have been reduced as a result of the work assumed by other agencies, to which I have already referred. Moreover, the record indicates that the Commission is to receive no less than $28,000 by transfer from the State Department for work in this connection.

The hearings indicate that no effort is normally made by the Commission to determine the difference in the cost of production here and abroad in respect to items included in any of these trade agreements. They indicate further that in one or two instances where the Commission has made a finding of difference in cost a rate of duty has been subsequently fixed in a reciprocal-trade agreement which has actually been less than the difference in cost established by the Commission.

The older Members of the House will remember in this connection the first agreement concluded with Cuba some years ago. Just prior to the agreement the commission made a finding of difference in cost of production amounting to 1½ cents per pound. Thereupon the duty was promptly established under the trade agreement a month or two later at nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound. The result of our policy has been reflected in a loss in revenue to the Treasury of almost a hundred million dollars and the imposition on the consumers of this country, according to a recent estimate by the New York Times, of about $250,000,000 annually, for the benefit, incidentally, of Cuba and a few large holders of Cuban sugar in this country.

Other instances appear in the hearings at page 625.

The testimony indicates that 19 trade agreements are now in effect. That two, those with Turkey and Venezuela, are pending; that one, with Cuba, is in contemplation; the agreements covering about 57 percent of our exports and 60 percent of our imports.

I am frank to state, as I have already indicated, that I believe the appropriation for the Tariff Commission might well be reduced as compared with recent years.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

I want to speak briefly, Mr. Chairman, and it must be briefly, because the time for debate this morning is limited, about the item of appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority. The amount recommended for T. V. A. is $39,000,000, plus a contract authorization of $4,000,000, as compared with the current year in which there was an appropriation of $40,000,000 and a similar contract authorization of $4,000,000.

The T. V. A. project includes at present 10 principal dams, with 2 or 3 additional dams on tributary streams; substations and transmission lines; a fertilizer program; a minor item for national defense, and various items referred to as related property operations and related development activities.

Both power and fertilizer programs have been operated to date at a loss. The testimony indicates the production of 60,000 tons of fertilizer at a cost of $11,458,193, distributed in large measure to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for use by farmers presumably to assure the production of greater crops for plowing under. It also indicates, in connection with the fertilizer program, the purchase from the International Agricultural Corporation of 570 acres of land costing the seller $145,000 for a purchase price of $678,459.

Under "Related property operations" and "Related development activities" appear such activities as the planting of 9,000,000 trees at a cost of $93,000, the equipment of barges with freezing plants for strawberries costing 27 cents per pound and bringing 7½ cents when sold. Also some $175,000 for studies and surveys obviously intimately connected with the work of Tennessee Valley Authority, including "The migration of population in the Tennessee Valley area," "Occupational administration trends in the Tennessee Valley area," "Income in the Southeast and in Tennessee," "Municipal government and administration in Tennessee," "Government and finances," and "The interterritorial freight problem of the United States."

I repeat that no audit has yet been made of Tennessee Valley Authority expenditures by the General Accounting Office for the year 1934 or any subsequent year.

Four of the ten dams have been completed, the Norris Dam, the Wheeler Dam, the Wilson Dam, and the Pickwick Dam, which came into operation during the calendar year 1938. Three other dams are well under way, the Guntersville Dam, which comes into operation in 1940, the Chickamauga Dam, due to come into operation in 1940 or 1941, and the Hiwassee Dam, also due to come into operation in 1941. The other three dams, at Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals, are provided for to some extent in the appropriation which is before the House for consideration.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield briefly.

Mr. MAY. Can the gentleman tell us what is the installed kilowatt capacity of the four dams that are completed and what will be included in the way of kilowatt capacity in the three dams that are already under construction?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman I find some difficulty in answering the question of kilowatt cost because of the position of the representatives of the T. V. A. before your committee. I made a little calculation based on the general allocation of 32 percent to navigation, 30 percent to flood control, and 38 percent to power, which I understand the T. V. A. gave the joint congressional committee for the 10-dam system as a whole. I tried by applying these percentages to the multiple use facilities figures to obtain a cost per kilowatt for each and every one of the 10 principal dams, and also to determine the navigation and flood-control allocations which might be fairly attributed to each. On that basis I decided that at Gilbertsville, for example, the cost per kilowatt was approximately $277 as compared with an average for the system of $137, as compared with a cost through steam of between $80 and $90, as compared with a cost at Bonneville of about $84.

The representatives of the Commission took the position they were unable to determine a fair allocation in either respect for any single dam, that all they could do was to make a determination for the system as a whole. Therefore, I am at a loss to answer the gentleman's question in respect to kilowatt cost.

Mr. MAY. Unfortunately, I overlooked bringing my memorandum which contains the information I desire, but since I expect to address the House on this subject later in the day I will give it at that time.

Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Wilson Dam cost only $69 per kilowatt—and it was built by the War Department engineers instead of by the T. V. A.—as against a cost of over $200 for the Gilbertsville Dam?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky is going to develop this matter when he takes the floor. Whatever the proper method of computation may be, I feel reasonably satisfied in my own mind that power production at Gilbertsville is far less economical than by the system as a whole or by other dams in the system. I believe there is evidence to this effect in that those representing the T. V. A. indicated they were not even sure at this time that the Gilbertsville Dam would be used for power purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Very briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Gilbertsville Dam is largely a navigation and flood-control dam?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to the gentleman that in the figures furnished the joint committee there was a very definite allocation of power to Gilbertsville as well as every other dam in the system.

Mr. RANKIN. How much of the cost of the Gilbertsville Dam is allocated to power?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The representatives of the T. V. A. state they are unable to make an allocation for that purpose, but they show a kilowatt capacity for Gilbertsville as well as every other dam in the system. The capacity for Gilbertsville is shown as 128,000 kilowatts.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. The gentleman speaks of navigation in connection with this dam. Of course, navigation means transportation of craft. How do the boats get over the dam?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The boats will proceed up the river by a system of locks.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Are there locks in the dams to lock the boats in?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the system is completed, the boats will move up the river through a system of locks.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my colleague from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The hearings at page 1758 give the data submitted by the representatives of the T. V. A. In their analysis they place the cost per kilowatt at Gilbertsville at $277, which is far in excess of the per kilowatt cost at all the other dams, in fact, so far in excess that the average cost per kilowatt at all the dams is $137.60. If the cost at the Gilbertsville Dam is taken out of the computation, the average is reduced to $123; therefore, the cost at Gilbertsville is so high that it raises the general average by at least $14 per kilowatt.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am afraid the figures referred to are mine and not those of the T. V. A.

Mr. Chairman, the specific recommendation of the Budget for the T. V. A. carried in this bill includes for dams and reservoirs $30,747,540, for transmission construction $6,139,460, for fertilizer $2,510,000, for national defense $80,000, for "related property operations" $566,000, for "related development activities" $1,279,000, or a total of $41,322,000, from which certain anticipated income is deducted, amounting to $1,322,000, leaving a total of $40,000,000. Your committee has reduced this figure by $1,000,000, leaving a total of $39,000,000 in addition to $4,000,000 contract authorization.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Has there ever been any evidence presented that this T. V. A. will ever be a self-sustaining operation?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to my friend that the representatives from the T. V. A. would, no doubt, argue that T. V. A. will be on a self-sustaining basis eventually. The fact is, however, that to date we have been running in the red both in respect to power and fertilizer.

The amount included in the item before you, Mr. Chairman, includes the sum of $17,203,000 for Gilbertsville, for Watts bar, for Coulter Shoals, and other tributary investigations. This may be broken down as follows: For Gilbertsville, $12,503,000; for Watts bar, $4,252,000; for Coulter Shoals, $228,000; and for the tributary investigation, $220,000.

The main problem, as I see it, in connection with this item is the extent, if any, to which the Congress will authorize expenditure for work on these dams which may be said to be new and additional construction.

Last year the House had before it the consideration of an appropriation in respect to preliminary work at Gilbertsville. On two successive occasions the House voted against that appropriation. On a third occasion it yielded to the Senate, which had voted to include the appropriation.

Personally, I do not believe the House would ever have agreed with the Senate in this respect had it not been that the final vote was taken by the House at a time when many Members opposed to the appropriation were absent from the House and in ignorance of the fact that it was to be taken up.

Mr. DONDERO. May I suggest to the gentleman right there that when the vote was taken the matter carried by just seven votes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman is correct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the total cost of this enormous dam is at present estimated by T. V. A. at $107,000,000.

The dam itself is an enormous undertaking. It is to be 8,600 feet long and 150 feet high, creating a lake covering 58,000 acres and having a shore line of 2,000 miles.

There is a very vital difference of opinion among experts as to whether or not the dam proposed at Gilbertsville is the type of dam which should be built to accomplish the desired results. It is attacked from the navigation standpoint as being far more expensive than a system of low dams and as carrying with it extreme hazards for boats desiring to navigate the river. It is attacked from the flood-control standpoint on the basis that it is far more expensive than an alternative system of detention reservoirs and that it may be actually damaging in its effect in time of flood on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. It is attacked from the power angle on the basis that the cost of power at Gilbertsville is out of all reason as compared with power produced at other dams and in other ways, and that additional power which it might produce is in no way necessary for years to come.

As a matter of fact, the table submitted by T. V. A. shows an installed capacity, existing or under construction now, amounting to 570,000 kilowatts. As compared with this it shows that demand, both firm and secondary, will not reach 563 kilowatts until 3 years from last December.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

What I have said, Mr. Chairman, in respect of Gilbertsville applies in a general way to the other two new dams for which provision is made—the dam at Watts bar and the dam at Coulter Shoals.

Opposition to any provision for any one of these three new dams was presented to your committee by a former Member of Congress on behalf of the Mississippi Valley Association, an association apparently having 500 delegates from 25 States; also by the Ohio Valley Improvement Association; by the Mississippi System Carriers; by the National Coal Association; and by other individuals and organizations. I quote briefly from the brief filed with your committee in this connection by the National Coal Association, as follows:

The Tennessee Valley Act has now passed from the realm of theory into the realm of fact. It is too late now to undo the mischief already done. The immediate question now before the Congress and the country is simply how far Tennessee Valley Authority shall be permitted to extend and to expand its hydropower facilities and to what extent its prospective annihilation of coal markets may be checked and limited by appropriate action of the Congress.

This question is concretely present in the request of Tennessee Valley Authority for funds to finance the construction of additional hydropower dams. The purpose of this memorandum is to register the opposition of our industry and of the one-half million wage earners engaged in the industry and their families and all of the others whose support is dependent on the mining and transport of coal to the appropriation of any funds for that purpose.

In the light of the facts and for the reasons hereinbefore set forth we most respectfully and earnestly urge that in whatever appropriation for the Tennessee Valley Authority for the ensuing fiscal year, your committee may recommend and the Congress may subsequently vote, no funds be included for the Gilbertsville Dam project and for the other two dams above named, and that Tennessee Valley Authority be enjoined from expending any further moneys on these projects.

The annual loss of 5,751,000 man-days of employment in the coal industry is predicted as a result of T. V. A.'s complete electric output.

Mr. Chairman, it is of vital importance that the issue presented to Congress should be decided right. There is nothing so urgent in the picture from the point of view of power, from the point of view of flood control, from the point of view of navigation, as to justify proceeding at this time without full information as to the facts. After all, the total traffic on the Tennessee River for 1937 amounted only to 1,400,000 tons.

With the National Budget in the condition in which it is today, with the fundamental dispute between experts as to the character of dam or dams that should be constructed, with the report of the joint congressional committee of Congress yet to be received, the wise course of action for this

House and for this Congress at this time seems to me, Mr. Chairman, to defer appropriations with respect to these three new dams and to provide for a thoroughgoing, independent engineering check-up so that we may be sure that we are proceeding along correct lines. I hope the House will adopt this course of action. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend, I insert at this point certain brief comments in respect to other agencies provided for in this bill.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

The testimony of the Civil Aeronautics Authority appears at page 1873 of the hearings, the agency appearing in this bill for the first time. The amount recommended, $21,218,000, reflects an increase compared with the current fiscal year of $7,191,520. The increase may be broken down as follows:

Salaries and expenses, C. C. A.	$4, 286, 520
Salaries and expenses, Air Service Board	380, 000
Printing and binding	100, 000
Program of air facilities	2, 425, 000

While the authority has, of course, enlarged duties to perform, the Budget allowance in respect to staff in the field would appear to have been very liberal.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The testimony of the Civil Service Commission will be found on page 1090 of the hearings. The amount requested, $86,329,000, reflects an increase of $12,085,000 over the current year. The testimony shows, among other things, an increase in the personnel in the Federal Government since 1932 of 273,695. The figures furnished by the Commission are as follows:

Employees	1932	1938 ¹
Classified	467, 161	562, 909
Unclassified	111, 070	289, 017
Total	578, 231	851, 926

The increase from December 31, 1937, to June 30, 1938, amounted to 38,624. The total does not include the legislative, judiciary, Army, Navy, District of Columbia, or employees in the C. C. C.

MARITIME LABOR BOARD

The testimony of the Maritime Labor Board will be found on page 306 of the hearings. An appropriation of $190,000 is recommended. The Board, appearing in this bill for the first time, has the duty of endeavoring to settle maritime disputes and of reporting by March 1, 1940, to the President and the Congress a comprehensive plan for the amicable adjustment of disputes between employees and employers in this field. The Board hopes to be able to bring about results comparable to those obtained by the Railway Mediation Board in the railroad field. Ultimately the question of duplication of effort between the several Federal agencies engaged in this general type of work must be considered.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

The testimony of the National Labor Relations Board will be found on page 1552 of the hearings. Explanation of the Board in respect to complaints as to partisanship and incompetency is included. The testimony also reflects the individual views of the members of the Board on the sit-down strike and the question of amending the Wagner Act.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The testimony of the Railroad Retirement Board appears on page 981 of the hearings. The estimated appropriation of $123,404,000 reflects an increase of $2,524,000 over the appropriation for the current year. Of this amount, $615,000 is for salaries and expenses, $450,000 for a project designed to obtain prior-service and compensation records, and $165,000 for pending and expected claims. It is to be hoped that the increase recommended will serve to eliminate the criticism among those subject to benefits under the applicable legislation in respect to delays in adjudication of claims.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The testimony of the Securities and Exchange Commission will be found on page 355 of the hearings. The sum recommended, $5,370,000, reflects an increase of $863,000 as compared with the current year, attributable largely to new duties under the National Bankruptcy Act, the Over-the-Counter Act, and the Public Utility Holding Company Act. Attention is directed to the enormous amount of paper work and the enormous duplication in connection with the paper work which is now required by the rules and regulations of the Commission. It is believed that constructive and helpful work can be accomplished through simplification and consolidation in this field with respect to the several acts defining the jurisdiction of the Commission.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

The testimony of the United States Maritime Commission will be found on page 839 of the hearings. The sum recommended, $100,000,000 plus a contract authorization of $230,000,000, compares with actual expenditure in the current fiscal year of about $71,000,000 and a contract authorization in 1937 of $115,000,000. The special construction program contemplated amounts to about 500 ships—50 ships a year for a period of 10 years at a total expenditure of about $1,250,000,000. The Commission now has operating contracts with 14 companies, covering 161 vessels, and expects to cover about 230 vessels by the end of the fiscal year 1940. A start has been made in the creation of the United States Maritime Service with stations at Hoffman Island, N. Y., Fort Trumbull, Conn., and Government Island, Oakland, Calif.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The testimony of the Veterans' Administration will be found on pages 631 and 1172 of the hearings. The sum recommended, $561,093,000, reflects an apparent increase of $13,175,500 as compared with the present year, the increase being attributable to increased administrative expenditure in connection with increased hospital and domiciliary beds and to an increase under the pension item resulting from additional legislation at the last session of Congress. An item of $4,015,000 is included for hospital and domiciliary facilities. It is interesting to note that, with the cooperation of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled Veterans, General Hines hopes to see the employment by the end of 1940 of some 250,000 veterans.

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

The testimony of the Federal Housing Administration will be found on page 1041 of the hearings. The amount recommended, $12,500,000, reflects an apparent increase of $4,000,000 over the current fiscal year, the increase resulting from increased volume of work under the 1938 amendments to the Housing Act. A deficiency item in the sum of approximately $5,000,000 is expected to be presented in the near future with respect to the present fiscal year.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

The testimony of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will be found on page 1311 of the hearings. The amount recommended, $24,500,000, is a decrease of $2,000,000 as compared with the present fiscal year. The Corporation has succeeded in making a very substantial reduction in the number of its field offices and it is hoped that this reduction can be further extended. The testimony indicates the acquisition by the Corporation of 118,765 properties, or about 11.7 percent of the total in respect to which loans were granted. Of the properties acquired, some 32,152, or 27 percent, have been sold at a loss of about $19,000,000. The capital value of owned properties on hand as of November 30, 1938, is given as $478,350,403; the current market price is given as $370,752,461.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The testimony of the Public Works Administration will be found on page 1234 of the hearings. The amount recommended, $20,000,000, reflects a decrease of $4,000,000 as compared with the amount available for the current fiscal year. The program under the 1938 Work and Work Relief Act includes 6,211 non-Federal projects and 1,887 Federal projects, which must be substantially completed by July 1, 1940. About 3,500 non-Federal projects are to be completed during the fiscal year 1940. The Administration has eliminated 45 State offices and reports that it is operating more effectively through 7 regional and 2 subregional offices.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The testimony of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be found on page 1837 of the hearings. The amount requested, $9,250,000, is the same as that made available for the current fiscal year. Increased activities in connection with business loans, mortgage loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Mortgage Co., Disaster Loan Corporation loans, and Commodity Credit Corporation loans are expected to require additional funds. The Corporation gives the following statement:

Loans and investments	$10,202,000,000
Canceled	2,087,000,000
Disbursed	7,269,000,000
Repaid	5,314,000,000
Outstanding	1,955,000,000

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Labor Committee I have studied carefully the National Labor Relations Board. I realize that through the debate on this measure and under the 5-minute rule the administration of the act and the act itself will be attacked.

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to state that I am strongly in favor of the continuation of the National Labor Relations Board.

Admittedly, a storm of controversy has arisen over the administration of the act, but for present purposes we are not concerned with that phase of the question. The pertinent question now is the choice between the survival or discontinuance of the Board. In order to eliminate any doubt which may exist in the minds of some, I wish to state briefly the broad purposes of this act.

A SAFEGUARD OF RIGHTS

The National Labor Relations Board is an accomplished fact. It has taken its place among the agencies of government to administer what is perhaps one of the most far-reaching and progressive pieces of legislation which this Congress has ever enacted. That legislation, the National Labor Relations Act of 1935, goes no further than to safeguard the right of employees to self-organization and to select representatives of their own choosing for collective bargaining or other mutual protection without restraint or coercion by their employer.

That, in the words of the Supreme Court of the United States, is a fundamental right. Employees have as dear a right to organize and select their representatives for lawful purposes as employers have to organize their business and select their own officers and agents. Discrimination and coercion to prevent the free exercise of the right of employees to organize is a proper subject for condemnation by Congress, and that is what Congress has done in this act. That is all that the Congress is asked to do by providing funds for the continuation of this agency.

LABOR GROUPS NEEDED

The necessity and reason for labor organizations has long been recognized. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer; he was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and his family; and if the employer refused to pay him the wages he thought fair, he was, nevertheless, unable to leave. Union alone was essential to give laborers the opportunity to deal on a plane of equality with their employer. Fully recognizing the legality of collective action on the part of employees, Congress sought to safeguard this right by making appropriate collective action of employees an instrument of industrial peace rather than of strife. And I maintain that such collective action would be a mere gesture if representation were made useless by interference with freedom of choice. Therefore, the prohibition by Congress of interference with the selection of representatives for the purpose of negotiation and conference between employers and employees, instead of being an invasion of the constitutional right of either, was based on the recognition of the rights of both.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES GIVEN

This, in its essence, is the policy of the Congress as expressed in the National Labor Relations Act. It is a policy which does nothing more than equalize inequities which had threatened the industrial and social fabric of the Nation. It is a policy which enhances the laborer and worker at no expense or loss of prestige on the part of the manufacturer or industrialist. It is the achievement, through the medium of the National Labor Relations Board, of a nearer approach to a fuller realization of the true meaning of democratic processes as applied to the industrial problems of our country. It is interesting right here to note that only about 9 percent of the Board's cases actually go to formal hearings, and that from 90 to 95 percent of all cases handled are settled by informal discussion in the various regional offices.

I feel that no greater or timely service can be rendered to either labor or industry than that performed by voting ample funds for the continuation of this agency of democratic government. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, doubtless at least some of you know, in the past I have opposed the wide extension of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and, as a member of the House Military Affairs Committee, I think I am familiar with the activities of that particular agency of the Government. I was present at all of the hearings when the original act was written and at all of the hearings when the amendments of 1935 were added. I opposed the legislation at that time on many grounds, the principal of which was the fact that I thought it was a socialistic endeavor and that it would have a disastrous effect upon the coal industry. Of course, the question of what it may or may not do hereafter is no longer dependent upon legislative authority, because the two acts, or the original act with the amendments, are amply sufficient to justify it in doing about anything it wants to do, so that my opposition to it now rests not on those original grounds but upon the grounds that there has been waste of money and unwarranted and unjustified extravagance in its operations and that some of the proposals which it now has under consideration are extremely fantastic and unjustified. It is now engaged in numerous activities never intended by the Congress.

I shall refer briefly to the Gilbertsville Dam, which I understand they undertake to justify upon the ground of flood control and navigation. That dam will be located, if finally authorized, 22 miles from the mouth of the Tennessee River. It will be nearly 10,000 feet long and 71 feet in height. It will create a lake in the Tennessee Valley about 184.6 miles in length, and of an average width of from 3 to 5 miles, in some places as wide as 9 miles. It will submerge and cover up approximately 400,000 acres of the finest soil in the Tennessee Valley.

In addition to that it will submerge and destroy three standard-gage railroad bridges and 69 miles of standard-gage railroad. It will destroy and cover up 137 miles of hard-surface highways and 3 large highway bridges. It requires the relocation of 35,000 people and 2,500 dead bodies now sleeping in graves in that reservoir. I mention these things merely to recall the unreasonableness of this proposal. Its estimated cost originally was $112,000,000, but now I believe that has been reduced to around $102,000,000. It is said that it is a flood-control dam, and yet they propose to provide an installation in it for 192,000-kilowatt hours capacity for electricity. If they do that, and if this dam is available and is to be used for hydro, which it is undoubtedly intended for, it cannot be a flood-control dam, because it requires a full dam to creat hydroelectricity, and an empty dam to catch floods. So that the proposition of saying it is a flood-control dam is absurd to begin with. It not only does that but when it is located within 22 miles of the mouth of the Tennessee River and is full of water and for 184 miles up the river it undoubtedly takes up that space that would otherwise be utilized by the flow of floodwaters from the Ohio River into the Tennessee Valley, and we have only 22 miles of space left as against over 201 miles of space, and that, of course, creates a flood situation further down the Ohio River, and particularly at Cairo. If we are going to have that dam, we are going to use those mountain peaks around it up and down that valley for 184 miles as an experiment upon which we are going to spend thousands of dollars year after year in the way of soil-erosion prevention, fertilization, and reforestation.

In other words, the proposition is to destroy good soil and put the Government into the business of trying to rehabilitate bad soil.

In addition to that, this area of over 200 miles in the lower end of the river has been surveyed, examined, and reported upon for a long number of years by the Board of Army Engineers. They have reported that with an expenditure of $10,000,000 as against $112,000,000, which in the end will probably be $150,000,000, we can have a 9-foot stage from the mouth of the Tennessee River to the Pickwick Dam, and that that would be at a cost of only $10,000,000—5 dams at $2,000,000 each or 4 dams at $2,500,000 each. Now, you save that amount of money.

In addition to that, you provide navigation within the channel of the stream, reserving and retaining for future use and for future generations 400,000 acres of fertile soil that now exists in that great valley along that great river.

I think it is fantastic and out of all reason. When I see many of these gentlemen from the South, from Alabama and Tennessee, here in the front seats, I am glad to invite them to the mourner's bench, and I hope that after I am through they will go out and repent for the things they have already done in this connection, and agree with an authority much higher than I that you have already got enough electricity in Tennessee. Why destroy navigation on the lower 200 miles of the river in order to get more electricity?

Now, let us take this situation: In 1933, when the hearings were held before the House Military Affairs Committee, it was proven by a strong preponderance of the testimony, and not denied by anybody, that the private utilities in that field at that time had a surplus of 50 percent over and above the normal requirements of that State and also in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia. Since then what has happened? This Tennessee Valley Authority, under the authority of the amendments of 1935, has gone out recently and bought up the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s facilities throughout the State of Tennessee. They have already completed four dams, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] a few moments ago; Norris, Wheeler, Pickwick, and Wilson, the latter of which was built right after the war, with a kilowatt capacity of 484,000, in addition to that surplus of 50 percent of normal requirements that already existed.

You have seen in the papers this week where they have acquired the entire holdings of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. In that they acquired five dams in addition to the four they have completed and the three that they have under construction, with a kilowatt capacity of 138,000 kilowatts. In that purchase they have acquired three additional steam plants with a kilowatt capacity of 103,000 kilowatts, making a new acquisition in this purchase of 241,000 kilowatts.

Let me observe right here that with all of this surplus hydro and with these five dams they have recently acquired, with those now completed and under construction, they will have more than a million kilowatts capacity for that area. Yet they want to build Gilbertsville Dam for 197,000 kilowatts capacity more. A kilowatt means a horsepower. When they acquire, as they have under this purchase, the Memphis plant with 55,000 kilowatts, they will have acquired an additional 296,000 kilowatts in this entire purchase.

Now, with an unbalanced Budget, with the Congress allowing appropriations probably in excess of $10,000,000,000 at this session, with the President with a red-hot message on the floor of this House now in the hands of Members asking an added $150,000,000 for W. P. A., I take the position that the part of prudence, wisdom, and common sense is that we save that $150,000,000 on the Gilbertsville Dam and these three others that they propose to start when we come to voting on the question of striking this out of the bill and give it to the W. P. A. to be given to the poor of this country instead of giving it to somebody who wants to build up a socialistic regime in the Democratic South, if you will pardon me. I say it is the part of wisdom and statesmanship to call a halt on this program. [Applause.]

Now, I assume that the fact that the applause all came from the Republican side of the House when I made that statement means that if this Gilbertsville Dam is justified it will be in the end charged to the Democratic side of the House. I say here and now when it comes up I intend to vote against it, and I intend to go on record, and if there are enough others in this House to demand it, we will all go on record and let the country know whether we believe in economy or waste and extravagance in the face of a continuing unbalanced Budget and an ever-increasing public debt, now in excess of $40,000,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman cannot blame the Republicans for applauding Democratic mistakes?

Mr. MAY. If the gentleman means to say I am making a mistake by arguing for economy I do not quite reconcile that with his position.

Mr. KNUTSON. I should have used the words "New Deal," because the gentleman from Kentucky is a Jeffersonian Democrat.

Mr. MAY. Let me go back to the subject of this Gilbertsville Lake and Dam. The lake will be 184 miles long. I want to recall that at the last session of the Congress when we defeated this thing twice and when we lost it on the third effort by only seven votes, a distinguished Member of this body, a man who is the most capable and learned man on rivers and harbors in this House, Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, made a speech on this floor.

He used as an illustration and quoted from the War Department engineers' report on the subject, the upper Mississippi improvement, and Lake Pepin which is 23 miles long with an average width of less than 2 miles, and called attention to the fact that on that short lake there were three havens for steamers of the average type which navigated the Mississippi River, and stated that on frequent occasions these steamers had sought these havens of refuge. What are you going to do with navigation on a lake with an average width of 5 miles and a length of 184 miles when the wind rises? There are no havens for even small boats with their average tow of barges. It simply means that when you shall have authorized ultimately the Gilbertsville Dam, and when you shall have appropriated more money for it, that you open the door for a further extension; and then David Lilienthal and his group will build havens every 5 miles on both sides of the lake for the next 100 years.

Let me call attention to another fact: In addition to obligating themselves to pay out $80,000,000 for the Tennessee Electric Power Co.'s facilities in the State of Tennessee, they are authorized under a section of the original act to issue $100,000,000 of 3-percent bonds guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the Federal Government; and we were told in our committee by Arthur Morgan, the Chairman of that Authority, that they were keeping that as a backlog. This means they are going to milk the cow as long as she will give any milk, but when she commences to kick they are going to sit down in Washington and issue $100,000,000 in bonds and tell the Congress to go to Hades.

They are milking the Appropriations Committee of the House now and as long as we will permit it they will continue the milking and spending program and along with it bleed the taxpayers white. It will not be long now until they will shut down the steam plants they bought from Tennessee Electric and throw more coal mines out of work. Going back to Representative JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD, the distinguished chairman of the Flood Control Committee of this House, he said in debate last Congress:

I called attention to the fact that the lake to be formed by this dam would be 184 miles long, 7 miles wide at the widest place, and deep enough to accommodate the largest ocean ship. I took the view that such a large lake would be too hazardous in rough weather for the safe operation of the low, flat, steel barges now operated on the Ohio and Mississippi, which are only a few feet above the water line when loaded. My thought was that this dam would break the chain of continuous navigation between the Tennessee and the Ohio-Mississippi system and require a different type of boat and necessitate the transfer of cargoes. Some have expressed the view that I was mistaken.

In this connection I called attention to Lake Pepin, on the upper Mississippi, where disasters have occurred resulting in the loss of both life and property. On pages 1 and 2 of Document 151, Seventy-second Congress, Lake Pepin is described by General Brown, then Chief of Engineers, as follows:

"Lake Pepin is an enlargement of the Mississippi River, 23 miles in length and from 1 to 2½ miles in width. The depths in the lake range from 25 to 35 feet."

From this description it will be seen that Lake Pepin is quite small as compared with the Gilbertsville Lake, as proposed by the T. V. A. Yet Congress has found it necessary to construct as many as three harbors for refuge on this lake for the protection of traffic.

These harbors of refuge were constructed before the adoption of the 9-foot project on the upper Mississippi, and they are now being reconstructed at considerable cost, to meet the new water level conditions, as well as to be better adjusted to the type of barge now in operation.

I will give a few brief extracts from Document 151 with reference to conditions on Lake Pepin. On page 2, General Brown, Chief of Engineers, said:

"Suitable harbors on the lake in which tows may take refuge in storm are essential."

On pages 3 and 4, General Deakayne said:

"When storms occur or threaten during periods of high water, vessels are obliged to stand by either at the head or foot of Lake Pepin, due to the lack of a safe harbor."

Further, on page 4, General Deakayne said:

"It appears that a harbor of refuge at Lake City is of material advantage to through traffic."

On page 5, Colonel Willing, the district engineer, in reference to Lake Pepin, said:

"A report on the preliminary examination of the locality was submitted November 9, 1927, and included a geographical and physical description, reference to previous reports and the river conditions which make it desirable that a safe harbor of refuge be provided."

On pages 5 and 6, Colonel Willing further said:

"One of the most serious results to through navigation at present is the lack of a safe harbor during high-water periods. It is a contributing factor in causing vessels to stand by at either the head or foot of Lake Pepin during and when storms are developing."

On page 8, Colonel Spalding, the division engineer, said:

"The United States has constructed three harbors of refuge in Lake Pepin, one at Lake City, Minn.; one at Stockholm, Wis.; and one at Pepin, Wis. The two latter harbors are located across the lake from Lake City, 1 mile above and 6 miles below, respectively."

On pages 8 and 9, Colonel Spalding made further references to the unsafe conditions for navigation on Lake Pepin. These conditions, so hazardous to modern barge traffic, are in no sense of the word to be considered as limited to that type of navigation facilities. The waves in rough weather were a source of danger to the comparatively high-decked packet vessels of the "steamboat days." Even in 1882 Congress authorized a harbor of refuge there, to be formed by the construction of a pier 871 feet long. In 1887 one of the greatest river disasters in our history occurred on Lake Pepin when the oceanlike waves overwhelmed the decks of the steamboat Sea Wing, resulting in the destruction of the vessel and the loss of nearly 100 human lives.

Lake Pepin has furnished us a laboratory test. Such a test, as all engineers will agree, has greater weight than the opinion of an expert upon a hypothesis.

The T. V. A. brief gives extracts from the testimony of General Pillsbury and Colonel Watkins, showing the points of vantage of high-dam navigation over low-dam navigation. I take no issue with that testimony. It is true that there are many points in favor of high dams and large lakes. You have fewer stops for locking, you have a less number of locks to operate and maintain, you can to a certain extent avoid meanders in the natural course of the streams.

From these points of view, without taking other matters into consideration, then the larger the lake the better the navigation. From that viewpoint a lake as large as the Gulf of Mexico would afford an almost perfect example. Yet no sane person would attempt to cross such a lake with a six- or eight-barge fleet of coal, such as is in operation on the Ohio.

The T. V. A. brief praises Colonel Watkins, who was a witness at the Chattanooga hearing. It says he is more familiar than is any other person with the Tennessee, and denominates his report as embraced in Document 328, Seventy-first Congress, as the bible of the T. V. A. Yet, in all the years Colonel Watkins was engaged in his work upon the Tennessee, he failed to discover Gilbertsville, or to recommend any dam there, of any type, high or low. His recommendation on pages 100 and 101 of Document 328, after thorough consideration of every phase of the case, is as follows:

"It is recommended that a project for the progressive improvement of the Tennessee River from its mouth to Knoxville by a system of movable or low fixed dams and by locks of Ohio River standards be adopted to be completed within a period of 10 years at an estimated cost of $75,000,000, at the rate of $3,000,000 for the first year and $3,000,000 for each year thereafter until completion, with $40,000 for annual operation, care, and maintenance for each dam and pool; with the proviso that under the provision of the Federal Water Power Act there may be substituted for any two or more of the low dams herein provided for a high dam if the resulting cost to the Federal Government will be less than by the estimate herein for the low dams thus rendered unnecessary, and provided further that the capacity of the waterway for the economical movement of modern barge traffic will not be in any way lessened."

It will be seen that Colonel Watkins recommended the low dams for the Tennessee, with the proviso that a high dam might be substituted for any two or more of the low dams, but on condition that the cost to the Federal Government would be less than by the low dams, and with the further significant proviso "that the capacity of the waterway for the economical movement of modern barge traffic will not be in any way lessened."

It is very evident that Colonel Watkins anticipated that private interests might want to construct high dams for power purposes, and he wanted to safeguard the public interest. Under his recommendation, which was also the recommendation of the Board and of the Chief of Engineers, no locks or dams would be permitted if they were of such character as to interfere with or menace navigation.

The Gilbertsville Dam will provide a navigation channel to Pickwick Landing, a distance of 184 miles. The cost is estimated at $112,000,000. The plan of the Army engineers provided four low dams on this section, estimated to cost $10,865,000. The low dams would provide a safe 9-foot channel 12 months in the year. Gilbertsville Dam might provide a safe channel during fair weather and cost $100,000,000 more. From the standpoint of navigation alone, Gilbertsville Dam cannot be defended.

I have used most of the navigation argument of Chairman MANSFIELD, whose knowledge is wider and whose eloquence is greater than mine. I can add but a few facts.

I present here some pictures of typical river barges, such as ply upon the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Monongahela, and the Missouri River. They can go anywhere the Army engineers have made locks and dams. They cannot travel, except with danger and difficulty, upon the wave-swept lakes of the T. V. A. A glance at their shallow freeboard is enough. No member of this committee would risk his life miles from shore on a storm-swept inland sea on a craft like that. Nor would he venture a cargo of his in such circumstances. Neither will the men who own these boats.

Now let us turn to the question of cost. From the standpoint of average volume of flow the Mississippi River is $10\frac{1}{2}$ times as great as the Tennessee. The Missouri is one and one-half times as large. The Ohio is more than four times as large. These are enormous streams which dwarf the Tennessee. The problem of harnessing them for navigation is obviously much greater and more expensive.

The Army engineers will soon complete a 9-foot channel on the Mississippi from St. Paul to the Gulf of Mexico; on the Missouri from Kansas City to St. Louis; the Illinois waterway from the Mississippi to Chicago; and the entire length of the Ohio River. This 3,500-mile channel job is being completed at the cost of $650,000,000. Yet the Tennessee, 675 miles long, is going to cost more than all this 3,500 miles of these great rivers.

The Army has harnessed to navigation these mighty rivers at a cost of $185,700 per mile.

The Army estimates conservatively that it could create a good 9-foot channel from the mouth of the river to where Pickwick Landing Dam now is—the Gilbertsville stretch—for $10,865,000 with four low, inexpensive dams.

But T. V. A. chooses to do the same job at two and one-half times that cost—$27,039,000.

The Army can still do the job at $59,000 per mile. T. V. A. wants to do it for $147,000 per mile.

The Army job will work; T. V. A.'s proposal will be a positive handicap to navigation.

Gentlemen, in view of these facts I urge you to repeat the position you took last year. Refuse further appropriations for this project. If you do so, you can force T. V. A. to follow the Army recommendations and save the Nation more than $100,000,000 on what would become a thoroughly defenseless proposition. Production of coal is the major industry in my district and employs about 30,000 men in my district alone. It is a labor-employing industry. Hydro is not. To illustrate, Norris Dam cost $38,000,000 and now employs less than 20 men. The same amount of money invested in coal would employ at least 20,000 men. We have set up a National Bituminous Coal Commission to give aid to the sick and distressed bituminous-coal industry, and T. V. A. has become one of its most vicious and dangerous competitors. In the interest of the thousands of coal miners of my district and the hundreds of thousands of others throughout the country I implore you, my colleagues, to stop cutting their throats. [Applause.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time in order to discuss, in more or less detail, the importance of completing the unified program of the Tennessee Valley Authority as contemplated when the act setting up this Authority was passed. I have been living with this subject for almost 20 years and I am tremendously interested in it, not so much on account of the fact that it primarily affects the section from which I come, but in a larger sense, because I look upon it as a great national development which when completed will be perhaps our greatest national asset.

I want to congratulate the committee on bringing out a bill which includes a sufficient sum to start work on the Watts bar dam; however, the bill provides only $220,000 for Coulter Shoals dam, which is only enough to complete the preliminary work up to the point of beginning actual construction. Already approximately $500,000 has been expended on preliminary work at Coulter Shoals, and there is every reason in sound economy for providing in this bill the necessary sum to start construction on this project. With the completion of Watts bar and Coulter, we will have then provided a 9-foot channel for navigation from the Ohio River to Knoxville, Tenn. At the proper time, it is my intention to offer an amendment to the bill to provide $2,000,000 to start the construction of the dam at Coulter Shoals.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that from the standpoint of national defense, the Tennessee Valley development should be rushed to completion as originally contemplated. Unfortunately, it seems to me, practically all of our arsenals, munition, and airplane plants are located in too close proximity to our seaboard, which renders them of easy access to enemy aircraft.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is going to offer an amendment to start another dam down there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No. It is one of the dams that was originally recommended by the engineer division of the War Department under a Republican administration.

Mr. KNUTSON. We understood that the Gilbertsville Dam would be the last dam asked for. What is this, a kind of rubber project?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No. This provides navigation up to Knoxville, Tenn., as originally planned.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many dams have been built down there, and how many are going to be built altogether?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. These dams, Watts bar and Coulter, complete the series of dams.

The location of these plants far inland to reduce the vulnerability of enemy attack is of the utmost importance, it seems to me. The Tennessee Valley affords a perfect setting for headquarters for the manufacture of munitions and airplanes. During the World War the War Department made a survey to determine suitable locations for munition factories, and of the nine sites recommended, eight of them were in the Tennessee Valley and the other one was nearby. The valley, situated in almost the center of eastern United States, would be protected by a veritable ring of Army posts and air bases on three sides, and by the 6,000-foot Appalachian chain of mountains on the east, in the event of national emergency. The vast sources of hydroelectric power within the valley not only makes possible cheap manufacture of munitions, but with large deposits of copper ore, zinc, and iron, both in east Tennessee and Alabama, together with a large aluminum processing plant at Alcoa, would simplify greatly the manufacture of airplanes. Other factors which enter into making the valley a center of munitions manufacture are nitric and sulphuric acids, which are produced in large quantities in the valley from raw materials which are found there in abundance. From them come explosives such as guncotton, picric acid, dynamite, TNT, smokeless powder, and cordite.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Is the Federal Government going to run these plants and factories the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I should certainly think so; of course, it would.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What has become of the plan suggested by the Army engineers originally providing improvement of the Tennessee River for a total of $77,000,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not know what the plans are to which the gentleman has reference, but certainly this development could not have been done for any $77,000,000.

Mr. DONDERO. I refer to the original plan of the Board of Army Engineers for the development of the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Some development might have been had for $77,000,000, but not the development that has been carried on, and is being carried on now.

Mr. DONDERO. It did not include power. This plan is going to cost us nearly $1,000,000,000 before we are through.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Oh, no. The entire system will cost less than half that amount.

From the huge phosphate deposits in the valley would come toxic gases, incendiary shells, flare signals, smoke-screen bases, and tracer bullets. Essential to the full development of all this, however, is the navigation which the two last dams in the series will provide.

COULTER SHOALS DAM

When we passed the Tennessee Valley Authority Act we undertook to extend a permanent 9-foot navigation from the Ohio River to Knoxville, a distance of 646 miles, by means of locks and dams. We have provided for 602 miles of this distance but the Coulter Shoals dam, furnishing the last 44 miles of the navigation, has not been provided for, and I think that you will agree with me that a navigation improvement, like a railroad, to be successful must go somewhere.

If we stop at Watts bar we are carrying our navigation program 602 miles and then leaving it at a point that is no place in particular. We are still 44 miles short of reaching Knoxville, and it is Knoxville which may be expected to furnish the largest part of our traffic.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. This is going to be a power project, is it not?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No; there will be no primary power generated at Coulter Shoals. This is, in the main, a navigation and flood-control project.

Mr. THORKELOSON. But the project and all the industries would be owned by the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It would be owned by the Government, as it should be.

Mr. KNUTSON. It would be susceptible of development for power purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. There would be secondary power, of course.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman have any coal in his district?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes; and one of the reasons I am supporting this measure is because it will relieve the coal situation which has been very distressful.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman thinks the electric power which will be developed will make the coal business prosperous?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No; I do not take that position, but I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that if we open navigation to Knoxville that will afford an outlet for our coal production, that will afford us an unlimited market.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much is the whole project going to cost?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. At Coulter Shoals?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; I mean the whole Tennessee Valley project.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have not taken the time to figure it up.

Mr. KNUTSON. It will be over $500,000,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Oh, I would say it would be much less than that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Those are the figures given me by the experts at my right.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am afraid the gentleman is prejudiced against this project for some reason.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman figures that $500,000,000 at 3-percent interest, that means $15,000,000 a year, not counting the cost of operation, wear, tear, and replacement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I shall not yield any further to the gentleman because I am satisfied anything I may say would not change his attitude.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think it would pay the Government to hire people to carry that coal out in bushel baskets.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I know the gentleman feels that way about it. If he cannot attack the Tennessee Valley Authority with logic, he attempts to do so by ridicule.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, no.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not yield further.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is doing me an injustice.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. If I have done the gentleman an injustice, it was certainly unintentional, and I most humbly apologize.

Although the Tennessee River navigation is now broken into short, disconnected parts, commerce is already trying to use the river. The Gulf Refining Co. has provided terminals and barge transportation for oil from the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers as far up the Tennessee as Guntersville, and they would continue on up to Knoxville if the navigation was completed. As soon as the Guntersville, Chickamauga, and Watts bar dams are finished, these modern barges of the oil company can come within 44 miles of Knoxville, but there they must stop. Why not build the Coulter Shoals dam so the traffic can go on to Knoxville? Already the people of Knoxville are looking forward to the completion of this waterway and are making plans to use it. Frontages have been purchased in Knoxville for warehouses and terminals and more purchases would be made except for the fact that many fear that this Coulter Shoals dam will not be built.

We have authorized the Tennessee Valley Authority to charge a part of the cost of each of the eight Tennessee River dams to navigation. This has now been done, and the Authority has charged many million dollars in this way on the theory that we have a navigation improvement worth this amount of money, but no navigation improvement can have its true commercial value until it provides a deep and permanent channel all the way up to its principal source of freight.

While there are other important points on the Tennessee River, the chief source of prospective freight is Knoxville, and this economical and desirable dam at Coulter Shoals should be built at this time so that when the Watts bar dam is completed and we have provided commercial navigation from the Ohio for a distance of 600 miles up the Tennessee River, we will not discover that we have brought our modern inland water transportation to within 44 miles of the terminal and left it stranded almost within sight of the freight which awaits it at the port of Knoxville. Only by completing our navigation project can we justify the expenditures that we have already made for the improvement of the Tennessee River navigation.

If we stop here, after providing 9-foot navigation for 600 miles, and leave 2-foot navigation for the remainder, it would be like completing a railroad and stopping at 44 miles from the terminal. I think that that illustration is not at all overdrawn, for we can have no navigation on the Tennessee up to Knoxville until Watts bar and Coulter Shoals dams are completed, and we may expect that the bulk of the navigation traffic, perhaps 90 percent, will originate in Knoxville, Tenn. The Chickamauga Dam, which is an important navigation dam, will be absolutely useless so far as navigation is concerned unless the Watts bar and Coulter Shoals dams are constructed, for the backwater from Chickamauga goes nowhere and would leave the head of the 9-foot navigation at no point in particular.

The records of navigation traffic at the Pickwick Landing dam, 200 miles above the mouth of the river, show that the tonnage through the locks has increased every month since the locks were placed in service in February 1938. In the first month 1,000 tons moved through the lock. This amount increased month by month until 21,000 tons passed through the locks in November. Shippers, manufacturers, and barge-line operators are increasing their business and would extend their operation to Knoxville if the 9-foot channel was available. Gasoline, structural steel, pig iron, lumber, sawlogs, and other commodities are being transported by the river. The saving in freight or gasoline alone would amount to about 60 percent, and a proportional saving would be made on other commodities as compared with rail transportation.

The mineral reserves of the Tennessee Valley within from 5 to 15 miles of the navigable waterways of the Tennessee River and tributaries were given by the Army engineers and show that more than 2,000,000,000 tons of useful minerals are available. Of many of these minerals the supply is conceded by the engineers to be inexhaustible. With others the exact extent of the reserve is unknown, but the quantity is known to be enormous. A summary of the important minerals is as follows:

A large part of the coal and iron ore of the basin is so located that provision may be made for direct loading upon the Tennessee River or its tributaries by extension of tracks for the mining cars, or by cable or light railway, and so forth. This applies in particular to the heaviest producing fields adjacent to the upper Tennessee, Clinch, and Powell Rivers, and to the very productive fields of the upper Cumberland adjacent thereto. A large part of the less productive coal area is, however, located in the eastern part of the Cumberland Mountains not so readily accessible to the river.

It is well known that freight can move three times as far by water as by rail at the same cost, and our wisdom in providing for the permanent improvement of our inland waterways is being demonstrated more and more every year. The Mississippi system carried nearly three times the tonnage in 1936 that it did in 1920. The Illinois River traffic multiplied 10 times in 10 years. It has been well said that new transportation creates new business, and it is a well-known fact that of the 39 counties in the United States which make half of the total manufactured products of the Nation, 35 have water transportation. It is significant that these 39 counties have 40 percent of the total buying power of the United States, due, in part, at least, to their transportation advantages.

Navigation traffic on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers has been increasing rapidly in recent years. In 1922 the Army engineers found that the total traffic on the Ohio-Mississippi system was about 17,000,000 tons; in 1936 it had increased to 74,000,000 tons, an increase of 57,000,000 tons in 14 years. In other words, the traffic has increased 100 percent over the 1922 figure every 5 years. The Tennessee River as shown by this map is directly connected to the Ohio-Mississippi system and a similar showing can be expected. In fact, the Army engineers have estimated that within the next 11 years the traffic on the Tennessee River alone will amount to 17,000,000 tons a year, or as much as the entire commerce of the Ohio and Mississippi systems in 1922.

But it is not only the completion of this outstanding navigation project on which we have worked so many years that justifies the immediate construction of Coulter Shoals dam, it is also an important part of the flood-control program. On March 11, 1867, the city of Chattanooga experienced the most destructive flood in her recorded history. Boats were paddled through Market Street, which is the principal business street of the city. The damage was enormous. From time to time there has been a recurrence of high water in Chattanooga and other cities along the Tennessee River. The recent flood in Paducah, for instance, at the mouth of the Tennessee River, is estimated to have caused a loss of $25,000,000. Flood control is therefore an important part of the improvement program of the Tennessee. Several years ago President Hoover detailed Lt. Col. M. C. Tyler, now Brigadier General Tyler, acting Chief Engineer in the War Department, to report to the Muscle Shoals Commission of 1931 regarding various features of the Tennessee River improvement, including flood control. Colonel Tyler pointed out that what is known as the Norris Dam development can reduce floods which originate in the Clinch River only. The Norris Dam, however, has an important effect in reducing flood levels at Chattanooga and further down the river. The area which is drained by the Tennessee River and tributaries above the site of this proposed Coulter Shoals dam is more than three times as great as the drainage area above Norris Dam, for Coulter Shoals is in the main stream and above it are the Holston and French Broad Rivers. So it is not surprising that Colonel Tyler found that the flood-control storage capacity of the Coulter Shoals dam, the Watts bar dam, and the Chickamauga Dam will afford greater flood protection to the city of Chattanooga in the great majority of floods than will the Norris Reservoir.

We have been told that it is impossible for the same dam to be used for flood control and water power at the same time, but if we cannot have them both from Norris Dam—which I deny, for I think it is entirely possible—then here is a remedy, for these three mainstream dams offer greater flood protection to Chattanooga than the Norris Reservoir—but not without Coulter Shoals.

Colonel Tyler did not say that two of these projects would accomplish this purpose, but declared that it would require all three of them; and with these three dams, along with the Norris Dam, the flood control for Chattanooga is absolutely solved.

The value of flood control on the Tennessee was demonstrated in a dramatic way at Cairo, Ill., in March 1936, when the river was kept out by a mud box on top of the protection dykes. The Tennessee River dams which we have built reduced the flood stage almost 6 inches and the water did not overtop the dyke, although the waves were lapping at its very crest. It is impossible to name a figure which will represent the value of reducing the flood crest 6 inches under the desperate conditions that prevailed at Cairo. If the dyke had broken, the city would have been flooded to the second story of the houses and the loss would have been at least $15,000,000, to say nothing of the risk to the lives and health of the people. No public work that I can think of will represent a more sound and justifiable expenditure than these combined navigation flood-control dams on our inland streams. These dams provide a control program that will take as much as 2 feet, and perhaps more, off the crest of the Mississippi floods below Cairo, and he would be bold who would undertake to say what the value of this 2-foot margin of safety may be in the future along the lower Mississippi River. It has been estimated by the T. V. A. at $380,000,000, and I think that the estimate is probably conservative.

There is a particular reason why the construction of this Coulter Shoals dam should be definitely provided for at this time. We have already spent a great deal of money in preliminary work. Approximately $500,000 has been expended in geological and other investigations in connection with Coulter Shoals, and the Tennessee Valley Authority reports that its consulting geologists find that there are no difficulties at this site which cannot be overcome. The Authority has prepared a schedule of construction operations presented in the form of a diagram which shows that about the middle of this coming year—1940—we may expect the completion of the Guntersville Dam, the Chickamauga Dam, and the Fowler Bend dam on the Hiwassee River. That means the construction forces and equipment from three dams will be released. If an appropriation for Coulter Shoals is made at this time, this organized, trained force can move right up to Watts bar and Coulter Shoals. But if only the Watts bar is provided for there will be equipment from three dams available and only one new project provided for, with the result that we will have more unemployment in the Tennessee Valley and valuable construction equipment will stand idle.

Coulter Shoals and Watts bar should be built together, just as the Guntersville and Chickamauga Dams are being built together; with the large overhead of the Tennessee Valley Authority one does not need to be an accountant to realize that the construction work should be pushed as rapidly as possible. The last annual report of the T. V. A. includes a list of 4,412 employees of the T. V. A. whose salaries are $1,500 a year or more. Probably the overhead of the Tennessee Valley Authority will exceed a million dollars a month. Surely the construction of dams should continue as rapidly as possible, for such a pay roll can be justified only by continuing large-scale operations and completing this construction work as rapidly as possible with this trained organization which the T. V. A. has built up at great expense.

No part of the general program of the administration for the betterment of our country has received greater public approval than the establishment of the Tennessee Valley Authority, but to enable the Authority to finish its construction program for the completion of navigation improvement and the flood control of the Tennessee River at reasonable cost, we should make this appropriation and start the final dam of the series at this time so that the benefits of the completed project may be made available not only to the Tennessee Valley, but to the millions of people who live along the lower Mississippi River, without further delay.

I have not mentioned the subject of electric power for this dam is not primarily a power dam; however, since the purchase of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. by the T. V. A. the controversy as to power has been eliminated. It will have its place, of course, in the power program and the water power will not be allowed to run to waste, but "no chain is stronger than its weakest link," and the navigation program of the Tennessee River without Coulter Shoals Dam would be a reflection upon the foresight of this House in its plans for the improvement of our inland waterways. Whether we consider navigation, flood control, power development, or the economical expenditure of funds by the Tennessee Valley Authority, we are bound to conclude that it would be a mistake to postpone the appropriation of the small amount of money necessary to start the construction of this dam and finish the job while it can be done with a minimum of cost.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the completion of this navigation project as recommended by the engineers of the War Department is a part of manifest destiny, and whether we do it now or later, it will ultimately come. I have explained heretofore in my remarks that it can be accomplished much more economically now than if postponed to some later date.

When the Muscle Shoals bill was passed in 1928 I went to the White House and pleaded with Mr. Coolidge to approve it. I explained to him that this development was inevitable, but for reasons satisfactory to himself he declined to do so. When the bill was passed again in 1931 I importuned President Hoover to give it his sanction, but he declined to do so. I reminded President Hoover, as I had reminded President Coolidge, that the development was manifest destiny, and therefore inevitable, but my appeal was of no avail.

Speaking to my Republican colleagues, I want to say that the action of our leaders on the Tennessee Valley development has seriously jeopardized our party in this area. I represent a district that has not sent a Democrat to Congress since the Civil War, yet in the election of 1936 Mr. Roosevelt carried my district by 8,000 majority, and this was due largely, in my opinion, to the attitude of our leaders on Tennessee Valley development.

I want to again remind my Republican colleagues that the completion of the Tennessee River development, as outlined by the engineers of the War Department under a Republican administration, is inevitable, and I trust they will join me in the completion of this program. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, what little I have to say this afternoon is in connection with the National Labor Relations Board. I am not unmindful of the fact that it is probably the most maligned governmental institution that has been set up since President Roosevelt became President of the United States; but I recall a similar situation when the Federal Trade Commission was set up during the Wilson administration. It was likewise misrepresented and it was likewise maligned. The claim was made it would not be of any benefit to the people of the country. Mr. Chairman, it has proven to be one of the greatest agencies for breaking up combinations, such as trusts, in restraint of trade that the Government of the United States ever brought into being.

Mr. Chairman, the National Labor Relations Board was created for the purpose of preventing strikes, contentions, and strife of all kinds as between employer and employee, making the public the "goat." If you will pardon my referring to myself personally, may I say that during the war I worked as special counsel for the Federal Trade Commission in Washington. I found in many instances that subordinates in the employ of the Federal Trade Commission, either accidentally, or officiously brought about a feeling of antagonism against the Commission among the industrialists who were trying to live within the law and trying to obey the law. I imagine if the truth were known, much of the criticism directed against the present Labor Board is due to such tactics on the part of subordinates working for the Board. So in approaching the subject we want to bear in mind the fact there are many people in its employ, assuming in many instances authority they do not have, authority they do not possess, and authority which the Congress has not given them or that the Labor Board has not given them.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to specific things to show that this Board has done a lot of good work and has prevented in many instances strikes throughout the country that would have been devastating, not only to the employee but to the employer and likewise the American public. The critics of the National Labor Relations Board have repeatedly assailed that Board as unfair to the employer and partial to labor. They point to the comparatively few decisions in which the Board finds in favor of the employer. While that statement is true the inference is partially misleading.

It overlooks the fact that each case decided by the Board has passed through an intense elimination and sifting process before it is passed upon by the Board. The truth of the matter is easily uncovered by reference to the record and procedure of the Board. I believe if you will study this law and compare it with the Federal Trade Commission Act, you will find them both working in the same fashion and along the same line of procedure.

Since its inception the Board has disposed of 15,082 cases. Let us follow through and see how the Board pans and sifts its findings and orders in these cases. A union files with the regional director of one of the Board's 22 regional offices a charge on behalf of employees of a certain plant. The charge is kept secret during its investigation in order to protect whom? To protect the employer from embarrassment by the mere accusation, the same procedure adopted by the Federal Trade Commission.

Every source of information is tapped by the director or his representatives in an effort to get all the facts which prompted the charge. If at any time during his investigation the director finds that the charge has no merit, he is empowered to dismiss it. The director is empowered to do that, or he may persuade the union to withdraw its charge. That this is not a mere gesture is evidenced by the fact that, of the 15,082 cases handled, about 6,300 have been withdrawn or dismissed in this manner, just the same as what happens when the Federal Trade Commission is investigating.

If the investigation, in the course of which the employer and employee representatives are questioned, reveals a substantial basis for the charge, the director endeavors to persuade the employer to comply with the provisions of the act. In other words, he holds out the olive branch of peace. Failing this, the employer is sent a formal complaint, the same as in the case of the Federal Trade Commission, together with notice of hearing.

It is here that formal action is first taken by the Board. Until that stage is reached the Board has nothing to do with the case. However, in the majority of cases the employer and his employees come to an agreement before commencement of the hearing. Of its 15,082 cases, the Board has disposed of 7,931 by agreement of both parties, which is done by the Federal Trade Commission in the same fashion. These cases rarely make the news and never make the headlines. As the fellow says, they simply make peace. Of the 15,082 closed cases, only 853 went to formal proceedings. They represent the instances where investigation has revealed a strong probability of wrongdoing and where the employer refused to comply with the law. They give a chance to a person or corporation to mend his ways, just the same as the Federal Trade Commission gives a chance to a person or corporation who violates the Clayton amendment to the Sherman Antitrust Act to mend his ways. The Board holds a hearing, which is open to the public, presided over by a trial examiner sent from Washington.

Mr. THORKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am extremely sorry I cannot yield to my colleague, due to lack of time.

All parties are given full opportunity to present witnesses, to examine, and to cross-examine. At the conclusion of the hearing the trial examiner makes a report to the Board which is served upon both parties. This procedure is identical with that of the Federal Trade Commission.

If the examiner finds the employer guilty of a violation of the act, he will recommend what action the employer should take to remedy the situation. He actually talks to the employer. If the employer complies with these recommendations, the case comes to an end. If the employer takes exception to this report, the case finally comes before the Board itself for decision. If the Board finds against the employer, it issues an order requiring him to observe certain conditions in harmony with the declared public policy. The only order this Board can issue is the identical order the Federal Trade Commission issues, namely, to cease and desist from that practice.

Inevitably, after such a meticulous sifting process and when advantage is not taken of repeated full opportunity to conform to the law of the land, the decisions of the Board will reflect the evidence investigated by the regional director, confirmed by testimony in a full and fair hearing, and formally found by the trial examiner. Now, Members of Congress, the significant thing about this whole set-up is the fact that out of 15,082 cases the Board has issued cease and desist orders in only 6 percent of them, showing that the ultimate object of this Board is peace between employer and employee, with no injury to the public.

On June 30, 1937, the number of cases pending was 2,202. The number of cases received between July 1, 1937, and June 30, 1938, was 10,430. This makes a total of 12,632. Of this number, 4,428 were closed by settlement, 1,368 were dismissed, 2,124 were withdrawn, and 122 were transferred to other agencies, making a total of 8,042 cases closed in the last fiscal year before formal action.

The total number of cases closed after formal action was 809, or a grand total of 8,851 cases closed during the last fiscal year. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, the National Labor Relations Board has been criticized, and a great deal of the criticism has not been constructive. I do not hesitate to say this Board has benefited not only the employees but also the employers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hope the National Labor Relations Board will receive the funds necessary to continue the good work it has carried on since its inception.

I have introduced the following bill:

A bill to provide $30,000,000,000, which shall be expended within a period of 5 years to furnish employment and to end poverty in the United States and its possessions

Whereas there are many millions of persons unemployed in the United States and many of those who are unemployed are young men and women, and, because of this unemployment situation, men and women have been compelled to go into bread lines and do many other things which are humiliating to them; and

Whereas there is an abundance of the necessities of life and yet many of our citizens are compelled to go hungry; and

Whereas this human misery has been brought about because our people have been unable to find employment; and

Whereas if we became engaged in war we would spend billions of dollars in the destruction of humanity and property; and

Whereas if we spend billions of dollars for construction purposes we would be promoting the welfare of mankind: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That $30,000,000,000 shall be expended by the Federal Government within a period of 5 years to provide employment and to end poverty in the United States.

Sec. 2. The money shall be expended for the prevention of floods, forest fires, dust storms, and soil erosion; purification of rivers and streams; slum clearance; construction of homes that can be sold or rented at reasonable cost, schools, hospitals, parks, roads, bridges, reservoirs, canals, tunnels, subways, and disposal plants; elimination of dangerous grade crossings; rural electrification; the purchase of railroads and other utilities which shall be owned by the Government; development of our natural resources; and for medical, surgical, dental, biological, geological, and every other art and science and for every other purpose which will solve the unemployment problem and promote the welfare of the people of our country.

Sec. 3. No person employed by the Federal Government under the provisions of this act shall be compelled to work more than 5 days per week nor more than 6 hours in any one day and the wage paid shall be no less than 75 cents per hour, and all persons employed shall receive 1 month vacation every year with pay.

Sec. 4. Union organizations must be recognized under this act.

Sec. 5. The President of the United States shall be authorized to appoint a committee of at least five members or as many as he believes is necessary, to devise ways and means to secure the money to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the committee to obtain the said money from such sources which will work the least hardship on the taxpayers of our country.

Sec. 6. This act shall become effective within 90 days after its passage.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESSANDRO].

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Chairman, my attention was called to a pamphlet which is being circularized to the veterans throughout the State of Maryland relating to an appropriation for a veterans' hospital for Baltimore, Md. I want to take this opportunity to make my position clear.

On Tuesday, January 24, 1939, a meeting was called by United States Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, and every member of the Maryland delegation was present and pledged himself to support this appropriation. I feel the same now as I did when I signed this statement. I am heartily in accord with this appropriation and shall continue to support it and work for its passage.

I was unable to be present at a meeting of the Maryland delegation called by Senator TYDINGS at his office on Monday, January 30, due to illness. However, at the proper time I wish to extend my remarks and place in the RECORD a statement presented at the hearing before the Committee on Appropriations on January 24, 1939, signed by the Maryland delegation; also a copy of a resolution adopted by the City Council of Baltimore, with which I am heartily in accord. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the documents to which I refer are as follows:

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1939.

STATEMENT OF HON. MILLARD E. TYDINGS, A UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF MARYLAND; HON. GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE, A UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF MARYLAND; AND HON. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, HON. WILLIAM P. COLE, JR., HON. AMBROSE J. KENNEDY, HON. THOMAS D'ALESSANDRO, JR., AND HON. WILLIAM D. BYRON, REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF MARYLAND

Mr. WOODRUM. There has been presented to me a statement, signed by the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland, urging the construction of a veterans' hospital at Baltimore, Md. The statement will be inserted in the record.

The statement referred to is as follows:

"The undersigned United States Senators and Representatives, comprising the entire delegation from the State of Maryland, request the support of your committee in providing the necessary funds for the erection at an early date of a veterans' hospital in or near Baltimore, Md.

"The Federal Board of Hospitalization, following extensive study and hearings, approved the construction of a 300-bed Veterans' Administration facility. The immediate and increasing need for such an accommodation to our veterans and the early date of hearings before your committee has suggested the wisdom of our appearance here in advance of a recommendation from the Acting Director of the Budget, where the request for funds is now pending.

"On March 24, 1932, shortly after the passage of the act of 1931, authorizing $20,877,000 to be appropriated for hospital construction, the Maryland delegation in Congress made its first appearance before the Federal Board of Hospitalization. We were supported at that time by testimony from many of the leading citizens of Maryland, especially representatives of our service organizations. Gen. Frank T. Hines, chairman, and his associates of the Federal Board of Hospitalization, found it impossible to include Maryland in the allocation of the 1931 appropriation.

"We accepted this decision without complaint, because we have at all times been impressed with the fairness displayed by General Hines and his associates. When it became apparent additional funds would be available for veterans' hospital construction through national emergency appropriations, we renewed our efforts to bring about a finding favorable to the erection of a new hospital in or near Baltimore. This effort took form in the introduction by Senator TYDINGS and Congressman COLE as companion legislation to authorize the erection of a veterans' hospital in or near Baltimore.

"Pending consideration of these measures, a further hearing before the Federal Board of Hospitalization was held on June 10, 1938. At this hearing Senator TYDINGS presented the delegation from Maryland, headed by the Governor of the State, the mayor of Baltimore, leading representatives of our service, and civic organizations, and the congressional delegation, in all about 250. The necessity for and the advisability of a new hospital in or near Baltimore was again gone into most fully.

"We are happy to be able to report that following the hearings on June 10, 1938, the Federal Board of Hospitalization recommended the construction of a Veterans' Administration facility of 300 beds in the vicinity of Baltimore.

"During the summer of 1938, the Acting Director of the Budget was requested to allot funds through P. W. A. for this and other hospital construction work throughout the country. The request for Maryland along with but one other was returned to the Veterans' Administration because additional P. W. A. funds were not available.

"We are most reliably informed that a renewal of the request of the Acting Director of the Budget has been made for additional funds to carry through to completion the decision favorable to relieving the situation now facing the veterans of Maryland. We are advised that such funds might, if not all, then in part, be available through savings on the projects now under contract and approved by the President and the Budget.

"With the knowledge that this much-needed new veterans' hospital in or near Baltimore has received the approval, as to the necessity for it, of the Federal Board of Hospitalization, which Board we are sure enjoys the highest respect and esteem at your hands, we earnestly request, if such is compatible with the practice you pursue in drafting appropriation bills, to make available at this time the funds necessary for the construction of a veterans' facility in or near Baltimore, in accordance to the findings referred to above.

"We are cognizant of the fact that at this date the application for the necessary funds amounting to approximately $1,300,000, so we are advised, is without the approval of the President or the Acting Director of the Budget. The undersigned have been in touch with the Acting Director of the Budget and also anticipate an early conference with the President. In view of the favorable consideration we anticipate and the admitted merit the claim for a new hospital in or near Baltimore possessed, we earnestly appeal for such favorable consideration by your committee as you can give at this time.

"We have deliberately refrained from incorporating in this statement statistics pertaining to the military population of Maryland, the necessity for additional beds and other conditions, because of the previous finding by the Federal Board of Hospitalization, to which we respectfully refer your committee if a basis for the findings of the Board favorable to the location of the new hospital in or near Baltimore is desired."

Resolution requesting the United States Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to construct a United States Veterans' Bureau general medical and surgical hospital in the city of Baltimore or elsewhere in the State of Maryland

Whereas the Congress of the United States has appropriated a fund for the construction of Veterans' Bureau hospitals in the various parts of the United States; and

Whereas the location of these hospitals has been left to the discretion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; and

Whereas there is no Veterans' Bureau general medical and surgical hospital located within the boundaries of the State of Maryland; and

Whereas there are at the present time 502 veterans in Maryland who have made application for treatment in general hospitals and who cannot be cared for because there are no beds available; and

Whereas the United States Administrator of Veterans' Affairs has recommended to the President of the United States that there be constructed a United States Veterans' Bureau general medical and surgical hospital in the city of Baltimore or elsewhere in the State of Maryland; Therefore be it

Resolved by the City Council of Baltimore, That the city of Baltimore does hereby petition the President of the United States to approve the recommendation of the United States Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to cause to be constructed a Veterans' Bureau general medical and surgical hospital of not less than 300- to 500-bed capacity in the city of Baltimore or elsewhere in the State of Maryland; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the council is hereby requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the United States Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and to the Maryland representatives of both Houses of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 45 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first regular appropriation bill in the Seventy-sixth Congress. This bill carries appropriations for some 40 different independent agencies of the Government.

No man can sit on the Committee on Appropriations and listen to the amazing and perplexing testimony from agencies that are expending annually in excess of $1,500,000,000 of the people's money without appreciating a statement a bishop in New York once made about the institutional church. He said it had got so big and so bewildering that God got lost in the machinery. I never sit in a group of hearings in the Appropriations Committee but that somehow or other I feel that I sometimes get lost in the machinery, like a great many other people lost in the labyrinthine functions of this great institution we call the United States Government.

Let me first pay a little testimony to the chairman of the subcommittee, the Honorable CLIFTON WOODRUM, of Virginia. In my considered judgment, the gentleman from Virginia is one of the ablest Members of this House. Along with that, he has demonstrated fairness to the minority at every stage of the proceeding, so we cherish for him a real respect, admiration, and devotion. There are lots of times in the course of a hearing when we undertake to get from witnesses information that may appear prejudicial, or may appear to some, perhaps, as having a partisan and political tinge. Of course, it becomes necessary for the chairman to rule and to indicate whether witnesses ought to proceed under such a line of questioning. Almost invariably, however, the chairman in the interest of fairness has ruled on our side, and we of the minority pay our little tribute to him for that sense of fairness which has been one of the great attributes of the Appropriations Committee.

It is a liberal education to sit in the hearings on this particular bill involving some 40 agencies. The bill includes, among other things, an appropriation for repairing the roof on the largest museum in the world, where the collections are inventoried at $130,000,000 and where 2,500,000 people come every year to see everything from the skeleton of a dinosaur to the Lindbergh plane that flew the Atlantic some years ago. It contains appropriations for cleaning out the alley slums in Washington, D. C. It contains appropriations to recapture oil lands that were alienated from the Government a great many years ago and on which we have spent sundry thousands of dollars in the hope they can be recaptured in the interest of naval oil reserves. It includes appropriations and authorizations for the acquisition of land in the Nation's Capital so that it might be properly expanded without too great expense upon the taxpayers. It includes that great inland empire that has been discussed here today, known as the Tennessee Valley Authority, which, today, owns 500,000 acres of land, and if they acquire much more and put much more concrete and water down in the State of Tennessee there probably will not be any place for the people to live and some of our good Members will have to take their constituencies elsewhere.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would rather not. I am coming to that matter later.

Mr. MAY. I want to refer to the flood that happened night before last.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It includes the Veterans' Administration. It includes what will ultimately be one of the most important adjuncts of this country, the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics, which is more or less in the infant stage in this country as compared with Italy and Germany.

It includes pensions for railroad men and funds to bring electric power to homes and firesides in obscure and unserved villages and hamlets; it includes funds to adjudicate the labor troubles of sailors on the high seas; it includes funds to make maps in Alabama and to experiment with freezing strawberries in Tennessee; it includes funds to complete the controversial monument to Thomas Jefferson even though the sacred cherry trees may have to suffer; it includes funds for the establishment of air navigation facilities in Alaska and for completing the sculpturing of a marble mountainside in South Dakota where 10,000 years hence posterity may look upon the handiwork of this generation and wondering what strange people occupied this section of the earth in 1939; it includes funds to pay injuries to C. C. C. workers and to mediate railroad disputes.

So when you sit in the hearings on this bill, you get a liberal education for weeks and weeks as you examine department heads and find out what makes the wheels of Government move. Then, of course, all of the information, both on the record and off, consisting of more than 2,100 pages, is finally compressed into a report from which you are expected to glean the substance of this bill. As I first examined that report I felt it was one of the finest that has ever been drawn up by any subcommittee or any clerk, and I am going to pay a little tribute to the clerk of this committee, Mr. Arthur Orr. He is faithful, he is diligent, he is able, and this report is somewhat of a monument to his diligence and capacity. I am sure the rest of the members of the subcommittee join me in my respect for him and for the ability with which he is serving the Congress and, particularly, the Appropriations Committee.

Now, when you consider this bill you reach some rather general conclusions. Some of them I have stated over a period of years, and I am going to restate them because I believe they will bear emphasis.

The first one is this. There is something just a little bit farcical at times about the way we are constrained to get information out of the Government departments. Here comes the Social Security Board, with thousands of people on the pay roll, administering old-age insurance, unemployment compensation, old-age assistance, the welfare of mothers and crippled children and dependent children, and when they range themselves on the opposite side of the committee for cross-examination the very best we can do is, by a species of examination, secure from them a skeleton factual picture of what is going on in that Board. We have to do the same thing with the Rural Electrification Administration, that had $40,000,000 and, in addition, $100,000,000 of advances from the R. F. C. They can put it all on paper. You can set down a very beautiful balance sheet, but it does not indicate to the people's representatives precisely what is going on in the Government, and it would not be too much to ask that at least a million dollars be set aside so that the legislative branch of the Government could hire experts at salaries that experts will command, and without any niggardliness on our part, so they can dip into the processes of government and find out whether these appropriations that are made from year to year are efficiently administered and efficiently expended. There is no other way in which to do it. The legislative structure of government is weak in this respect, and the time will come, if we ever expect to secure a maximum of efficiency in expenditure, which must manifestly be the forerunner of economy, then we must have some other legislative adjunct to this House, so that we can send them into the departments, let them make an investigation—not for a week, not for a month or 2 or 3 months—but to be investigating all the time, and then report to the Congress, and particularly to the Appropriations Committee.

This is one of the things I see. The other basic conclusion is this: Sooner or later there must be some consolidation.

We have, for instance, administering the various electric functions of the Government, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Electric Home and Farm Authority. We have the Bonneville Dam, we have this great instrumentality known as the Grand Coulee, we have the Fort Peck power project, we have the Federal Power Commission, and I assume that there are other instrumentalities of government that are engaged in the same kind of administration of power facilities for the people of this country. Why can there not be a consolidation? I see no reason why not. It would be in the interest of eliminating duplication in the Government, and certainly it would save money for the taxpayers.

The same thing is true in the field of housing. This bill contains appropriations for the Federal Housing Authority. In the Department of the Interior there is the United States Housing Authority. In the Department of Agriculture there is the Resettlement Administration and also what is left of the subsistence homes project, like Greenbelt, in Maryland, or the one in Pennsylvania, or Arthurdale, or Reedsville in West Virginia—all dealing with housing or some aspect of housing; and I fancy we could do a great job for the taxpayers of this country if a committee, perhaps the Appropriations Committee, might set itself diligently to the task for a while in the hope that all of these functions that are purveyed to the people in one form or another can be harmonized and put in their proper sphere, in the interest of savings for the taxpayers. Those are things that somehow press themselves on your attention and emphasize themselves year after year, and we are not going to function as efficiently as we should until some of those consolidations are effected.

There are some things in this bill that require special emphasis. I am going to group the first of them and hang a few ideas upon the talk that has been appearing in the contemporary press about the danger of taking this country into war. In this bill, first of all, is an appropriation of $140,000 for the American Battle Monuments Commission. It never receives any discussion, because it is efficiently administered. They do not spend too much for travel or for personal services, and it is one of those things we gloss over, but I want you to go back into the hearings and read the very brief report of the American Battle Monuments Commission, because it administers 12 war memorials, 8 war cemeteries in Europe, 6 of them in France, 1 in Belgium, and 1 in England. There are something over 30,000 of our boys sleeping over there today, and this is not too much money for them. But what I want to bring to your attention this afternoon very briefly as this hysteria of war mongering sweeps across the country is the fact that there are a little over 30,000 over there who are casualties of the last war. They are comrades of mine, because I spent 17 months over there fighting along with them, and when you think of those sacrifices it makes dim and dull the jingoistic spirit and desire of anybody to ever rush this country into war. [Applause.] There is an item in this bill—a related item, for Veterans' Administration—that was delineated at considerable length by the chairman of the subcommittee.

We are spending $420,000,000 in the form of pensions for those who fought the battles of the Nation, and if you go back and break down the tables that come from the Veterans' Administration, you will find there are 393,135 World War veterans that are receiving compensation from their Government today; and in addition thereto there are 110,940 dependents of veterans receiving compensation, so that the total for the World War, which was just 21 years ago, is 504,075. Think of it. Over a half million of our veterans and their dependents who are on the pension rolls today because the disintegrating seed of war has been implanted in them. They are what I refer to as the great legion of despair, for whom no armistice will ever be signed. Oh, I tell you that takes some of that spirit out of you when they talk about projecting this country into war and probably fixing our frontier a good many miles from where it is at the present time. There is the record. But there is an even more ghastly record in these prosaic figures that come from the Veterans' Administration. These tables are in the hearings. Get yourselves a copy and take it home with you this summer. The Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion will be expecting you to make speeches at these district meetings and at these picnics. There is material for the speeches. There is one which is agonizing and ghastly, which I regard as the most tragic of all. It is the N. P. cases. What a multitude of agony is covered by these two letters of the alphabet. Column 1, fiscal year 1930, N. P. cases. They are neuropsychiatrics. They are the boys for whom there will never be an armistice. They are the boys in whom that little slender cord that binds the present to the past and the present to the future has been snapped away. It has been fractured and ruined by shell shock, by the detonation of 240-millimeter shells, and by all the living agony of war. How many have we got today?

Here they are: There are some 17,235. Yes. They are in the asylums. They are in the institutions of the country, and they look out rather vacuously as one talks to them, because there will be no end to the war for them. That is not the whole story, gentlemen. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs testified before the committee that it will be 1965 before we reach the peak of those whose minds will slither away as a result of the war that was fought 21 years ago. From 1918 to 1965! How long is it? Forty-seven years. Then we reach a load of 27,000 mental cases. Let all those who would like to put this country into war read these figures. They will get some better ideas of war and war's aftermath, and will not be so free with the English language as they rush into the newspapers seeking perhaps to create war psychosis and war hysteria in this country that will sooner or later develop into another shambles and carnage. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I could not refrain from talking on these items today. I felt it was necessary. I like to do my little bit for the country. As a member of several patriotic organizations, I go in for adequate national defense; but I am not going to lose sight of the ball. I want to keep my eyes glued upon the objective, which is the objective of peace with all nations, so that we do not have to go through the brutal experience that the country has been going through since 1929 or 1930. Oh, it is easy to talk about Herbert Hoover and the market crash of 1929 as the cause of the depression which still besets us for the tenth year. Everybody knows that he had not anything to do with it.

It was simply the ultimate effect of economic forces that were set in motion by the World War. You cannot kill off 12,000,000 young men like me, who are producers and consumers; you cannot dip down into the social and economic fabric of the world and throw them over on the junk pile without there being a great consequent inrush of forces that, for want of anything else, we dub by the term "depression." Yes, there is a law of retribution and a law of compensation, and when it breaks, oh, we set about in our feeble way to set up economic contrivances to head it off. But what we live through today is the result of man's own lack of vision, his short-sightedness, that cost so many millions of lives, including the lives of many from our own country. So when you read these hearings, gentlemen, when you read about the Veterans' Administration, about the American Battle Monuments Commission, about the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics that is experimenting in the field of aerodynamics, think in terms of what may happen to those who make up this country if we are ever dragged into another struggle.

So with that much I am going to leave that item.

Now, I want to go to something else, a very prosaic item, the Central Statistical Board. It is not very important in itself, I suppose, because it carries only $126,000, and the life of that Board expires this year. But you know as you sit there plying questions to those who come before the committee you find out how many returns, how many forms, how many questionnaires and reports must be filed by the citizenry of this country. We have appreciated this trouble before, so the Central Statistical Board was set up to coordinate the activities of governmental agencies in the field of statistics and reduce the number. It has functioned nearly 5 years.

They have gotten out a report in response to the request of the President of the United States. This report came out on the 10th day of January 1939. It is not very old. But if you will go through it, this is what you will find: Under administrative returns—and by "returns" I mean the return that has to be filed by the retail store with the Department of Commerce, the income-tax blank, the return that has to be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the railroads and many others—under "administrative returns" there were 97,500,000 filed last year. Think of it! Ninety-seven and one-half million returns, and the number of questions in those returns averaged 60. My conscience! We are making a nation of bookkeepers out of our people and keeping them so busy answering questions from Government institutions and agencies that a lot of them scarcely have time to make a living.

Here is the Internal Revenue Bureau, 16,800,000 returns. United States Employment Service, 11,500,000. Over 30,000,000 in Social Security. Over ten and one-half million of regulatory returns; 17,000,000 farm returns. Can you not imagine a farmer out in that Illinois Corn Belt watching the mail carrier come along, scratching his head and saying, "Well, here comes another one of those infernal questionnaires, I suppose, from the Department of Agriculture or some other Federal agency, who wants to know how many bees we have on the place, how many goats, and how many chickens." The farmers are filing an average of three returns a year. There are over 21,000,000 farms that will file them. These are compiled by the Central Statistical Board.

Railroads! Have you any idea that the railroads have to file on the average of 1,000 returns annually with the Federal Government in all forms and branches? Large industries have to file at least 250 every year, and the small retailer has to file at least 10 which average 50 questions to the return. Well, I thought that the Central Statistical Board was going to stop some of that tomfoolery and nonsense, but instead I think it is going to get worse; and while I am going to make no move to strike that item out of this bill, I am not going to shed any tears if somebody else does, because I do not think that this Board is the answer. Tons and tons and tons of literature infiltrate into the Government every year in the form of questions and questionnaires and returns. It is a tremendous thing.

A businessman told me no later than this morning that he received a questionnaire that will take his firm at least 3 months to complete and it is likely to cost $15,000 to provide the answers for it. You cannot laugh this sort of thing off. It has become a tremendous and onerous burden on business and industry. Congress will have to make a determined effort to see that this burden is diminished somewhat. There is no other answer for it, and the sooner we start the better. Now, do not forget, we have this responsibility. Some 38,000,000 of these returns come in because in the laws that went across this floor we wrote provisions requiring that returns be made, and in all other respects these returns are incidental to the functions with which we have invested so many governmental agencies today. Take heed, then, when other legislation comes into this Chamber, as to whether or not we can do a little something to lift this tremendous statistical burden off the back of American business and American industry. Statistics are necessary, but we have so much duplication and unnecessary falderol today that it just adds to the Nation's bewilderment; and do not forget that the more statistics we require the more jobs and the greater the expense.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to talk a little about the T. V. A., because it has been discussed here rather freely this afternoon. I never think of T. V. A. but what I think of Aaron Burr and his old side-kick, Blennerhassett. You remember away back—John, was it not 1804? I think it was.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman referring to Aaron Burr now or Samuel Insull? I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. You know, my old friend from Mississippi will always drag a red, white, and blue herring across the trail. It was down in his country that Aaron Burr and Blennerhassett sought to set up an inland empire, oh, I expect 130 or 140 years ago. They were going to include all that southwestern country and even include Mexico; but it was a rather abortive and fruitless attempt, and did not get very far. They sought by force of arms to set up an inland empire. Congress, however, has gone them one better. We set one up by legislation in 1933, and we called it the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not now. I am afraid of those red, white, and blue herrings the gentleman has up his sleeve.

It is an empire; make no mistake about it. It owns 500,000 acres of land. It has a 10-dam construction program on down there, and there are going to be more dams; make no mistake about that, either. There was some speculation a little while ago as to whether that was contemplated in the original program. It does not make any difference whether it was or not; their authority is sufficiently broad if other dams are necessary; they can build them on the Holston River, on the Little Tennessee, on the Clinch, on the French Broad River. These rivers, according to Mr. Parker, the chief engineer, tail out away up in the hills of Tennessee so small that you can step across them, but they are thinking some of making those places navigable. Well, I sometimes think it would be better to pave them and make highways out of them, because I expect there will be but very little navigation up there.

It has become a colossal program, however, not only from the standpoint of power but from the standpoint of expenditure. It is going to involve at least $494,000,000 according to their own testimony, but in our considered judgment it will run over $500,000,000. Remember also they own 500,000 acres of land, and this is going to be important also from what they call their related activities; and these, Mr. Chairman, are very interesting. I know of nothing in which the Tennessee Valley Authority is not interested at the present time, and that includes fertilizer. I think you have heard a good deal about it.

I have heard a great deal about the broad authority for producing fertilizer down there, but I rather fancy if you go back to the original act of 1933 you will find that the original purpose was to produce nitrogen by a fixation process—and it is so stated in the act. To be sure, they had extra authority, and I do not quarrel about that; but I am directing your attention to the fact that they are getting just a little bit wide of the mark down there; and when they talk about their phosphate fertilizer program and their acquisition of land at $2,000 per acre, I scratch my head a little bit and commence to wonder whether all this was within the purview of the original act. You will find in the hearings that last year their manufacturing expense on large-scale production of fertilizer was $1,875,000. Just bear that in mind. Let us say in round figures that the amount was $1,800,000 for large-scale fertilizer operations. They sold this fertilizer in various places. How much did they get for it? They testified before the committee that they got prices in line with the commercial price that obtained at that time.

How much did they get? They got $1,250,000 and it cost $1,800,000 to make it up. They got $1,250,000.

I am disposed to question that kind of a function on the part of this Government because it goes far beyond the range of experimentation.

There is an item in here for $450,000 for small-scale production and small-scale research. That is a fair amount of money. Out in my country, I remember my mother used to give me a penny on Sunday and said, "My son, do not spend it all in one place." It gave me some regard for a dollar and I tell you $450,000 is a lot of money. So I am disposed to look into that a little bit. When I related before that the T. V. A. has spent over $7,000,000 on the fertilizer program, not counting the investment cost, someone said, "Well, that is not very much." Mr. Chairman, that is a lot of money to me. I am disposed to look into that and see where commercial production ends and experimentation begins. If we are going to put them in the fertilizer business, let us go the whole darned hog and give them all the money they want. Let us go the whole hog and set them up as competitors of private enterprise in the country. But if you want to limit it to experiments and research in the development of an efficient fertilizer and an efficient process that can be administered and operated by private enterprise, then it seems to me this fertilizer program is going to bear a little investigation and a little bit of research. I had the impression back in 1933 that the T. V. A. would carry on fertilizer research and enable private industry to produce high-grade active fertilizers at a minimum cost. Today we find T. V. A. up to its neck in large-scale efforts and the end is not yet.

Let us look at some of the related items that the Tennessee Valley Authority is carrying on at the present time.

Tree planting and erosion control. They own their own nurseries down there. They are going to set out 9,000,000 trees in 1940. They set out 20,000,000 trees in 1938. I am wondering whether we set them up for that purpose or whether the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, and the other States ought to carry on that kind of a function? That is just one item. For that, of course, they are asking only $93,000 this year.

Fish and game preservation. I do not assume to know whether it is a fact, but certainly it was disclosed to me that in the course of their so-called malarial and mosquito control they poured poison on the waters and killed some of the fish and fish spawn. Now we have to bring the fish back and we have $117,000 in here for fish and game preservation.

Land use and recreational planning. What fine language. Recreational possibilities of Gilbertsville and Watts bar reservoirs. Land use and recreational operations and development for 1940—$49,000.

Readjustment of families and completed projects. It is a very naive statement. Remember, this is the Tennessee Valley's language, not mine. They say that many of the families have settled close to their former homes, which has occasioned some pressure on the available land resources, and because these folks insist on coming back home we have got to have a program to adjust them, so we are going to spend $44,000 on that.

Planning studies of villages. Why, bless you, every village they are operating down there is operating at a loss. Let us consider the Muscle Shoals Village operation. Look at this fine language. You would miss it unless you were an accountant. "Estimated net income and expense, fiscal year 1940." If you just casually read that it would not mean so much, but when you ask a question or two, do you know what you find? You will find, in addition to the rent they collected down in the Muscle Shoals Village they still have to have $126,000 out of the Federal Treasury to make it pay. What kind of a fool management is it which cannot rent houses down there and make the village a going self-sustaining concern?

Here is the Norristown operation. The same thing obtains. The sum of $73,000 has to be taken out of the Federal Treasury to make it pay.

Maintenance of national-defense properties. That is one that makes me a bit hot. When this bill came on in 1933 for consideration I remember the great, tall, and stentorian discussion about preserving those plants down there in the event of an emergency. I refer to that old nitrate plant down there. I doubt whether you could get the wheels to turn over and if you will ask one of the engineers he will tell you that that kind of an operation will be obsolete if an emergency ever arises. But, Mr. Chairman, we keep it going, and we dip into the Treasury to the tune of $80,000 a year in order to do it.

I will just mention some of these related activities:

General mapping, $316,000. My God, what a lot of maps you could make for $316,000.

General studies and surveys: What that language means the Lord only knows, but the language is going to cost us $97,000.

Forest redevelopment and soil conservation, $291,000.

Agricultural development and soil conservation, $262,000; and under that there are some beautiful things. For instance, dehydration of fruits and vegetables. They squeeze a little water out of the sweetpotatoes down there so they will get to market fresher. Freezing of fruits and vegetables. They freeze young berries, strawberries, peaches, and that sort of thing. They froze several thousand pounds and got them up to the St. Louis market last year. I understand it cost 27 cents a pound to get them up there and they were sold for 7 cents a pound. I suppose that is all right in the great and good name of experimentation, but it is costing like sin and it is coming out of the Federal Treasury.

Transportation studies: Tell me by what authority the T. V. A. is making transportation studies? Oh, they got out a book this year. It has a great title, "The Interterritorial Freight Rate Problem of the United States."

I do not know where they get that authority, but they are getting money out of the Federal Treasury to conduct a study of that kind, and it is living proof of what I said a while ago to the effect that it is an empire unto itself that combines every function now exercised by this Government. Soon we shall be able to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, the State governments of the seven States in the T. V. A. area, and let T. V. A. march on.

You can understand now when I say here is a great inland empire, freezing strawberries, inventing electric hay dryers, planting trees, generating electricity, and spewing concrete over 500,000 acres, and do you not believe it is about time we look into it?

The investigating committee empowered by this House and by the Senate was down there, and after they left Knoxville what happened? Oh, the Tennessee Valley Authority authorized an audit of its books. Do you know that the General Accounting Office has not audited a lot of the things down there since 1934? You will find that in this book. Then they hired Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, an outstanding firm of accountants, and paid them $40,000 of Tennessee Valley money—yes; but taxpayers' money—to audit the books after the investigating committee had left Knoxville.

They have a big item in here for legal expense. They have lots of lawyers on the pay roll, make no mistake about it. You will find on the last page of this justification, "Legal department, for 1939, $240,000." But that is not enough; they must have other lawyers. You will not find it here or in their annual report, but they went up to New York and got John Lord O'Brien, who once ran against Senator WAGNER, and paid him $75,000 for legal services in connection with recent litigation. In the light of this expenditure it is a little amusing to think how the President inveighed against lawyers a year or two ago as economic royalists. But, royalists or not, they look good to T. V. A. when it gets into trouble.

This sort of thing is going to bear a little investigation, and we are going to have to keep our eyes open because they are playing with $500,000,000 of the people's money, and it is, in part, money derived from my constituents and the constituents of every other Member of this House. The direct appropriation of $39,000,000 will come out of the pockets of the taxpayers in all sections of the country, and if most of them get any benefits, they will be so tenuous and slender as to be virtually invisible.

I am going to make it my business to see whether or not there is an efficient expenditure of that sum, even though the whole program in this inland empire may be justified from the point of flood control, power, and navigation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In connection with the gentleman's remark about flood control I should just like to inform the gentleman that the mayor of Paducah, Ky., the largest city in western Kentucky, called me at midnight last night and told me they had turned loose a 17-foot head of water down that river without notice to anyone, and that it had swept away barges and lumberyards and one thing and another. I suppose that is the kind of flood control they are going to give us from now on.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My good friend the gentleman from Kentucky knows we thrashed that question out here. We licked the Gilbertsville Dam three times on this floor, but a provision for its construction was placed in the bill on the other side of the Capitol. It caught us in an unguarded moment, and it stayed in the bill. I should think the great Senator from Kentucky who is now in the Senate for another 6 years will not need this $112,000,000 Gilbertsville Dam, this great, monumental mass of masonry which is supposed to be for power and flood control, and should now assist in making a saving for the Nation's taxpayers. No engineer has yet justified it to me. In my experience in hydraulics and as a dredging contractor out on that old Illinois River I have always learned that you had to have an empty dam in order to have effective flood control, but here we are going to have a full dam for power, and I suppose the upper 2 feet of the dam for flood control, and let the Tennessee River "go Gallagher" when it will.

You are not going to get much benefit down there, Andy, out of that Gilbertsville Dam, and it is going to cost us $112,000,000. My regret, of course, is that it is going to cost my people a proportionate part of that sum. So, when you come to that part of the bill, think it over a little bit and determine whether or not we ought to call a halt. This dam is not needed for power. There is lots of power right now; enough to meet most of the demand. We ought to have a real, forthright investigation by the best engineers in the country. We can afford to spend $1,000,000 if it is going to save $112,000,000, and make no mistake about that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. What about the investigation that has already been authorized? Does not the gentleman believe the findings of the committee making that investigation are of some significance, particularly in view of the glee with which the investigation was inaugurated by those who thought it would prove bad for the T. V. A.?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend the gentleman from California is just too naive. All the gentleman has to do is to look at the names of those who are on the committee and who predominate on the committee. If they had given us a committee of independent people who would not be beholden, say, to an administration or to any political group of any kind, we would really "go to town" on an investigation and get somewhere; but you cannot get anywhere if you start out with the premise that the purpose is not to uncover any pay dirt in the first instance, and then load the committee with enough members of one party so that the minority cannot go to the bottom of the matter.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Briefly.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman explain what the T. V. A. paid for phosphate lands down there and what the cost was?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The figures are in this justification. The T. V. A. bought 349 acres and paid for them $678,000. They bought the land from the International Agricultural Corporation. There is testimony here also to show that the Victor Chemical Co. bought land, and how much did they pay? They paid $75—not $2,000—an acre.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, I simply wish to add that the record indicates the International Agricultural Corporation paid $145,000 for the land to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct. That was $145,000 for 2,348 acres. The representatives of the T. V. A. said, "Oh, there is a reason for it. The phosphate content of the land we bought is infinitely higher than that of the other and is more accessible and more available. It is easier to mine this phosphate, and so forth." Maybe that is so, Mr. Chairman, but it has to be powerfully good land, even with phosphate in it, to bring $2,000 an acre; make no mistake about that.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman understand that representatives of J. P. Morgan & Co. control the chemical company that sold out to the T. V. A.?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not heard it, but it is possible.

Mr. TABER. It was in the papers around Knoxville.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, this is my benediction on T. V. A., and now I want to get to something else. I want to get to the Federal Communications Commission, sometimes referred to as the Federal Radio Commission. It used to be the Federal Radio Commission, but it is more inclusive now since the act of 1934.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 15 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the time is to be divided equally, there are only 7 minutes remaining under the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Illinois sufficient time to make up the 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Away back in 1910 we put the first radio act on the books, and there have been 36 or 37 enactments since that time, notably the act of 1934, which is known as the Communications Act. They have virtual life and death power over broadcasting in this country. As the thing had finally grown up, you know from your own experience on your own radio that there are about 90 available air pathways in the broadcast band and you get reception between 550 and 1500 kilocycles. It is the business of the Federal Communications to police the air. It must take over 700 broadcast stations and make them function in these pathways with little or no interference. It must issue licenses on the basis of public convenience and necessity. It issues licenses for a 6-month period and then requires renewals. Millions of dollars are invested in the radio industry, and that huge investment hangs on the hair of a license issued by a Federal commission. You can, therefore, appreciate the power and authority of the Commission and what it means to the industry. But more than that, there are 33,000,000 radio sets in this country, serving 27,000,000 homes, from which you can imagine how influential radio can be in influencing the lives, actions, and conduct of the people of this country. If any strange and mysterious things are happening in the Commission, I am sure that the American people and the radio industry want to know about it.

Now, there is a division in the Federal Communications Commission that looks after broadcasting. Over a period of years they have licensed about 714 stations, and I think there are 40 or 45 more that will be under construction sometime this year.

Things have not been so well down there for one reason or another. My colleague from Massachusetts indicated to the committee yesterday that as early as December there was an editorial in Business Week saying that Tom Corcoran was writing a new radio act. This was long before we came here for the Seventy-sixth Congress. Then on the 7th of December the Washington Post carried an article on the front page to the effect that they had heard Mr. Corcoran was writing a new radio act.

We asked Mr. McNinch about it in the committee, and you will find the colloquy in the hearings. He says he knew nothing about it; and then as we plied him with questions about why the Board of Examiners was dismissed, why it was abolished, in fact, and why the full hearing procedure was changed, he looked at the chairman in considerable dismay, and finally said:

Mr. Chairman, before I make any statement I want to say I do not think it is within the province of the Appropriations Committee to ask for this information coming along with a justification on a Budget item.

But he said:

If I have got to testify, the first thing I want to say to you is that the President sent a message up to Senator WHEELER and Chairman LEA, and he is going to ask for a reorganization of the Radio Commission.

What is this reorganization, and what is wrong down there? Well, I do not know. I am not going to speak from hearsay, and I am not going to do anybody down there an injustice; but the dismissal of experienced and trusted employees, the complete revamping of the examining procedure, the effort of Chairman McNinch to secure exception from the civil-service rules of 40 attorneys in the Commission, the quick rush of the Chairman of the Commission to the air waves to defend this action when the news broke in the press, the feeble and unconvincing justification of this whole action, and the speedy effort to invoke an investigation of radio monopoly by the Commission itself when it heard that Congress was contemplating such action are enough to justify the conclusion that all is not right. I am a little alarmed about it for the simple reason if they do send a message and they do ask for a three-man commission by new legislation, instead of a seven-man commission, I am wondering how far the administration is going to go to dominate that Commission; and if you ever dominate the airways and give anybody absolute control, you have got control of the United States of America—make no mistake about it.

There is a provision in this Radio Act that I do not like. I suspect I voted for it in 1934, not knowing, perhaps, what I was voting for at the time, because the matter had not gone to the degree that it has now; but if you ever examine that act and look at section 606, here is what it says:

606. (c) Upon proclamation by the President that there exists war or a threat of war or a state of public peril or disaster or other national emergency, or in order to preserve the neutrality of the United States, the President may suspend or amend for such time as he sees fit the rules and regulations applicable to any or all stations within the jurisdiction of the United States.

I am alluding to that this afternoon because that bill probably will be on the floor one of these days if it is ever reported out of the committee. Then we will have a chance to ventilate our views and determine whether or not we want a small commission that can be dominated, that may probably invoke censorship, that may probably keep people off the airways, that can determine how far you can go without comment and political commentary, or whether we are to have an independent commission, sufficient in size to guarantee and to assure to the people of this country that there is going to be no domination of the air channels. If I had it to do over again, I would never vote for that proposition, and I am not sure but what I shall drop a bill into the hopper one of these days to repeal in whole or in part section 606, paragraph (c), because I would not like to see a situation such as prevailed only last week in the National Capital be made the vehicle for dominating the airways and controlling the things that might be said to the people of the country.

I do not know why Mr. McNinch was sent to the Radio Commission. I do not know why he abolished the examiners, but there is now in effect an examining procedure down there that in my humble judgment is not as good or as efficient or as sound as the procedure in vogue before that change was made. It may be that it is all part and parcel of an effort to streamline this Commission, because of its importance in purveying sentiment and truth to the people everywhere in the country.

This offers a good opportunity to make an observation on this and other commissions. The trouble is not in the law; it is not necessarily a great basic weakness in the radio law as such, but rather in the personnel. When you go back you will find that most of our troubles heretofore have been because of those who sat on the board, who probably have not administered the act as it should have been administered. They removed Mr. Humphrey from the Federal Trade Commission back in 1935. I thought he was a good man, and he should have stayed there, because he gave quite an efficient administration. Then there was the trouble and difficulty in the Tennessee Valley Authority when Mr. Arthur Morgan was removed. Now we have a situation in that a former Member of the House is before the Senate for confirmation of appointment to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we have this same personal problem on the part of the Federal Communications Commission. I am not advising the President as to what he ought to do, but I do say that a lot of these things and a lot of friction could have been eliminated if perhaps just a little more care had been exercised in getting administrators and key men who will administer and carry out the law that the people's representatives have enacted, without fear or favor, and without making an attempt to control an important agency of government. Instead of abolishing the examining procedure of the Commission, the Chairman might have given some time to the formulation of a radio policy which we do not have today, and to other basic needs that are so essential to the industry and to the public. Back in Civil War days someone remarked, "Let me write the songs of a nation and I care not who makes the laws." That might today be paraphrased by saying, "Give me the control of the Nation's air waves, and I care not who makes its laws." This Congress must be on the alert when this matter comes on.

That leads me to the last item which I wish to discuss. That is the National Labor Relations Board. I do not want to say a great deal about it, except about one phase. I listened with interest to the colloquy that occurred this afternoon to the effect that we ought to strike the whole appropriation out of the bill. Gentlemen, you cannot do that. The Appropriations Committee has no such authority. We are simply agents and servants of the House.

Congress wrote that legislation known as the Wagner Act and set up the National Labor Relations Board. Having gotten it on the books, you virtually mandated the Committee on Appropriations to look over their Budget justifications and to determine by report how much money they ought to have to carry on their functions. If a change is to be made, it ought to be made by amending the law, not by striking out, not by cutting down the amount to such proportions that you hamstring or cripple or decapitate the functions of the National Labor Relations Board. I have some different opinions about it. The Wagner Act is on the books, and if we will be honest with ourselves, we know that it is there to stay. It is a case now of efficiency, and shall I say tactful administration, but in that respect there has been some difficulty probably in a lack of tact, a lack of diplomacy on the part of some of the members of the Board. I shall give you an illustration of it. I hold no personal animus toward any member of the Board. I asked Mr. Edwin Smith to put into the record his speech delivered in Mexico to the International Industrial Relations Institute on September 3, 1938. I thought it was proper that he should do so. There was considerable talk about that speech, and I asked him to put it into the record. I suggest that you read it. You can understand why the Labor Board has not always fared as well in the press and in the eyes of the public as it might have. Remember that these gentlemen hold judicial authority. They exercise quasi legislative and executive functions, as well as judicial functions, and when they appear before the public they ought to be rather careful about their language. Board members cannot make intemperate public statements on a highly controversial law and then expect to secure maximum cooperation from the affected parties and from the public.

Here is what Edmund Smith said, among other things—and you will find it on page 1643 of the hearings. He said:

One cannot temporize with the wording of a statute for reasons of diplomacy.

If he had been a little more diplomatic there would not be the hostility today that there is, and the chances are that this act might have been administered with far less friction than you find right now between employers and employees.

But that expression of administrative philosophy is the key to the demand for modifications of the Wagner Act today and to the lack of confidence on the part of many in securing proper administration from some members of the Board. By contrast, it is interesting to compare the approach of the Federal Trade Commission. To that agency we entrusted the administration of the Robinson-Patman Act. The Federal Trade Commission could have disrupted the entire distribution structure of the country had it been so disposed. Instead, it took a calm judicial view of the matter and has been able to proceed with administration and enforcement of the act, and without temporizing, and yet avoiding the frictions and heat that are so often destructive of genuine and enduring progress.

That is No. 1. But let me read another one that I thought was essentially unfair. I can understand how a man gets into the ill grace of the people by making statements of this kind. On page 1640, reading from this Mexican speech, he said:

The enemies of the act at first pinned their hopes on the expectation that the Supreme Court would declare the act unconstitutional. The judges in many of our lower Federal courts shared this expectation.

Who is he, as an administrative officer of the Government, to make a blanket indictment against the Federal courts when that Board has to appear in those same courts? You talk about lack of tact. Yes. That is lack of tact, and it is not any wonder they have gotten into difficulty. I never heard Chairman Warren Madden say that sort of thing. I think the Chairman of the Labor Board has done a pretty fair job. Not so long ago you heard him over the radio in debate with Charles Hook, of the American Rolling Mill Co. He gave a good account of himself. He made a calm, factual exposition of his case without using strictures against employers or employees. If all the members of the Board had done likewise a great deal of the heat, a great deal of the vehemence with which this Board is assailed would not be in evidence today. But if Mr. Edwin Smith made that kind of a speech in public it is only to be inferred that he may have uttered similar sentiments elsewhere. So I can readily understand, through the lack of tact and the lack of diplomacy, that this act has given so much trouble. Is it any wonder that the American Federation of Labor wants it amended? Is it any wonder that employers want it amended? It is because they are afraid of expressions of that kind, and do not know where it will ultimately lead.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield briefly.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman aware that this Board about which he is talking has ruled officially that a manufacturer or employer cannot give to his workers the speech of a Congressman?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Perhaps so.

Mr. HOFFMAN. There is not any question about it. They have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not justify everything the Board has done. I recognize they are an exploratory body. They have been feeling their way, but I do say that a lot of the ill will of the country has been rightfully incurred because of tactless statements like that.

Here is another one, in connection with sit-down strikes. At page 1629 of the hearings Mr. Madden said:

My own attitude certainly is that the sit-down is an illegal trespass upon the employer's property.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me finish. We asked Mr. Donald Smith that question. He said:

I do not condone sit-down strikes, and may I say that I hold the same views as does the chairman with regard to the sit-down strike situation.

We asked Mr. Edwin Smith that question, and he said:

I suppose that the legality of the sit-down strike, as the chairman suggested, is not a matter for determination by the Board, but by the courts. I am aware of the fact that in a number of jurisdictions laws have been passed since the sit-down was instituted as a weapon of striking, which have defined them as trespasses or misdemeanors, or otherwise illegal.

Then he said:

I think that the sit-down strike is a pretty flexible term.

Well, you read your own interpretation into it; but is it any wonder that they are shooting at the Board today? Why did he not make an out-and-out statement and say, "It is illegal; it has been so held and as an administrative officer of the Government we say it is an illegal act and a trespass upon the rights of the employer"? But no; he had to equivocate. He had to go around the corner. That is the reason that the Labor Board has been in difficulty, because of that sort of thing. I like to defend them when I can, because I think they have done a lot of good work, but I want to recur to the premise I made a little while ago in connection with the Federal Communications Commission. So often the trouble is not in the act; it is in the maladministration of the act and in tactless statements made in public. We probably can, with profit, amend the Wagner Act, but it probably would not have all the heat and curse that is on it today if there had been a little more tact and a little more forthrightness on the part of some who have the authority to administer it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said here about the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam. During the few minutes I have at my disposal I want to hold myself to a discussion of the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam. I want to cite you some of the findings of fact that have been made in the various court proceedings and some of the statements that have been made by the leading engineers of this country relative to the importance of Gilbertsville Dam and the construction of a high dam.

STATEMENT ON GILBERTSVILLE DAM

Gilbertsville Dam is the key dam in the T. V. A. system for the improvement of navigation on the Tennessee River and the control of floods on the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers. Five years of research and investigation have gone into the planning of this dam. It is one of the most valuable and urgently necessary water-control projects in the country. In an attempt to defeat an initial appropriation for this dam a number of arguments have been made plausible to the layman but without any foundation in fact. There is summarized below the facts with respect to the arguments against the construction of the dam, together with a summary of the reasons why failure to appropriate at this time for the beginning of construction of the dam would result in a grave set-back for the movement to conserve our natural resources, to control and improve our rivers, and to prevent flood devastation in the Tennessee and Mississippi River Basins. The facts stated are for the most part taken from official sources.

A. ANSWERS TO ARGUMENTS AGAINST CONSTRUCTION OF THE DAM

Low dams versus high dams: In the debates on the Gilbertsville appropriation, the statement has been made that low navigation dams would afford a superior type of navigation to that which would be supplied by Gilbertsville. Even Maj. Rufus Putnam, chief expert for the 18 utility companies in the recent T. V. A. case at Chattanooga—Tennessee Electric Power Co. against T. V. A.—admitted that navigation improvement by high dams such as Gilbertsville affords a more technically efficient navigation channel than the alternative type of improvement by low dams (T. E. P. transcript, p. 1928). (The record in the T. E. P. case had not been printed when these citations were made and transcript references are to the official typewritten transcript of the proceedings. References to the Ashwander case are to the printed record.) And in the Ashwander case at Birmingham, in which the late Judge Grubb decided against T. V. A., the court nevertheless found as a fact that high dams of the type of Gilbertsville were superior to low dams for navigation purposes (finding of fact No. 138, Ashwander record, pp. 1082, 1083). The three-judge court at Chattanooga made the same finding (finding of fact No. 54). (Finding of fact No. 54, made by the court in the T. E. P. case, after many weeks of hearing evidence from many witnesses for both sides who covered every phase of the problem, is so conclusive on the advantage of high over low dams for navigation purposes that it is attached to this memorandum in full text.) These findings were based not on the testimony of the Authority's witnesses alone but on the basis of the testimony of the utilities' witnesses and of the Army engineers as well. In the Ashwander case Gen. George B. Pillsbury, then Assistant Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, testified that "there is no question as to the superiority of high dams over low dams for purposes of navigation" (Ashwander record, pp. 753, 754). In the Chattanooga case, Col. Lewis Watkins, who supervised the preparation of historic House Document 328, which was presented to Congress in 1930 by the Army engineers, and is the bible for the Tennessee River development, a man more familiar with the Tennessee River and its problems than any other living man, testified that high dams were superior in every way to the low-dam type of development (T. E. P. transcript, pp. 3271-3274). In House Document 328 itself the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors made the flat assertion (p. 13) that a 9-foot waterway improvement by means of low-lift dams "would be inferior to the high-dam developments." The Gilbertsville Dam is one of the high-dam developments referred to.

Indeed, if low dams are built, it will be necessary in the future to destroy or submerge them in order to make way for high dams. In House Document No. 306, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, Gen. E. M. Markham recommended with respect to the Ohio "the progressive replacement of the old—low—locks and dams with a less number of higher-lift dams," and so forth. Low dams have no value for flood control or power, and waste the resources of the sites for these purposes (T. E. P. case, finding of facts Nos. 70, 93).

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That is exactly the reason that the enemies of this legislation, who are in sympathy with the Power Trust, want to put in these low dams, to forever prevent your people from using the hydroelectric power in those streams.

Mr. SPARKMAN. And waste the resources.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wish to speak for a moment now about the use of the Gilbertsville pool by river craft.

Use of Gilbertsville pool by existing craft: Another argument made is that existing river craft will not be able to use the Gilbertsville pool. This is based on the bugaboo that the pool is so large that waves will be created by wind action which will interfere with the passage of the old type of river craft in use on the Ohio River. Colonel Watkins testified in the Chattanooga case that the contrary was true, that the crooked, winding channel created by low dams was much more hazardous to navigation than the large open channels created by the high dams. Mr. James Brodie, superintendent of maintenance and chief engineer of the Federal Barge Line of the Inland Waterways Corporation, a practical navigator of great experience, testified that "a deep, long, slack-water pool is much more easy to traverse and is much more dependable than any other kind of inland waterways" (T. E. P. transcript, p. 4895). Mr. Brodie also testified (T. E. P. transcript, pp. 4895-4896) that all of the equipment of the Federal Barge Line could be used on the Tennessee River after completion of the high-dam system, and that all the craft in use on the Ohio and Mississippi could use these pools, except a few antiquated coal barges now in use on the upper Ohio, which would probably never have occasion to use the pools in any case.

We must not be misled by statements that the Gilbertsville Reservoir will be 5 miles wide. Such widths will occur only for several short stretches at the confluence points of a few large tributaries, and then only on the rare occasions when the pool is at top flood level. The width generally is less than 2 miles when the pool is at its normal navigation level.

Effect of flood draw-down on navigation pool: Another argument that has been made is that "the reservoir must be kept practically empty in order to catch floodwaters, and that would destroy navigation; with it dry and empty you could not navigate." This objection is wholly without foundation. At elevation 350—above sea level—the pool will have a minimum depth of 12 feet, adequate for vessels of 9-foot draft, with customary overdepths. From elevation 350 to the top of the gates, at elevation 375, there will be storage space for 4,600,000 acre-feet, which storage is all controlled flood storage and can be used for flood control without impinging in any way on the navigation pool.

Valley storage: A final argument against Gilbertsville is that it will displace natural "valley storage." The short answer to this argument was made in the T. E. P. case by Mr. George R. Clemens, civil engineer of the Mississippi River Commission, and in responsible charge of that Commission's Comprehensive Report on Reservoirs in the Mississippi River Basin (H. Doc. 259, 74th Cong., 1st sess.). He pointed out that valley storage was merely the successive positions taken by the flood itself, and that far from reducing floods on the Mississippi, this uncontrolled storage increased the flood heights on the Mississippi by retarding the discharge of the Tennessee until it coincided with the flood crest on the Mississippi, as occurred in the 1937 flood (T. E. P. transcript, pp. 3607-3611). The three-judge court came to the same conclusion (T. E. P. case, finding of fact No. 66).

B. FACTS IN SUPPORT OF IMMEDIATE CONSTRUCTION OF GILBERTSVILLE DAM

Strategic importance of Gilbertsville Dam for navigation: The Gilbertsville site is at the mouth of the Tennessee, near Paducah. It is therefore the bottle neck so far as the development of water commerce in the Tennessee Basin is concerned. No traffic can move in or out of the Tennessee Basin without passing through the 184-mile stretch which Gilbertsville Dam will improve. It is the great connecting link between the Tennessee Valley and the remainder of the great Mississippi Valley. The seven dams constructed or under construction on the Tennessee to provide 9-foot navigation will have only limited usefulness for through traffic between the Tennessee system and the Mississippi system unless this bottle neck is eliminated and a full standard channel created.

Strategic importance of Gilbertsville Dam for flood control on the lower Mississippi River: It is now universally recognized that it is absolutely necessary for Mississippi flood control to supplement the existing protection works on the Mississippi by reservoir projects on the tributaries. (See report of Army engineers of April 6, 1937, Committee Document No. 1, 75th Cong., 1st sess., pars. 20, 21.) The Gilbertsville site is the most strategic for this purpose in existence. It is immediately above the junction of the Ohio and the Mississippi at Cairo, and can therefore be regulated with precision, drawing down the pool in advance of floods and storing the entire flow of the Tennessee during the peak flood stages on the Mississippi, as the flood crest approaches Cairo. It is not only the most strategic reservoir in location, but the largest in size, and will alone cut off from 2 to 3 feet from the crest of the floods on the Mississippi from Cairo all the way down to Helena, Ark., with very substantial effect on flood heights through the remainder of the length of the Mississippi. When one recalls that the levees on the Mississippi have already been built to the maximum feasible height, and that in times of flood disaster even inches are important the tremendous benefits to Mississippi flood control from this project can be appreciated (T. E. P. case, findings of fact Nos. 61-63).

The Gilbertsville site is far cheaper for Mississippi flood control than any other site in the Mississippi Basin. A report on this site by a board of independent consulting engineers, consisting of Mr. O. N. Floyd, of Dallas, Tex., consultant for the Army engineers on the flood-control project at Sardis, Miss., and numerous other projects; Mr. L. L. Hiding, an experienced consulting engineer associated with Mr. A. E. Morgan in the design and construction of numerous flood-control projects; and Mr. E. W. Lane, for a number of years associated with the Bureau of Reclamation and now professor of hydraulic engineering at Iowa State University, contains the following conclusion:

The cost of the Gilbertsville project per acre-foot of storage or per foot of reduction in flood stage at Cairo, Ill., is less than one-half the cost of any other reservoir or system of reservoirs which could be located on the tributaries of the Mississippi River above Cairo.

The three-judge court at Chattanooga, in its unanimous opinion last year, made the following statement:

It is reasonably estimated that Gilbertsville, when completed, will supply over 4,000,000 acre-feet of flood storage, and it is the most important of the series for flood control on the Ohio and Mississippi.

Even the conservative Engineering News-Record, which is opposed to the Authority's power activities, editorially recognized the outstanding character of this project in its issue of April 7, 1938. The editorial is attached in full text.

Effect of delay on program of T. V. A.: Any delay in the construction of this project creates the hazard that the delay will result in loss of life and destruction of property because of a flood catastrophe which this project could have averted. Delay in construction postpones the removal of the bottle neck to through navigation on the Tennessee River and the full realization of the benefits of the Tennessee Valley Authority project.

Delay would be wasteful as well as dangerous. The Authority has planned its construction program to achieve maximum economy and efficiency. It has prepared long-range plans for the transfer of men and equipment from project to project in a coordinated series. Indeed, all of the dams have been treated as a single giant project. An interruption in the construction of any single unit of this great project will impair economy and efficiency and result in the waste both of human resources and of material.

If the appropriation is not made now, it will be necessary for the Authority to discharge scores of experienced engineers. These men have acquired invaluable experience in dealing with this project in its preliminary phases. If these men are discharged, they can never be reassembled, and replacements will have to be made from less qualified and experienced personnel. Gilbertsville is not an emergency project, but a part of a permanent program for the conservation and utilization of our natural resources for the benefit of the people of America. However, the necessity of stimulating employment in the current business recession adds final force to the argument for constructing the project at this time.

Gilbertsville is a part of a regional project. However, its greatest value is not for the Tennessee Basin but for the whole Mississippi Valley below Cairo. It is a truly national project. [Applause.]

TEXT OF FINDING OF FACT NO. 54 MADE BY THREE-JUDGE COURT IN TENNESSEE ELECTRIC POWER CO. ET AL. V. TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ET AL.

54. The high-dam projects of the Authority will provide a navigation improvement substantially superior to that which could be provided by the system of low dams set forth in House Document No. 328. The superiority of high dams for navigation was recognized by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in House Document No. 328. The Authority's projects will provide superior channel depths and widths, substantially fewer lockages, substantially less current velocities, pool fluctuations, and interruptions from floods. The elimination of lockages will substantially reduce the time consumed in lockages; the superiority of channel depths and reduction of current velocities will substantially increase the speed of movement and reduce the amount of motive power required; and the wider and longer pools of the high dams are preferred by the navigator to the narrow, crooked pools of the low dams. The reduction in pool fluctuations will greatly encourage the development of terminal facilities necessary to the development of commercial navigation. The advantages of the Authority's projects in these respects will insure a substantially greater efficiency of the navigation channel, substantially greater dependability of service, and may reasonably be expected to attract a substantially greater volume of traffic on the improved river. The high dams will also provide substantial improvement of navigation on the tributaries which would not be provided by the low-dam projects. The advantages of high dams cannot be accurately measured in monetary terms. The boats and barges which are now in general use on the interconnected inland waterways of the Mississippi River system will be able to navigate the Tennessee River where improved by the projects of the Authority without change of design or extent of loading.

BASIC CONTROL

Current animosities may easily inspire the thought that no more money should be squandered on T. V. A. expansion, and that therefore the plan to build a large dam at the mouth of the Tennessee River should be rejected. Such a thought would be unfair. It would ignore the fact that the Gilbertsville project mainly serves to reduce Mississippi River floods. Of course, the big reservoir would also improve navigation on the Mississippi, as well as open up the Tennessee itself; but the flood-control effect remains the commanding argument. Back of this situation lies a simple but compelling reason. The truth is that the whole Mississippi River control plan is a failure insofar as the city of Cairo and the basins immediately below are concerned; in last year's flood the city escaped destruction only by a hair. Gilbertsville would provide a safety margin by cutting 2 to 4 feet off Cairo flood heights—not enough in the biggest flood but a very considerable approach to full protection. It would be the first piece of effective tributary control, and one of the largest, in the ultimate Mississippi River system. The estimate of flood benefits reported by Carl A. Bock on another page, approaching $100,000,000, reflects its importance and emphasizes that the project deserves earnest consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, including the expenses of operation, maintenance, and upkeep of air navigation facilities, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 973), including traveling expenses and expenses of employees detailed by the Chairman of the Authority or the Administrator to attend meetings of associations, organizations, or other properly constituted bodies concerned with the civil aeronautics industry or the art of aeronautics, in the United States or in foreign countries; personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; expenses of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other personal property (not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds) of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, upon specific authorization by the Chairman of the Authority or the Administrator; purchase and exchange of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, atlases and maps, periodicals, and newspapers; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $400,000), operation, maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft, aircraft power plants, propellers and equipment, and spare parts thereof; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $45,000), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles, including two automobiles for use in the District of Columbia; and purchase of special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes (including rubber boots, snowshoes, and skis), $13,738,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for payments, at a rate not to exceed 3 cents per mile, to maintenance and operating personnel, as reimbursement to such personnel of the expenses of necessary travel in their personally owned automobiles within the limits of their official posts of duty when such travel is performed in connection with the maintenance and operation of remotely controlled air navigation facilities.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 8, line 1, strike out "$13,738,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the Civil Aeronautics Authority was created a year ago, and it was indicated to us that it would promote efficiency and economy to have this organization in this shape. The result of the proposition, however, is that so far we are presented with a 50-percent increase in the cost of operation next year over the cost for the current year. Frankly, this is not along the line of efficiency and economy, in my belief.

The cost of these functions at the present time is, altogether, $14,000,000; that is, for the current fiscal year, 1939.

LXXXIV—77

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that last year when the civil aeronautics bill passed the House not one word was said, according to my recollection, by any Member on either side of the Chamber that it would be more economical to establish the Civil Aeronautics Authority. What we did say was that it would bring about more efficiency and a greater promotion of aeronautics in civilian life. I think the members who were on the committee at that time will bear me out in my statement.

Mr. TABER. I am rather surprised, Mr. Chairman, because I have always understood that the set-up was supposed to promote efficiency and economy.

This outfit went to the Budget and requested $34,000,000. The Budget dropped them to $21,230,000, and this committee has dropped them to $21,218,000. What kind of set-up has this organization and what kind of set-up is it proposed to give them?

At the present time the number of employees upon this roll is 3,233. This is brought about with an appropriation this year of $14,000,000. It is proposed to give them 4,332 employees in the fiscal year 1940—an increase of 1,100 employees. At the present time the Interstate Commerce Commission, with all its regulation of railroads, trucks, busses, and all that sort of thing, has a total of only 2,739 employees. It seems to me that it is absolutely ridiculous for this activity, even if it does to a certain extent engage in promotion, even if it does to a certain extent engage in the development of some airports—it seems to me that it is absolutely ridiculous for this organization to carry a set-up 50 percent greater than that of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

As this House approaches the problem of the cost of government it must show a tendency to economize if we are to get anywhere. The amendment I have offered would cut this appropriation that appears on the top of page 8, for salaries and expenses, $2,738,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. If this amendment is adopted, I propose to attempt to reduce the item on page 9, line 10, by $1,000,000, thereby saving nearly $4,000,000 out of this whole appropriation. It seems to me that if we are to get anywhere it is absolutely necessary to get rid of a large portion of these additional employees that are expected to be added.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. In a moment. If the gentleman will turn to page 1878 of the hearings, he will see where it is proposed to increase the number of regional employees from 2,489 to 3,620, and to increase their compensation by $2,300,000. The entire set-up is on a basis of extravagance and tremendous overhead.

We can never get stability in this Government if we are continually to increase every item that comes up. I hope, therefore, that the House will take a position for economy and cut out the major portion of this increase in the number of employees and $2,000,000 in salaries. They would not be necessary with efficient management. We can very well allow $1,000,000 less for facilities and developmental expense.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does the gentleman know how much was carried in the bill last year for navigation facilities?

Mr. TABER. I can tell the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will supply the figure for him: $4,570,000. This year they ask for $15,312,870. I am asking the gentleman if, time after time, in the last few years here in Congress there has not been criticism because the Government did not establish air navigation facilities to protect the passengers and the planes?

Mr. TABER. The Government is going a very long way at this time in attempting to establish these facilities. It is moving faster than there is any reason for so doing.

Mr. BULWINKLE. May I ask the gentleman if he knows how many men it takes to man one of these beacon lights at an air station?

Mr. TABER. Perhaps three.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It takes five, and the more you have the more men it is going to take. This acts as a protection to the planes and to the passengers in those planes. I am calling this to the gentleman's attention, because this was done for the absolute safety of the traveling public. The Congress should not stint when it comes to saving human lives.

Mr. TABER. It is not necessary for the Congress to go back on the proposition of saving human life. It should go ahead and provide what is necessary, but it should not go ahead and provide a lot more than is necessary.

The proposal I made to make a cut on additional facilities was not to prevent providing what is necessary by this year's appropriation. The proposal I make is to cut $1,000,000 off of a $7,000,000 appropriation, which the gentleman referred to, and which compares with an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the current year. I do not think that is cutting down unnecessarily on facilities which take care of human life. I think it is showing common sense and an honest progress, instead of being wildly extravagant. That is what this kind of a proposition sets up.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, 15 minutes on one amendment is rather long. I want the gentleman to have sufficient time.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. I call attention to the fact that on page 35 the total appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission, with its varied functions of regulation, including air, rail, and water, is only $8,908,000. The gentleman's proposition is to reduce the appropriation in the case of one item for the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. TABER. It is to reduce this particular item to $11,000,000, as that is an increase over the current year.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. Does the gentleman think that within 1 year of the operation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority they could develop the practical operation to a degree of consistency with the safety requirements of present-day flying? I feel that the gentleman's suggestion is good, but I think it is untimely. I think he is 2 years ahead of time. The Civil Aeronautics Authority does not have the necessary money to carry out its functions.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. Chairman, the House, after great deliberative consideration passed a bill organizing the Civil Aeronautics Authority and did so because it felt there was a great and pressing need for a concentrated effort to operate in this new field of navigation which so vitally affects the lives of American people. Since that event we have been more impressed with the fact that aviation is facing an era of great expansion. The people are using it more and more every day. Every time we pick up a newspaper we are confronted with a situation where there has been loss of life and property.

This agency estimated its needs, composed as it is of experts in their lines, at a total of $34,895,000. The Budget cut that $13,000,000, which was a severe and drastic cut. My good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], keen and astute as he is, did not hear the proceedings before the subcommittee. He has had access to the hearings. However, I believe every member of the subcommittee was impressed with the ability and the sincerity of the people who are operating this department. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to take the responsibility of impeding the development of this new agency, which is so vitally necessary in this time of expanded aviation.

I hope the Committee will allow these items, which have been passed upon by the subcommittee unanimously, so far as I know, and permit them to stand and give the Civil Aeronautics Authority a chance to organize and to operate satisfactorily in this important field.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, Air Safety Board: For salaries and expenses of the Air Safety Board in carrying out the duties and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the provisions of title VII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 973), including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; contract stenographic reporting services; operation, maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft; hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles, including one automobile for use in the District of Columbia; and purchase of special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes (including rubber boots, snowshoes, and skis), $380,000, of which amount not to exceed $25,000 may be expended for temporary employment in the investigation of aircraft accidents of consultants and experts on a contract or fee basis without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope every Member of the House now present will remember the words of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] a few moments ago when he spoke so highly of those in charge of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, because when we come to the consideration of page 66 it is my purpose to offer an amendment restoring the salaries that were provided by the last Congress in setting up the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It is true Congress after most careful consideration set up this very necessary agency as Mr. WOODRUM says.

The Subcommittee on Appropriations has reduced the salaries of these very outstanding men, about which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] just spoke, despite the fact the statutory provision states they shall be paid a certain salary. As I pointed out in my remarks just before adjournment this is not economy. You might limit the amount they can draw from this appropriation but if six unanimous decisions of the Court of Claims and Supreme Court mean anything everyone affected will eventually get their full salary with interest.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that one can think very highly of a Government administrator and still not give him the keys to the Federal Treasury. That is the answer.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Virginia was speaking about these experts, the wonderful men who are now running the Civil Aeronautics Authority, yet in another part of the bill he wants to cut the salaries of these experts. I only want to give them the salary that every Member of the House who voted for the Civil Aeronautics Authority bill in the last Congress provided they should receive. If we felt last year they should receive a specific salary then why limit the amount below that figure they can receive under this bill?

The proper way to approach this matter is through the legislative committee not by a limitation on an appropriation bill. I hope Mr. WOODRUM will speak as highly tomorrow as he did today about the officials whose salaries he seeks to reduce.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

For three Commissioners and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including personal services required for examination of Presidential postmasters, and including not to exceed $2,500 for employment of expert examiners not in the Federal service on special subjects for which examiners within the service are not available, and for personal services in the field; for medical examinations; for necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the Commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, including not to exceed $5,000 for expenses incident to attendance at meetings concerned with problems of public officials, educational groups, Government employees as such, and other similar organizations, which are peculiar to the interests and business of the Commission, when specifically directed by the Commission; for furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; rental of equipment; supplies; advertising; telegraph, telephone, and laundry service; freight and express charges; streetcar fares not to exceed $300; stationery; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, directories, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, not to exceed $1,000; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motortrucks, motorcycles, and bicycles; garage rent; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal Union countries; special-delivery stamps; and other like miscellaneous necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, $4,250,000, of which not to exceed $550,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Civil Service Commission is authorized to expend not to exceed $3,000 of this amount for actuarial services pertaining to the civil service, Canal Zone, and Alaska Railroad retirement and disability funds, to be obtained by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as the Commission may determine to be reasonable: Provided further, That no details from any executive department or independent establishment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere to the Commission's central office in Washington or to any of its district offices shall be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, but this shall not affect the making of details for service as members of the boards of examiners outside the immediate offices of the district managers: Provided further, That the Civil Service Commission shall have power in case of emergency to transfer or detail any of its employees to or from its office or field force.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my approbation of the action of the Committee in giving the Civil Service Commission the amount recommended by the Budget in this year's annual appropriation. For many years the Civil Service Commission has been handicapped in performing its duties by the lack of a proper appropriation. While the amount appropriated in this bill is considerably less than the Commission asked of the Budget, the committee has given them every dollar the Budget recommended, as I recall the figures.

In this connection I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the Commission has stationed one of its staff in the office of the House Committee on the Civil Service, room 246, in the old House Office Building. He will be there from 9 until 3 every day and from 9 until 12 on Saturday for the purpose of being of service to the Members of the House and their secretaries in dealing with any matters you may have with reference to the civil service. Mr. Robert L. Bailey is the contact man they have stationed in that position. I have found him to be a very capable and a very affable gentleman. He is there for your service for the purpose of enabling you to give better service to your constituents on matters affecting the civil service.

I again wish to express my appreciation to the Committee for this appropriation. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND

For financing of the liability of the United States, created by the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1920, and acts amendatory thereof (38 U. S. C. 11), $86,329,000, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the "civil-service retirement and disability fund."

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been flying aircraft for a little longer than 10 years, and I believe I know something about aviation. I want the Members of Congress to know that we had safe aviation before we had officials sitting here in the Civil Aeronautics Authority office in Washington. Safety does not depend on an office in Washington. The Civil Aeronautics Authority is merely a regulatory body. It controls the lighting of the airways, the beams, markers, and so forth. The safety of air transportation and the safety of the passengers depends on the private companies and on the pilots of the planes and not on the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

My statement is merely to give credit to the men who pioneered in aviation.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY

The unexpended balance on June 30, 1939, of the "Conversion of inhabited alleys fund," established pursuant to the provisions of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, together with all accretions during the fiscal year 1940 to said fund under the provisions of said act and of the United States Housing Act of 1937 shall be available until June 30, 1940, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia.

Does the provision for the Alley Dwelling Authority contemplate that the Authority is going to wind up its affairs in the course of time, or is there a revolving fund the Authority uses?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is a revolving fund, and the Authority gets more money from the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. They have to lay out their program so they use the same money over and over, and, as they reconstruct buildings or erect new buildings, they are compensated by careful management of their properties and the rent on such buildings. In other words, they are demonstrating that low-cost housing can be made self-supporting by careful management.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I just wanted to bring out these facts because it seems to me the Authority is doing an excellent job and I wanted to comment on it.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all printing and binding for the Federal Power Commission, including engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, $85,000.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, the matter I desire to bring to the attention of the House at this time is a telegram which I will read and comment on for a moment. This telegram is dated yesterday and was sent from Lawrenceburg, Ind., to Hon. EUGENE B. CROWE, Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

Ohio River reaches threatening stage here tomorrow morning. Had rain occurred above Cincinnati and below Big Sandy, it is likely 1937 would be repeated, or, if rains come, may still repeat. Cannot appropriation for levee be passed and the people assured that relief of the hazardous condition immediately started? The public is much aroused, wanting to send 100 or more telegrams to you today. What is the present situation?

LAWRENCEBURG LEVEE COMMITTEE,
V. M. O'SHAUGHNESSY, Chairman.

At about this time 2 years ago, on January 21, 1937, the floodwaters of the Ohio River overflowed the levees at the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and at Jeffersonville, Ind., as well as other points along the Ohio River, and flooded some 11 States. Many millions of dollars' loss was sustained at Lawrenceburg, Aurora, Rising Sun, Patriot, Vevay, Madison, Utica, Jeffersonville, Clarksville, and other points in my district. According to the figures of the War Department, more than $400,000,000 of property was destroyed by that flood, although $800,000,000 is the figure placed on the damage by many people who have taken a survey of the situation. More than 1,000,000 people were rendered homeless and were removed from their homes, many by train as the water was coming over the tracks and many by trucks and automobiles. They were taken out on rafts, in boats, motorboats, canoes, and what not. The suffering lasted for many days, for many weeks, and in cases many months. Thus you can understand the conditions and the mental feeling of everyone who lives along the Ohio River when the floods come as they have in the Ohio River at this time.

I am informed the War Department has estimated that approximately $195,000,000 is needed for flood-control levees, and so forth, throughout the United States at this time. This money is needed now. However, I understand the Budget will reduce the figure perhaps to $110,000,000. Really, in the Ohio River Valley alone, something like $100,000,000 is needed this year for necessary levees and flood walls for protection; not for the future but immediately.

The city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., pays yearly in taxes into the Federal Government at least six to eight times the amount required to give that city the needed protection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If instead of cluttering up the Ohio River with low dams they had built high dams on the Ohio and its tributaries, as they have on the Tennessee River, you would now be protected from these disastrous floods. The amendments we put in the flood-control bill last year enable the Federal Government now to go ahead and really control floods on those streams and at the same time improve navigation and utilize the water power.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I am not fully conversant with that matter, but, no doubt, the gentleman is right, because he is quite an authority on matters of this kind. No Member of the House has rendered finer service to the House on the power question than has the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. The thing I am particularly interested in at this time is the appropriation of a reasonable amount of funds by the Congress to start these levees and floodwalls. Another thing which should be incorporated in the legislation this year is a renewal of the program of 1937, which would permit the President in cities where they are financially unable to furnish all the lands and rights-of-way to furnish up to one-half of that expense by the Federal Government. Two cities of which Paducah, Ky., is one, have been granted this privilege. It is now unfair to ask other cities which have as little ability and as little funds to supply it 100 percent. This should also be incorporated in the legislation. I propose to do everything I can to bring this legislation to a successful conclusion.

LIGHT AND POWER RATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crowe] has had to say. We have never controlled the floods in this country on any stream so far, except the Tennessee River. Norris Dam, 2 years ago, saved the city of Cairo, Ill.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. And also the Colorado River.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from California says they have controlled floods on the Colorado River. I accept the correction. That is because of Boulder Dam. We are now getting ready to control floods on the Columbia River because of Grand Coulee and Bonneville.

Whenever we can build high dams on the Ohio and its tributaries such as we have built on the Tennessee, the Columbia, and the Colorado, we cannot only improve its navigation perfectly but we can also control its floods and at the same time generate for the people of Ohio and the surrounding country hundreds of thousands of horsepower of electric energy to be used for the benefit of those people in that area for all time to come. The sooner this is done the better. You will never control floods by building levees or by building low dams.

However, I want to call your attention to the last word in this paragraph I am supposed to speak on. I want to speak to you for a moment on the work of the Federal Power Commission. In my opinion, the Federal Power Commission has done more for the American people in the last 4 years than it had done in all the years of its existence up to 1934 by carrying out the provisions of a resolution which Senator NORRIS and I got passed a few years ago to make and publish a survey of the power rates in every State of this Union and in every municipality or every community of 250 people, giving the county information on power rates.

You might as well get ready, because you are going to have to put up with me the rest of this Congress, at least, and I am going to cross-examine you gentlemen who get up here and attack the T. V. A. or Rural Electrification Administration. I am going to cross-examine you on what power rates your people pay. A man who does not know what electricity costs the people in his home town is not qualified to discuss the power question on this floor. I am going to tell you where you can get that information and how to make your comparisons. Call up the Federal Power Commission and have them send you the power-rates survey for your own State. Then if you want to know how they compare with the T. V. A. rates you send and get one for Mississippi or Tennessee. If you get one for Mississippi, of course, look at Tupelo, Corinth, Amory, or other surrounding towns. If you want to know how they compare with the far West, send down and get one for the State of Washington and compare your rates with what is paid in Tacoma, Wash., or in Seattle. Send and get one for the State of California and see what electricity costs in Los Angeles, the home of the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. Ford], and you will realize what your people ought to pay for electricity. If we could reduce those rates all over the country to those levels we would save the American people $1,000,000,000 a year on their light and power bills alone.

That is what I am driving at. The greatest natural resource in all the world outside of the soil from which we live is the water power in our navigable streams and their tributaries. What I am trying to do is to get that water power developed and distributed to your people at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution.

This is not the Government going into a private business. The power business is a public business. It is necessarily a monopoly, and when private power companies accuse the Government of going into a private business they overlook the fact that they themselves are trying to run a public business and the Federal Government is trying to protect the American people.

Let me say to you, gentlemen, do not any of you from the coal districts deceive yourselves. One of the leading experts that the power companies sent to testify in the T. V. A. investigation said that with $3 coal they can generate power at 4.18 mills a kilowatt-hour.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. This is cheaper—4.18 mills a kilowatt is cheaper than any municipality in the Tennessee Valley area buys T. V. A. power. You can generate power with coal and distribute it all over this country at the standard T. V. A. rates, without loss, and yet you have the National Coal Association, a bunch of operators who are fighting this program, trying to wring from the coal consumers in this country higher prices for coal. They are interlocked with the utilities to such an extent that people in the coal area are being overcharged—people who live next door to the mines are being overcharged for electric lights and power just as badly as if they lived 300 miles away.

This is a national issue; it is one of the greatest issues the American people have before them today—that of bringing to every home, to every store, and to every business establishment an abundance of electricity at proper rates.

In Europe, outside of Russia and probably some of the Balkan States, from 90 to 100 percent of the farmers have electricity in their homes. In Switzerland it is probably 100 percent. Others are making drives for the same purpose.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman tell us the source of the figures that the farmers in France, at least 90 percent of them, have electricity?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I got the figures from the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. MILLER. Then the gentleman will permit me to say that I saw a good many farms in France just a year ago, and they are just as they were 20 years ago, still burning candles.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, the gentleman has looked over areas in the United States and seen thousands of farms with high-powered lines running right over the houses that cannot even get any service.

In New Zealand, a sparsely settled country, 65 percent of the farmers have electricity.

We can put electricity into every farm home in America without burdening anybody, by developing the water power of this Nation, and squeezing the water out of existing power stocks, and reducing rates to their proper levels.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman expect to furnish power to everybody in this country by doing the same thing that they are doing down in Tennessee now; namely, buying up all of the public utilities?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he guessed exactly right. I would like to say that it is the policy to spread through this Nation—

Mr. RICH. That is what I thought you were trying to do—Russianize the Government and take over everything.

Mr. RANKIN. No; I am trying to Americanize it. I am in favor of carrying this power policy even as far as the city of Williamsport, Pa., the gentleman's home town. I do not want to leave anybody out.

Mr. RICH. Oh, we have electricity in Williamsport now, it is right there now, but we in Williamsport do not want to pay for buying all of the power companies and thus Russianizing the Government. They are Americans up there.

Mr. RANKIN. Then they should be treated as Americans and not as slaves of the Power Trust.

His people buy their electricity from the Pennsylvania Power Co., and as a rule they are overcharged at least 100 percent.

I will give you the comparison of the rates in Williamsport with the T. V. A. rates. Since the residential consumers in Pennsylvania use less than 60 kilowatt-hours a month I will just run the figures up to 100 kilowatt-hours a month.

The first 25 kilowatt-hours a month in Tupelo, Miss., under the T. V. A. rates cost 75 cents; in Williamsport, Pa., the cost would be $1.90. In Tupelo, Miss., 40 kilowatt-hours cost $1.20; in Williamsport, Pa., it costs $2.89. In Tupelo 100 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.50; in Williamsport, Pa., it costs $5.28.

In other words, the domestic consumers in Williamsport are paying tribute to the Power Co. in overcharges of more than 100 percent.

The burden on your commercial consumers, that is your merchants, hotel, restaurant, filling-station operators, and others who pay commercial rates, is even greater. For instance, in Tupelo under the T. V. A. rates 150 kilowatt-hours a month costs the commercial consumer $4.50; in Williamsport, Pa., it costs $9.40. In Tupelo 375 kilowatt-hours a month costs the commercial consumer $10; in Williamsport it costs $19.80. In Tupelo 750 kilowatt-hours costs the commercial consumer $17.50; in Williamsport it costs $37.60. In Tupelo 6,000 kilowatt-hours a month costs the commercial consumer $90; in Williamsport, Pa., it costs $211.50.

What I am trying to do is to bring light and power rates down to the T. V. A. levels, not only to the people of Mississippi, but to the people of Pennsylvania, including the ones at Williamsport, and to the people in every other State in this Union, including every farmer in America.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Salaries and expenses: For the Archivist and for all other authorized expenditures of The National Archives in carrying out the provisions of the Act of June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1122-1124; 40 U. S. C. ch. 2A), as amended; the act of July 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 500-503; U. S. C., Supp. II, title 44, ch. 8A), as amended; including personal services in the District of Columbia; supplies and equipment, including scientific, technical, first-aid, protective, and other apparatus and materials for the arrangement, titling, scoring, repair, processing, editing, duplication, reproduction, and authentication of photographic and other records (including motion-picture and other films and sound recordings) in the custody of the Archivist; purchase and exchange of books, including law books, books of reference, maps, and charts; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase of newspapers, periodicals, and press clippings; not to exceed $100 for payment in advance when authorized by the Archivist for library membership in societies whose publications are available to members only or to members at a price lower than to the general public; travel expenses, including not to exceed $1,000 for the expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of The National Archives; repairs to equipment; purchase, exchange, maintenance and operation of motor vehicles; and all other necessary expenses, $850,000: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for The National Archives when the aggregate cost involved does not exceed the sum of $50.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOSER: Page 31, line 12, after the word "expenses", strike out "$850,000" and insert "$775,000." In line 14, strike out the word "not", and in line 15, after the word "Archives", strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we have passed that paragraph of the bill. We have read through line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair we were reading rather rapidly, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] had called the attention of the Chair that he wished to introduce an amendment at this point. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered because The National Archives came into this House last year and had placed in the independent offices appropriation bill a provision which placed them under the civil service. This year they have gone before the committee and have asked for another $75,000, stating that it is their purpose to employ an additional 33 clerks. If we consider the merit system and adopt the principle of efficiency and recognize the merit system as something promoting efficiency, it is scarcely justifiable that this Congress should proceed and in 1 year give them an additional 33 clerks. In addition to this, there is mention of the fact that they propose to remove about 112,000 cubic feet of records this year, and appropriations are included for that purpose. The amendment will require them to get competitive bids for any necessary removal from garages or other places of storage of records to be placed in The Archives Building proper. I feel that part of the act which specifies a minimum of $50 should be taken out, and that is the further purpose of this amendment. There is no reason why the Revised Statutes should be set aside to exempt people in The Archives Division from its exactions in respect to removals from garages and other places, to permit items of less than $50 for transferring, and make them cumulative from time to time whenever they feel they can spend $50 or a less amount. That is the purpose of the latter part of the amendment. The first part is for the purpose solely of having The National Archives operate on the economical basis we were led to believe they were able to operate when they adopted the merit system and adopted civil service for The Archives. I feel this Committee should adopt this amendment, believing it is solely in the interest of economy and that it will promote efficiency.

There is much that could be said about The Archives that does not relate to this particular section or to this amendment, particularly with reference to the cost and utility of the Federal Register, which I shall not go into at this time. I trust that the Committee may see fit to adopt this amendment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Do I understand that the 33 clerks will be taken on without competitive examination?

Mr. MOSER. Nothing is said about that, but under the present rule they would be required to take a competitive examination, if it is adhered to. I suspect they have the 33 clerks already selected and recommended for noncompetitive examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, The National Archives is not one of the new mushroom agencies that has sprung up under the recent regime. It is an agency for which the minority party can take a portion of the credit or blame, according to whether you consider it a credit or a blame. I think it is a much-needed institution in the Federal Government. If time permitted, which it does not, I might enlarge upon it to show you that prior to the time we had this depository for valuable governmental papers they were stored in cellars and rat holes and every other place in the District of Columbia. The Bureau of the Budget allowed them a very modest increase in personnel to take care of the task of moving these valuable Government documents into The Archives and fixing them for preservation.

The clerks will come in under competitive civil-service examination.

I am unable to follow the logic of the other question involved in the gentleman's amendment. The language of the bill simply permits The National Archives not to have to advertise for bids when the amount involved is not in excess of $50. I think that would commend itself to the business judgment of any citizen. Where an agency has a moving job, hauling some of these papers from a department to The Archives, or anything of that nature, it would be silly to compel them to go through the formality of calling for competitive bids on such a hauling job.

I very much hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser] will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moser) there were ayes 83 and noes 92.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For three Board members, and for all other authorized and necessary expenditures of the National Labor Relations Board in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including rent and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; repairs and alterations; communications; contract stenographic reporting services; law books; books of reference; newspapers; periodicals; operation, maintenance, and repair of one automobile; $3,039,600: Provided, That the Board may procure supplies and services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $50.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York for the information of the Committee, and the amendment will be pending on the resumption of the session of the Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Beginning on page 32, in line 18, strike out the remainder of page 32, down to and including line 5 on page 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be pending when the Committee resumes its session.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SMITH of Virginia) having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3743, the independent offices appropriation bill, 1940, had directed him to report it had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and include certain charts and tables from the hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TAXATION OF COMPENSATION OF PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. DOUGHTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next it may be in order to consider the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees; that there may be 3 hours of general debate, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the ranking Republican member on the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am so assured.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I contacted the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and they said it was entirely agreeable to them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask if it is the purpose of the majority leader then to adjourn from Thursday until Monday, upon the passage of this bill on Thursday?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct. It had been the hope that we would reach the so-called May bill on Thursday, but, as the gentleman knows, a great many Members, especially on his side of the aisle, desire to be away Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, and some of them on Monday. So the program now is to dispose of this bill on Thursday and adjourn until Monday, and then take up the May bill for general debate on Monday and try to finish it on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein certain excerpts from the hearings and other relevant matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 84

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Expenditures in the Executive Departments: Mr. Schulte, of Indiana; Mr. Claypool, of Ohio; Mr. John L. McMillan, of South Carolina.

Committee on Roads: Mr. Crowe, of Indiana.

Committee on Insular Affairs: Mr. Beckworth, of Texas.

Committee on Mines and Mining: Mr. Murdock of Arizona.

Committee on Elections No. 3: Mr. John L. McMillan, of South Carolina.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOOR OF MEETING THURSDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the message of the President today in reference to the Works Progress Administration, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a bill which I introduced today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

H. R. 3743

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the House, H. R. 3743, making appropriations for the Executive Office and other independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and so forth, carries with it appropriations of a staggering sum. When we are called upon to vote on this bill no choice will be left a Member of the House except to vote "yes" or "no" on the entire measure.

There are a number of items in the bill which have my full approval. The appropriation for the Veterans' Administration, Civil Service Commission, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and many more. There are other appropriations included in the bill which I cannot support. There is an increase of more than a quarter of a million dollars for the National Labor Relations Board and $16,000,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority which I cannot support. It is to the latter subject that I desire to address my attention.

One of the questions occupying the minds of the American people today is how long can America continue to authorize $9,000,000,000 Budgets in the face of $5,000,000,000 tax receipts? How long can this Government continue to function with annual deficits of nearly $4,000,000,000? How far beyond a national debt of $45,000,000,000 can this country go before it reaches the brink of national bankruptcy? How much further can we strain the credit of the Nation before that credit is exhausted? How much further can we plunge this Nation into debt before we face inevitably either inflation or repudiation? Every thoughtful person is asking himself these questions. And yet in the face of that condition we are confronted with appropriations carried in this bill, including the expenditure of money on new dams and appropriating more money for the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam in the Tennessee Valley Authority.

There is a limit even to the credit of the United States, and that limit may be nearer than many Members of this House realize. There is no attempt being made by the administration to economize, and every effort on the part of the House of Representatives is met by rebuke and criticism of those in high authority in the Government.

The Members of the House also have a mandate from the people in spite of the Public Treasury's use to influence them otherwise. Economy in government is a necessity, that we as the people's Representatives must recognize, in the face of the decree issued by the electorate at the polls on the 8th day of last November. This is one of the big issues before the country today and this Congress cannot discharge its duty to the American people unless it is willing to face the issue courageously. It is my judgment that to continue, the course this Nation is now following will be fatal to America and insolvency will be the final result.

On two former occasions this House refused to grant an appropriation of approximately $3,000,000 to begin the construction of Gilbertsville Dam. At a time when many Members who were opposed to the project were absent from the House, it was brought in a third time and passed by the slim margin of 7 votes. It is here again, this time asking for approximately $12,500,000, and two new dams are contained in the bill, namely, Watts bar for $4,252,000 and Coulter Shoals for $228,000, and for tributaries $220,000, or a total of more than $17,000,000.

I call the attention of the House to the language on page 47 of the bill, lines 14 to 17, inclusive, which read:

And for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and for preliminary investigations of sites for dams at or near Coulter Shoals on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and on tributaries of said river.

But a vote for these items does not mean a vote of $17,000,000 alone. It means a vote of $166,000,000, the estimated cost to complete the three projects.

It seems to be the theory that once Congress is embarked upon a costly folly the Federal Government is compelled to complete it. At least in two instances this Congress refused to follow that course in denying further appropriations for the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy, and neither is it too late for this Congress to stop the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam. Only about $5,000,000 of the total has been expended on this project, and less than $1,000,000 of the total estimated cost of $64,000,000 has been expended on the preliminary work at Watts bar and Coulter Shoals. These amounts may be saved to the American people by abandoning the present plan to build these costly dams and construct navigation dams instead.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] this afternoon declare here on the floor that the Gilbertsville Dam was the key dam for the improvement and navigation of the Tennessee River. I call his attention to the statement—in reference to this same dam—of one of the most distinguished Members of this body, an eminent authority on the subject of navigation in this country, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD], the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, who declared on the floor of this House on the 22d of March 1938, page 3876 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, that, and I quote:

One thought I want to leave in your minds: Whenever you build this Gilbertsville Dam, according to the plans that are now under consideration, you may have a power dam, you may have a flood-control dam, but take it from me, in my horse-sense view, you totally destroy navigation.

This House does not realize that we are building an inland empire in the Tennessee Valley Authority at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation in a vain attempt to produce electric energy for less than it can be produced by private investment companies. The T. V. A. yardstick has been held up as a glowing example of what Government can do, but when the people once understand and learn the truth of what this Government is doing with their money a solemn protest will be lodged against it.

I am not one of those who believe that suddenly someone has discovered that electric energy can be produced for about one-half or less by the Government than anyone else can produce it. The joint congressional committee appointed to investigate the T. V. A. has forced that agency to divulge some carefully guarded secrets. These concern mainly the method by which that agency allocated costs to the various functions of the system, such as flood control, navigation, and power. It was brought to light by the committee of the multiple use of the dams that 62 percent of the cost is charged off against navigation and flood control, leaving arbitrarily only 38 percent to power. This ridiculous percentage of cost to power at Gilbertsville Dam still shows a per kilowatt cost for installed power of $277 as against $64 for Wilson Dam. This House did not know that fact a year ago, and if the Members of this body vote to continue Gilbertsville Dam they are doing so with their eyes wide open to the facts.

It would be interesting, indeed, for the country to know why the comprehensive plans of the Tennessee River prepared by the Army engineers, at a cost of nearly a million dollars has been abandoned and forgotten. That plan called for a complete development of the Tennessee River at a total estimated cost of $77,000,000.

The present installed program is estimated to cost the people of the Nation anywhere between five hundred million and a billion dollars.

It should always be borne in mind that neither interest nor taxes are ever charged against the T. V. A. yardstick. It was estimated in the appropriation for the fiscal year of 1939 that the total installed capacity of Gilbertsville Dam was 192,000 kilowatts. It now is known from the testimony of Mr. J. S. Krug, chief power-planning engineer of the T. V. A., that the T. V. A. intends to install but 128,000 kilowatts at Gilbertsville, or 64,000 less than the figure previously stated and 32,000 kilowatts less than the 160,000 kilowatts now considered as the ultimate capacity of this project. From studies made it appears that out of a total cost of $112,000,000 for Gilbertsville Dam about $35,000,000 will be charged to power, and this amounts to an average of $275 per kilowatt of stored capacity. This is far above the cost per kilowatt for the estimated cost of all other dams in the T. V. A. This power is not necessary. It will prove a waste of public money, and the appropriation contained in this bill for continuing work on that dam should be defeated.

The appropriation for Watts bar of $4,252,000 and Coulter Shoals for $228,000 and the tributaries of $220,000 should be stricken from the bill entirely in order to save this country from being plunged further into debt by this useless and unnecessary expenditure of money.

The T. V. A. yardstick is not an honest yardstick, and the claims that are being made for it are mostly the result of arbitrary allotments of money, questionable bookkeeping, and an attempt to paint a rainbow of abundant life under planned economy at a terrific cost to the taxpayers of the country.

If the T. V. A. agency operated under the same conditions, the same cost, the same expenses, and the same restrictions as private investment or private utilities, it would not make the claims and representations attributed to it. Instead of a profit, it is operating at a deficit, and the power feature alone, if charged with a very low interest rate of 3½ percent, would show a deficit of more than two and a half million dollars for 1938.

Let us strike out all three appropriations for the dams specified.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution passed by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana commending Members of the Congress of the United States for introducing a bill designed to guarantee to farmers the cost of production.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESSANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement signed by the two United States Senators from Maryland and the Maryland delegation in the House, together with a brief resolution adopted by the Baltimore City Council.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

STOP FARM LOSS THROUGH NOXIOUS WEEDS

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, the destruction of good land by noxious weeds has moved so rapidly it has assumed the proportions of a national agricultural problem commensurate with that of the Dust Bowl. These weeds infest to some degree thousands of farms and are widely prevalent in practically every State in the Union. Millions of acres are involved, and in some places land values—tax values—of extensive tracts are destroyed. In all probability noxious weeds are the greatest menace from nature that agriculture is facing in this country, because of the serious economic loss involved. The annual loss to farmers caused by weeds has been estimated as high as $3,000,000,000, almost one-third of the total farm income. This is 3 times the loss by reason of insect pests of plants, and 12 times the loss suffered through animal diseases. It is only within the last few years that we have recognized the serious implications of the steadily advancing spread of the perennial weeds, particularly in the West and Northwest over the Great Plains area. They are today greatly reducing the total value of farm production. So rapidly do the perennial weeds spread that some of them, for example the bindweed, will double their area in 5 years if not brought under control.

WEEDS REDUCE FARM VALUES

The Federal Land Banks, which hold today practically one-half of the farm mortgages of the United States, are insisting that appraisers make careful survey of noxious weed infestation on all lands offered for loans. If the infestation is at all serious, and the acreage involved is large, the loan is refused. Other lending agencies are also insisting that the land be practically free from noxious weeds, before they will consider loans. Land values throughout the entire country have been reduced, because of noxious weeds, on an average of from $10 to $20 an acre.

WEED-CONTROL LEGISLATION

State legislation has been enacted, and many types of bills are being proposed and introduced in Congress to control or stamp out these costly pests. We have had research as to the extent of the spread and methods of control. We have considered preventive measures in pure seed bills. Proposals have been made for vast expenditures for weed control and eradication without specifying methods of destruction, but providing cooperative procedures and further experimentation. None so far have reached the heart of the problem. Heretofore no clearly defined and specific program for weed control throughout the Nation has been proposed. Mine is inclusive, offering a plan and a method which is applicable to all States facing the problem and willing to cooperate with the Federal Government.

CONGRESS ORDERS WEED-CONTROL RESEARCH

Recognizing the seriousness of the weed menace, the Seventy-fourth Congress authorized the Department of Agriculture to carry out "investigations of chemicals for the control of noxious weeds and plants." The report was made in January 1937, and it will, I hope, soon be ordered printed so its important findings may be utilized by the States and by groups working on the problem. The report is concerned largely with sodium chlorate manufacture, distribution, and use. The importance of this herbicide was made so clear and its agricultural value so apparent that the matters of cost and distribution now become questions of immediate importance.

NEW PLAN PROPOSED

That report and the building by the Government of the great Bonneville Dam providing, as a byproduct, an abundance of cheap electric power, have led me to the preparation and introduction of a bill—H. R. 196—which appears to me to be of outstanding importance as a measure of farm relief. That bill puts Nation and State back of the farmer in his struggle to overcome the ravages of Nature which he could not successfully battle individually. Weeds cross all lines between national, state, county, and neighborhood boundaries.

The urgency of the problem and the necessity for legislation lead me to ask the attention of this House as I set forth some of the facts about the extent of the weed menace and a proposal for dealing with it expeditiously and without great expenditures from the Federal Treasury. Science has once again come to the aid of the farmer, and the results of Government scientific research may be beneficially applied for farmers if we Members of Congress inform ourselves and agree to proceed intelligently. Listen, then, to the story of the weeds:

HOW WEEDS ARE SPREAD

The presence of noxious weeds, and the continued spread of the weed-infested areas, is not solely the fault of the farmer.

The county, state, and federal governments are also to blame and must assume their share of the burden of eradication. Monopoly control of chlorate production has been a contributing factor. It is known that weed seeds are transferred by windstorms, sandstorms, irrigation ditches, farm machinery, motor and railway vehicles, by livestock, especially sheep, by birds, and by interstate traffic in feeds and seeds. Even the airplane often has seeds and weeds as unlisted passengers and has become an agency for spreading weeds swiftly and widely. The individual farmer has no control over these forces and factors. Furthermore, even if he could afford it, the farmer by himself cannot wage a campaign against the spread of noxious weeds. Undertaking such a task would be futile. He cannot command nor control his neighbors nor clear public lands and highways.

Many of the weeds appear to have started in the Northwestern States. Weeds were undoubtedly first introduced by emigrants who brought from other lands seeds of their favorite grains. Most of the farmers knew nothing of the menace, and by the harrow, the plow, and the cultivator they spread the weeds over their lands. A root, picked up at the point of infestation, might be carried 20 or 30 rods and there start a new crop. In the irrigated lands of the West noxious weeds spread with great rapidity, especially along the uncultivated banks of ditches carrying water from the channels into the fields.

Most of the noxious weeds will not be eaten by stock under any conditions, and some of the weeds, if cut with hay, prove poisonous to stock even in the cured form. They are a menace without a redeeming good quality.

TENANT FARMING INCREASES WEED MENACE

Much of the rapid growth of weed infestation is traceable to neglect by the tenant farmers, who cannot afford to kill weeds and lack the incentive. A few years ago, when farmers were quite generally cultivating their own fields, they took an interest in the land and saw to it that the values of their farms increased. A good farmer would not permit his land to be ruined by noxious weeds which would destroy crops and render the ground unproductive. With the increase of tenant farmers, who are not encouraged to build up land values but forced to mine the soil and to farm cheaply, weeds spread at a furious rate without hindrance. The tenant makes no attempt to clean up infested areas, nor to prevent spread, as he can more easily move to another farm, leaving ruin behind him.

Rented lands will be kept productive only if costs of eradication are reduced and some premium offered for cooperation in weed control as part of the soil-conservation program. Under my bill it is possible for tenants to become part of the compulsory control program because they are aided by the States which accept benefits offered by the Federal Government. The tenant becomes a working member of a large group upon which cooperation is obligatory.

PURE-SEED LAWS

The control and regulation of the traffic in seeds is the best preventive measure against new weed infestation. Such seed legislation does not, however, solve the problem of getting rid of the weeds that are now with us.

Many of the States have passed pure-seed laws. Some are really enforcing them. This Seventy-sixth Congress should enact a stringent seed act, national in scope, regulating the importation of foreign seeds and controlling transportation of seeds and grains across State lines. No doubt this would work hardship upon importers of foreign seeds, but the American farmer must be protected.

Seed-cleaning plants must not be allowed to sell screenings to poultry or sheep feeders if they contain noxious-weed seeds. From many of these mills you can follow the trail of carriers from the vendor of the screenings to the home feed yard by the growth of noxious weeds along the roads.

KINDS OF NOXIOUS WEEDS

Annual weeds that grow from seeds alone are quite easily controlled by the ordinary farm methods of cultivation. Perennial weeds which propagate from the roots, as well as from seeds, are the only ones which concern us. Especially harmful are those which have an extensive underground stem or root system, growing deeply into the soil, far below the reach of any plow. Most of them have joints in their roots and at these joints they send up sprouts to the top of the soil, spreading from this underground growth. Very few of these weeds are natives of North America. Most of them are importations from Asia and Europe, especially from the countries around the Baltic Sea. Among the most serious of the noxious weeds are Canadian thistle, wild morning glory, field bindweed, sometimes called "creeping Jenny," Russian knap weed, quackgrass, white top, Johnson grass, St. Johnswort, perennial sowthistle, Australian fieldcress, and field pepper grass. It is important to note that each type of weed has characteristics which determine control methods.

UNIVERSALITY OF WEED MENACE

A national weed-control conference was held in Des Moines, Iowa, in October 1938. Its report gives startling evidence of the universality of the weed problem and the general agreement on several points: (1) That the extent of weed infestation by noxious perennials has passed beyond the small-area stage and that entire farms and sections are completely infested; (2) that the long and costly process of cultural control must be applied to extensive areas; (3) that chemical control through herbicides is now imperative; (4) that Federal aid in supplying chemicals—sodium chlorate—is necessary. Every Congressman representing agricultural sections should study the report.

I quote a few startling sentences for the purpose of bringing home to my colleagues the fact that this matter concerns them and their people. Each statement was made by an authority.

We have in Illinois 100,000 acres of Canada thistle scattered over 79 of the 102 counties. We have had but 1 year in which European bindweed has been considered a noxious weed, and we have well over 100,000 acres.

The loss due to weeds in Indiana has been estimated at approximately $44,000,000 per year. There is one 90-acre farm in the State that is completely covered with bindweed.

We (in Missouri) made a survey last year and found about 10,000 farms infested. This year's survey showed 16,000 infested farms.

We have somewhere around 37,000,000 acres in farms (in South Dakota), and about one-third of this farm land infested with bindweed. The loss from creeping Jenny is estimated at $6,000,000 in 1935.

At the present time, according to the available information, Nebraska has about 400,000 acres of bindweed. Every county has some, and most farms have small patches.

Here is the peculiar thing about it, and this is probably true in most of the other States, of our eight primary noxious weeds here in Iowa, there is only one which is a native of the United States, and that happens to be horse-nettle. We know that field bindweed exists in approximately 70 counties in this State.

I quote on the situation in California as set forth at another weed conference:

St. Johnswort has crowded out all the forage plants until now they can't get an animal ready for market on 70 acres of land where it took only 7 acres to keep one cow before this infestation came in. You can see what that loss has been to the cattle and sheep industry in California.

The county agricultural agent in one county that I represent in Congress asked me to make an inspection of the spread of the morning glory there. This agent told me that he believed there were 3,000 acres of farming land in that county infested with morning glory. After many miles of travel we concluded that we saw fully 10,000 acres, more or less, infested with noxious weeds, especially morning glory. Some farms had been abandoned—farms that I knew in my boyhood days to be most productive. It was a serious shock to me to see the utter waste and ruin, knowing how valuable the land was at one time, and still would be if the fields of morning glory were eradicated.

WEED ERADICATION REQUIRES GOVERNMENTAL ACTION

Weed eradication is a national problem, requiring vigorous and closely integrated action. A successful plan to eradicate weeds must involve participation by the farmers as well as by the county, state, and federal governments, all of which are concerned to save and restore land values and to compensate for past neglect. This sharing of responsibility in the eradication of weeds is a democratic approach to the problem. It is in accord with the principles of a self-governing people and involves a just division of the burden.

It would be unjust for government, state or national, to attempt to saddle on the farmer the entire expense of weed eradication. In the first place, the cost would approximate $1,000 per 100-acre farm of 25-percent infestation, and very few farmers have the available cash for such an undertaking. Furthermore, no plan for weed control can be successful unless it involves an integration of scientifically detailed State plans with county directional activities, both relying on the cooperation of the farmer. The farmer must assume the final responsibility for the eradication of weeds from his land, but he should not be left solely to his own resources, for such a scheme would be doomed to failure. He could not have the scientific knowledge, he could not finance buying of chemicals, and he would always be at the mercy of other landowners. He must have the cooperation of his neighbors and the county and state authorities in order to insure against prompt reinfestation if there is neglect. We cannot require him to act without the supplementary help of the Government reaching down to him through state and county authorities and insuring the cooperation of his neighbors.

CONTROL OF WEEDS BY AGRICULTURAL TECHNIQUES

It is well known that noxious weeds can be brought under some control and possibly eradicated by agricultural methods, for example, clean cultivation and the planting of competitive crops. Each of these methods has been found to possess merit in certain localities. In general, however, they are too slow or too costly. If noxious weeds are never allowed to grow green leaves above the ground, they cannot get the necessary nourishment to sustain life. If the land can be kept black, free from green leaves, the roots will be killed. However, weeds often lie in the ground for years and at the right time under right conditions they grow. The majority of farmers could not afford to subject their land to clean cultivation which often requires approximately 2 years to bring about complete eradication. The ordinary farmer cannot pay taxes and expenses for cultivation during these years when no crop is grown. When a quarter or a third of the land is clean cultivated, we are still confronted with the normal expansion of weed infestation from the untreated areas. On the Pacific coast we have a method of farming extensively practiced. We plow the ground one year, let it lie fallow that year, and then sow it the following year, reaping a crop of grain every 2 years. This plan makes it difficult to destroy noxious weeds, because the cultivator, nor plow, does not touch the land for a whole year.

CHEMICAL HERBICIDES NECESSARY

Chemical herbicides must be employed in conjunction with the aforementioned agricultural technique in order to insure definite headway against the weed menace. It is agreed that chemical treatment is needed to supplement cultural methods and that only chemical treatment is efficacious for certain places. There is no other practical method of killing the noxious weeds in the fence corners, along the ditch lines, highways, railroad rights-of-way, and all other spots where it is impossible to practice clean cultivation. The availability of chlorates at a low cost is necessary for the success of a weed-control program. The high cost of sodium chlorate has prevented weed-control, thus bringing ruin to farms and farmers for the enrichment of a monopoly.

Faced with the necessity of clean cultivation or the costly application of sodium chlorate at present prices for chlorate, the farmer moves off and allows the land to be sold for taxes or to revert to the mortgagee. He becomes a tenant elsewhere or a transient laborer. Society then must bear the burden of another discouraged and impoverished family.

SODIUM CHLORATE THE BEST HERBICIDE

A successful plan for the control and eradication of noxious weeds necessitates the use of chemical herbicides, according to plans and programs carried out for a considerable number of years before the menace is brought entirely under control. Of the known useful chemicals, sodium chlorate has given the best results. Reports of field investigations indicate that this chemical is probably the most effective general herbicide, being useful in practically all climates and on all soils. It is particularly efficacious in combating noxious weeds. Sodium chlorate is recommended as the best all-round herbicide by practically all experienced county agricultural agents who have responsibilities relating to the control and eradication of noxious weeds.

Our Department of Agriculture, realizing the necessity for serious attention to noxious-weed infestation, has made a very careful and thorough study of herbicides and is now in a position to assume responsibilities for the important program I have incorporated in my bill. In carrying out the will of the Seventy-fourth Congress, the Department set up a small experimental chlorate plant which is now in operation at the Arlington Experimental Farm in Virginia, where investigations are being conducted on various phases of chlorate production, the objects being to develop an efficient manufacturing technique and to learn the actual cost of production.

The result of this experimentation has encouraged me to prepare and introduce my bill—H. R. 196—which puts the Government back of the farmer in his fight to keep his lands productive. I propose an enlargement and extension of the Department's work for the benefit of the entire country, providing a manufacturing plant for sodium chlorate which will serve as a price regulator and also for production on a scale which will benefit the farmers of all States undertaking weed-control programs. A great source of cheap electricity at tide-water offers a unique opportunity for this undertaking.

SODIUM CHLORATE PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES

Sodium chlorate is made from common salt. Large quantities of electricity are required to transform the brine solution into sodium chlorate, and for this reason chlorates are always made at a source of cheap electric power. I have been amazed at the facts learned during my investigation of the weed problem. A complete monopoly is aided and abetted by Government which allows millions to be accumulated by the privileged few and destroys values of rich farm lands because weed-control herbicides are too costly.

In the United States there is at present only one large commercial producer of sodium chlorate, with a plant located at Niagara Falls, N. Y. It is believed that the annual domestic production is in the neighborhood of ten to twelve million pounds. This quantity is supplemented by importations from Germany, France, and other countries, also largely handled by one firm. The annual importations vary over a very wide range from one to nine million pounds. During the year 1937, 7,000,000 pounds were imported.

The manufacture of sodium chlorate is protected by a specific duty of 1½ cents a pound. It is startling, indeed, to learn that our Government, when faced with a farm-finance problem of staggering proportions, actually levied on farmers a tribute through tariff of $3,000,000 in 10 years for the benefit of one monopoly, and allowed costs to mount so high weed control has been financially impossible. Is it any wonder that in our Bonneville bill we sought and secured protection from monopoly use of public power?

COST OF SODIUM CHLORATE

Chlorate has been sold to the farmers at from 9 to 12 cents per pound, depending on the quantity purchased and the distance from the point of manufacture. The wholesale price of chlorate in Europe is approximately 4 cents a pound, and sometimes this figure is somewhat shaded. It appears that sodium chlorate can be manufactured in this country at prices which will be as low as those prevailing in Europe.

Electricity and salt can be obtained in the United States as cheaply as elsewhere. It is appreciated, however, that our labor costs and our capital charges are greater than in European countries, but only a small force is required to operate an electrochemical chlorate plant. The Government can surely lend its credit for farm necessities at the same low interest rates charged private utilities.

SODIUM CHLORATE AT COST

In conjunction with its technical studies, the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils has investigated the economics of sodium chlorate manufacture, distribution, and use. In its report, which the Chief of the Bureau submitted to the House Appropriations Committee in January 1937, it was shown that sodium chlorate could be produced for about 4.9 cents a pound. Subsequent research has indicated that this cost could be reduced, especially at a source of abundant cheap power. Based on these investigations, it is believed that sodium chlorate can be produced at close to 4 cents a pound. If, in accordance with my bill, the chlorate is distributed by the federal government, without profit, to states which participate financially in weed-control programs, it is clear that the net cost to either state or county government or to the farmer would be very small. Furthermore, all that is required of the Government is not a dole or a subsidy but merely legitimate and necessary cooperation in making possible the production and distribution of this herbicide. The money invested by the Government in this enterprise would be paid back to the Federal Treasury. It would be repaid again by the removal of the weed menace and the restoration of lands to the tax rolls. Surely it is not asking too much to have our Government participate in an effort to solve a national problem.

Chlorate must be sold to the farmers at a price that they can afford to pay.

Sodium chlorate can and will make a clean kill if it is spread on in sufficient strength. A bad infestation has required about 6 pounds to the square rod, or 960 pounds to the acre. If sold at present prevailing prices, that would cost the farmer $100 an acre, often more than the land is worth. Even at the average low infestation with the use of 400 pounds an acre, costs are beyond the farmer's ability to pay. Under such circumstances the mortgagor simply moves off the property and lets the mortgagee take possession. No wonder the Federal Land Banks refuse to lend money to landowners whose property is infested with noxious weeds.

PROVISIONS OF H. R. 196

Because chemical weed eradication provides the surest and quickest attack on the weed problem, and because costs are now prohibitive, I have in my bill empowered the Secretary of Agriculture to construct and operate an electrochemical plant for the manufacture of sodium chlorate and to distribute this herbicide at cost to the various States which carry out cooperative programs for the control and eradication of noxious weeds. My bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire land and utilize equipment and facilities now owned by the United States in the vicinity of the Bonneville Dam in Oregon, and to engage in the production of chlorates. For the purpose of acquiring land and constructing a plant capable of producing six to eight million pounds of sodium chlorate annually an appropriation of $750,000 is to be authorized. To provide an operating fund for the payment of salaries and the purchase of raw materials the sum of $250,000 is included.

It is believed that chlorate can be produced at such a Government plant at approximately 4 cents a pound. If this is distributed at cost to State governments which participate financially in accordance with other provisions of the bill, it will provide a means of getting sodium chlorate to the farmer at a small fraction of the present market price and at a cost which represents his share of the responsibility. Note that the Government deals only with States and that it rests with them to arrange distribution.

The construction of such a plant this coming summer at Bonneville, on the Columbia River, will do more than any other one thing to stay the advance of noxious weeds, a real menace to agricultural and economic development. The farmer can afford to pay from ten to twenty dollars an acre for herbicides that will wipe out the infestations of noxious weeds. He cannot afford to pay, and will not pay, the present exorbitant monopoly prices for necessary sodium chlorate resulting in a cost of from fifty to one hundred dollars an acre for treatment. Cheap chlorate is an absolute necessity if we are going to wage a successful war against the great enemy of agriculture in America.

WHY COLLECT ANY DUTY ON CHLORATE WHEN IT ENTERS THE PORTS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Government has lent millions of dollars to construct the Bonneville Dam and the electric plant there. No more useful purpose can be found for the sale of 5,000 kilowatts at that plant than for the manufacture of herbicides to help the farmers of America to control a pest which can be controlled if they are freed from the stranglehold of Government-aided monopoly.

C. C. C. CAMPS USEFUL IN WEED CONTROL

The Seventy-sixth Congress will probably make the C. C. C. a permanent department of the Government, and will face the need of work programs for W. P. A. It appears to many of us that weed control may offer opportunity for men who find it impossible to secure work in industry. Should these two departments continue and be permanent relief features of our Government, there is nothing workers in W. P. A. or the enrollees in C. C. C. can do of wider benefit than to clean up the noxious-weed infestation that now threatens American agriculture. The Seventy-sixth Congress must so change and modify present legislation that there will be no question about the right to put projects for weed eradication under these agencies. What better public service can be found for a C. C. C. camp than to clean up the St. Johnswort which was described so graphically by the California weed man? A black, fine grazing land more than 11 miles square now totally valueless! C. C. C. camp boys could make a perfect clean-up of this infestation and restore the range to its natural usefulness.

Limitations on C. C. C. activities have been prohibitive so far as weed control on private property is concerned. We must legislate to remove such limitations. We must enroll C. C. C. boys for the farm-defense program. The Federal Government spends huge funds each year to protect our shores against foreign invasion. It maintains armor plants, shipyards, and arsenals to provide defense for our coastal property. To the farmers in the central and western States the invasion of weeds, with the resulting destruction of his property, is a problem so serious that he is convinced the Government should not be indifferent to his welfare, and should assume the responsibility of his defense program.

In order to make any of the plans workable we must produce cheap chlorate free from monopoly control in manufacture and importation.

NEED FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

The weed problem must be attacked from every angle, and early and vigorous action is necessary. It is an absolute necessity that American legislative bodies be awakened to the seriousness of the present situation. It is fundamental that we must have cheap sodium chlorate. The farmer must be compelled by law to clean up his fields. If he will not do so, the authorities should at once perform the necessary labor in eradicating the weeds, and the cost of that work should be a first lien on the land, like taxes, to be collected ahead of the mortgage.

There is nothing so seriously threatening the productive acres of America as the encroachment of noxious weeds. The menace must be met without delay.

One of the solutions is to give the farmer a weapon with which he can fight, and that weapon is sodium chlorate. Give him that weapon at the cost of manufacture, which I believe ultimately will be about one-fourth of the present selling price.

When the corn borer threatened, the Government appropriated $10,000,000 to fight it, and it was in no way as destructive as noxious weeds. Millions have been spent on the boll weevil, a serious threat but not so widely menacing as noxious weeds.

SHORTAGE OF CHEMICAL HERBICIDES

As we study the problem of weed control the immensity of it becomes more impressive. Summing it up briefly for your thoughtful consideration, I ask you to recall my statement that the total amount of sodium chlorate now being manufactured in the United States is about 10,000,000 pounds annually. At a 25-percent infestation the requirement for weed killing is 100 pounds per acre, minimum. It is apparent that the 10,000,000 pounds would be good for only 100,000 lightly infested acres. Every state west of the Mississippi reports several times that many acres infested, with an expansion of 15 percent infested area each year.

There is an actual shortage of sodium chlorate. Only a small percentage of what we need is now being manufactured here. The most we could do with the present output would be to prevent weed expansion from 700,000 acres. We have millions of infested acres. It is true that agricultural technique will care for a large portion of these, but chemical herbicides are now actually needed greatly in excess of the amount manufactured. Shall we provide it with our own men and electric power or bring it from Europe?

Again I remind you that prices have prohibited the use of chemical herbicides, thus causing great farm losses.

We must face two issues. First, reduce prices. Second, a greater supply of chemical herbicides. The Government owns the power. The Government has the technical men who know how to do this piece of work. The way is clear.

H. R. 196 MEETS THE SITUATION

My bill does more than to provide for the production and distribution of sodium chlorate, which constitutes the essential and indispensable foundation for work on the weed-control problem. It provides for making this herbicide available at a reasonable price which can be paid by all responsible agencies undertaking distribution to cooperating farmers. It provides for the administration by the Secretary of Agriculture, who is best qualified to judge the needs of the several States and who has at his command the results of years of experiment on this problem. It enables him to marshal the technical forces of the Nation to wage the battle in the most effective manner. Of greatest importance, however, is the fact that it provides, for the first time, a satisfactory basis for a Nation-wide integrated program to free American farmers from the weed menace and to aid the farmer in this expensive and burdensome undertaking.

In placing the building and management of this plant in the Department of Agriculture, I am asking only an extension of work which they have already begun and successfully carried on on a smaller scale in their Arlington experimental plant, where sodium chlorate is manufactured. The Department is the national clearing house for all information on weed control. It is informed on the results of research of all State experimental stations, and it is in close touch with farmers. The formulas under which herbicides are manufactured will undoubtedly be changed from time to time, so it is clearly apparent that the project should be under the control of the Federal agency which can give the best scientific and technical direction from a chemical as well as from a plant standpoint. In order to insure equal benefits to all States, the responsibility must rest with the Federal Government.

From my home county I present a summarized statement which is typical of eastern Oregon:

The total area of the county is 1,284,480 acres; total land in farms is 463,536 acres; cropland is approximately 155,000 acres, and the area infested with noxious weeds probably exceeds 2,500 acres. Infestation is chiefly wild morning glory or bind weed and Canadian thistle.

Approximately 300 acres of whitetop and Russian knap weed and an additional 150 acres of morning glories have been eradicated by chemical treatment and cultivation during the past 6 years. First demonstrations of chemical control began in 1921 by the use of common salt, which was successful but very expensive. Chlorates have been used here since 1928, with the county annually expending from $1,500 to $3,500, beginning with 1930.

The first compulsory control of weeds was begun in 1933, when the county court made the entire county a compulsory-control district for whitetop. All of the old acreage is killed, and we think it will eventually be completely eradicated, but new weeds come in from time to time.

Knap weed was placed in the compulsory control district in 1937, and most of this weed has been eradicated.

Chemicals used include sodium arsenite material, common salt, oil, carbon bisulphide, and chlorates, both sodium chlorate and the patent Atlacide. Of this amount approximately 95 percent has been one of the chlorates, which have proved the most successful from the point of effectiveness and cost. Use of chemical during the past 3 years has been as follows: 1936, 91,499 pounds of chlorate and a small amount of Atlacide; 1937, 56,608 pounds of chlorate and 864 pounds of carbon bisulphide; 1938, 35,235 pounds of chlorate and 3,507 pounds of carbon bisulphide.

You will note that considerably more chlorate was used in 1936 than in the following years. This was due to the fact that cooperation in furnishing chemicals by the W. P. A. enabled the county to supply the material to the farmers at a lower cost. The above amount of chemical, if purchased at present rates, would cost over $14,000. It is my opinion that a reduction in the cost would result in increased use of this chemical, probably as much as 300 percent.

The control and eradication of weeds is a difficult process, and this material is not perfect. It is, however, the best we know of and cheaper than other materials, even at its present cost. We are making good progress in all areas where infestation is light, but on the larger areas have found it impossible to treat on account of the big cost involved.

H. G. AVERY,
County Agricultural Agent.

House Joint Memorial 14

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent:

Whereas weeds constitute one of the greatest agricultural problems in the United States and constitute the greatest source of agricultural loss, with the possible exception of soil erosion; and

Whereas a conference representing five different upper Mississippi Valley States estimated an annual crop loss of $1,000,000,000 because of weeds; and

Whereas the State of Idaho, after large expenditures previous to 1936, engaged in $2,000,000 weed-control program for that State in 1936, three-fourths of which was financed with Federal money; and

Whereas the other Northwestern States, including Utah, Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, and Washington, are taking steps in the matter of weed control; and

Whereas 57 percent of the land in Oregon is in Federal ownership; and

Whereas the weed problem has been recognized by the three farm organizations of Oregon; namely, the Oregon State Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, and the Farm Bureau Federation, as of major importance, and they have passed resolutions favoring national, State, county, and individual weed control; and

Whereas the Oregon State Planning Board has reported an annual loss of $1,500,000 from a limited number of perennial noxious weeds in Oregon alone and have recommended additional research work, additional control work, and Federal assistance; and

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion of these bodies that noxious weeds are gaining ground rapidly, that the control measures are inadequate, and that more research is needed and that the weed problem is no longer an individual problem but a public problem: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon hereby does petition the Congress of the United States:

1. To enact legislation declaring that the control of noxious weeds is of major agricultural importance and of such far-reaching consequence that the problem may no longer be considered solely an individual problem but that it has become a major national problem and that in the public interest Federal assistance should be given the States, counties, and individuals cooperating in the control of noxious weeds just as such assistance has been provided for insect, plant, and animal disease control.

2. To provide funds and assistance through special appropriation, W. P. A., or similar channels, civilian conservation camps, soil conservation and agricultural conservation activities for actual work in weed control.

3. To provide for the control of noxious weeds on all federally owned and controlled lands in counties having regularly organized weed-control districts.

4. To require the United States Department of Agriculture to establish, after conference with the interested States, national policies covering (a) weed control, (b) interstate movement of seeds containing weed seeds designated as noxious, and (c) a comprehensive policy of research.

5. To finance a comprehensive Federal and State program of research in the Bureau of Plant Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine upon the best materials and methods that may be used in the control of weeds.

6. To take steps toward the production of cheap weed-killing chemicals at some of the Federal power projects in or near weed-infested regions such as the Bonneville project in Oregon and the Grand Coulee project in Washington; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be and he hereby is authorized and directed to forward one copy of this memorial to the President of the United States, to each Member of both Houses of Congress, to the Governors of each of the respective States, and to the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., pastor of the Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose greatness is unsearchable and whose amazing love crowneth all our days, we rejoice that Thou wert the God of our fathers and that Thou art also the God of their succeeding generations. Again we approach that throne of grace from which none has ever been repelled or sent empty away. We come constrained not only by our necessities but encouraged by the blessed assurance that Thy fatherly heart opens with love in response to those who seek Thee. Let Thy hand of blessing rest this day upon all whom Thou hast called to positions of leadership and service in the life of our Nation. May peace and prosperity be the heritage of men everywhere. In the name of Christ our Lord we pray. Amen.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

FEBRUARY 8, 1939.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Because of another committee assignment, I hereby submit my resignation as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Respectfully yours,

LINDLEY BECKWORTH.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill, 1940 (H. R. 3743).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3743, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] was pending, and it was understood that the amendment, which had already been read, would be considered first.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have sent my amendment to the desk. It is a perfecting amendment and has preference over the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, can be determined after the gentleman from New York has completed his statement in reference to his amendment, and for the information of the House, and without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Beginning on page 32, in line 18, strike out the remainder of page 32, down to and including line 5, on page 33.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of throwing out the entire appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board. I am doing this on the same theory and with the same feeling the committee had with reference to the Communications Act, and that is, if we are going to have any chance of recovery the Labor Relations Act must be substantially amended so that it will provide a square deal for different groups of employees and for the employers, and that a board representing the Government should be committed to impartiality and that promotion of activities of one kind or another is beyond my comprehension, and it is also beyond my comprehension that the Congress should stand for that sort of thing.

My idea is that we should refuse at this time to appropriate any money for the Labor Board and that the matter should be held in abeyance until the deficiency bill and that no such appropriation should be made unless the Congress shall have passed, and the President shall have signed, a bill providing proper and fair amendments of the act.

This is my position. This is the basis of my amendment, and I hope the House will adopt the amendment so that we can begin to have action along the line of clearing up this situation which is such a bar at the present time to the employment of our people and the return of prosperity. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is the understanding of the Chair the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has a perfecting amendment to offer and, of course, perfecting amendments are in order before amendments to strike. Will the gentleman from Michigan kindly submit his amendment?

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the Chair is willing and the Committee has no objection, I would prefer to wait until the pending amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. That is within the discretion of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a great mistake to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I have always been opposed to bringing in legislation on an appropriation bill unless it was some minor matter of legislation or legislation to correct some error in a bill.

As I understand it, this act was adopted so that the Labor Relations Board could take up various disputes between the workers and their employers. I believe we should give them a fair chance to do the job which Congress intended them to do. I am not taking sides as to whether the act should be amended or not, or whether it should be eliminated entirely. If the act should be amended, then the matter should be referred to the legislative committee and they should hold hearings and bring the hearings to the House and let the House decide, after extensive hearings, whether or not we should amend the National Labor Relations Act; but up to the present time there is nothing before the Members of this House that would indicate that we should dispose of this Board.

It has been stated that the Board has shown favoritism to the C. I. O. I have no knowledge of this personally and cannot give any opinion. If it is true, then it is the fault of the administrators of the Board and not the act itself. I am not taking sides with any labor organization or with any employer, and I feel it is the duty of the National Labor Relations Board not to take sides but, on the other hand, to be fair and just with all labor organizations and employers. There is no reason why I should lean toward the C. I. O., as during the last election I understand they were behind the American Labor Party, who put a candidate in the field against me; but that will have nothing to do with my supporting this appropriation. I believe, however, that the appropriation should be approved to carry out the intentions of the act itself; and, if carried out as Congress intended it, I believe it will not only be beneficial to the employees and employers, but to the American people as a whole.

This is not the appropriate place for us to act in order to eliminate the Board at this time. It was brought out in the hearings that in 19 cases that were brought into the United States Supreme Court, 17 were won by the Labor Board. It was also brought out at the hearings that out of 41 disputes between the Federation of Labor and the C. I. O., 21 cases were decided in favor of the Federation of Labor. I do not know the merits of the cases in question, and you yourself do not know them except for what has been printed in the newspapers.

They have asked for an increased appropriation, because there are today some 3,700 undisposed cases before the National Labor Relations Board. This is the reason they want to get increased personnel, so they can go out and investigate these cases properly. I think it would be of great benefit to our country and to the taxpayers if we can have a board set up that will consider our labor disputes and do justice to the employer and the employee and reach an agreement without any strikes. As I understand, during the last year the Board settled 771 strikes.

I have stated the object of this act and the responsibility of the Board. If the act is not perfect, let us amend it in the proper way by referring it to a legislative committee, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, and after hearings are held and all the facts are brought out let them bring in a bill, but let us not eliminate this Board because some are against it.

I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will be defeated and that we will continue this Board until we, the Members of Congress, after hearings, develop the necessity of amending the act, or, if necessary, abolishing the Board. I therefore ask that the amendment be defeated. [Applause.]

MR. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to support this amendment as offered. I support it upon the ground of an occurrence that happened in Los Angeles during the strike in the Douglas airplane plant—a sit-down strike. Some 21 men were indicted by the Los Angeles grand jury. I believe 18 out of that 21 were convicted, most of whom received jail sentences. The National Labor Relations Board now tells the Douglas Co. they will have to take these men back into their employ and have to pay them, not only for their time they were off but for the time they spent in jail. That is one of the most un-American decisions I ever heard of and I do not think it should be countenanced in any way, shape, or form. I do not think we should permit a board to come in and tell a plant that its men who had been convicted of a crime against that plant must not only be taken back in the plant, but must be paid for the time that they were off. Such a thing needs no support, and I hope the Congress will not give a board of that kind 1 cent.

MR. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The argument advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] on this question is an unanswerable argument. It is to the effect that if you want to amend the National Labor Relations Act, the way to do it is in a straightforward manner and not by trying to knock out the Board through refusing an appropriation. I feel that this whole question, however, can be based upon the Board's record. Congress passed the National Labor Relations Act for the purpose of doing two things; in the first place, because the Congress felt that the right of collective bargaining and organization on the part of labor is a proper corollary right in this industrial age to the concentration of industrial ownership and the virtual helplessness of the individual wage earner. The second reason that Congress had was that by that organization industrial disputes would be decreased. There is good reason to believe that. The President's commission sent last summer to England to investigate the question came back with a report that in England substantial industrial peace already existed, and one of the basic reasons was that throughout British industry the right of organization and collective bargaining is unquestionably recognized.

What is the record of this Board? The Board has carried out its assignment with regard to diminishing industrial disputes and strikes. In 1937 there were 394 strikes every month, and in 1938 exactly half that number. Go back to the winter of 1936-37 and you will find a very bad situation, and why, because the Supreme Court decision was not yet handed down definitely validating the Labor Relations Act and because, therefore, that act was being disputed in many quarters. So we had a chaotic condition where, naturally, there was much difficulty.

Just before that happened there were 186,000 workers on strike, and in the same month 50,000 workers were appealing to the Board to settle the question without a strike. A year later, in March 1938, there were only 20,000 workers on strike for the purpose of establishing the right of organization, and three times the number were appealing to the Board that had been appealing to that Board before. In other words, on the question of strike over the right of organization, you have set up a machinery which is functioning effectively for the reduction of industrial disputes. These figures show to me that we are coming out of the woods, that there are half as many strikes, and half as many of the reduced number concerning the right to organize. What we hoped would happen has happened, I believe, largely through the efforts of this Board. The sit-down strike—and I do not know anybody that defends it as a labor weapon—has become virtually a memory. Figures on that were given to the Supreme Court by Mr. Fahy, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. He pointed out that in March 1937 there were 137 such strikes, the greatest number in any one month during the period before the act had been passed on by the Supreme Court, when the maximum confusion existed, and after the Court acted there was an immediate drop in April to 52, and a continuous drop ever since until today there is only a handful of workers who have been concerned in any such strikes.

The New York Journal of Commerce is not known as an advocate of the Labor Relations Act, but on November 2, 1938, that paper told its industrial and business readers that—

Losses of industry and workers due to strikes in the final quarter of 1938 promise to be at the lowest level in some years.

And further that—

Recent National Labor Relations Board decisions have concluded many disputes.

MR. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? MR. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

MR. HOUSTON. Is it not true that during the fiscal year 1938 the Board had approximately 12,000 cases before it, and disposed of over 9,000, and only a very small percentage went to trial?

MR. VOORHIS of California. Yes; only about 5 percent went to trial. All the rest were settled with that. You cannot destroy the legitimate right of labor to organize and bargain collectively. Violence takes place where that right is resisted. The work of this Board has been in large measure to prevent industrial disputes over the right of organization.

THE CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

MR. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

MR. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes. How many will have an opportunity to speak on this?

MR. WOODRUM of Virginia. I see six gentlemen on their feet at this time. It seems to me that 20 or 25 minutes should be sufficient. Other amendments are coming to this section. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate close in 20 minutes on this particular amendment, and let the Chair divide the time between the gentlemen.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that the debate on this amendment be limited to 20 minutes?

MR. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a very important matter. I hope the gentleman will extend that and give me 5 minutes.

MR. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I modify the request to make it 30 minutes.

THE CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] will each be recognized for 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, the age-old question of capital and labor is now being discussed.

I am rather proud of the record that has been made by the National Labor Relations Board under the Labor Act. When you strip it of all bias on the part of those who are antilabor, you will find that they have done a magnificent job.

This Board had before it a total of 19,176 cases since the fall of 1935, and on January 1 of this year there were only 4,094 cases pending. They had all been disposed of except that number. There were 7,931 consent election cases. Those were victories for the employees. However, when you stop to consider that there were 2,360 cases, or 16 percent, involving 302,324 workers dismissed by the Board and regional directors, you will see that those were victories for the employers. When they say that the employer is not given a chance before this Board they deliberately misstate the facts.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HOOK. I doubt whether I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, make up your mind one way or the other. It does not make any difference to me.

Mr. HOOK. I think the gentleman's prejudice and bias is such that his judgment would not be good on the question.

When we look at the record of the sit-down strikes, we find that in March of 1937 we had 438 sit-down strikes. From January to August 1937 we had 438, but in the same time in the following year we only had 38. Why? Because the Supreme Court of the United States validated the National Labor Act, and the National Labor Relations Board stepped into the picture and handled the cases as best they could. They had a large job on their hands. They still have. They are being fought from all sides by those who do not want collective bargaining and those who want collective bargaining but want to have it all to their own liking.

Many years ago a great labor leader said the labor question should be "thought out—not fought out." The only way the labor question can be thought out is by a board such as the National Labor Relations Board. Being an attorney, I know it does not make any difference which side wins a lawsuit—the opposite side is not satisfied with the decision. No matter what the decision of the National Labor Relations Board in any case, the employer would not be satisfied. In the case of a controversy between unions, the union which loses its case is not satisfied. It is up to us to look at the record; to look at what has been done; look at the situation today as compared to the conditions that existed before the creation of the Board, and you will find they have done a wonderful job. They should be allowed to go on to do a better job in the future.

In 1935 we knew exactly why we passed this act. The past history of American industrial relations has been a shameful record of the attempts of American workmen to speak in their own behalf through organizations of their own choosing and the defeat of these attempts by overpowering employer strength. For example, the great United States Steel Corporation, founded at the beginning of this century on the announced policy that it would never deal with worker organizations, maintained and enforced that policy, bringing about an untold loss of lives and money. And so with other great American industries—coal; and more recently the newer industries of rubber, aluminum, glass, and automobiles.

The rights of workers were recognized in law. Yes, 18 years ago Chief Justice Taft, speaking from the Supreme Court Bench, said that a single employee was helpless in dealing with his employer and that the right to organize into unions was a just and legal one. But it was not until 1935, through this act, that we provided an instrument to enforce that legal right.

Do not think it was generosity on the part of Congress. American workmen have grown up. In the past century we imported foreign labor to make our steel, dig our coal, and build our railroads. Their grandchildren have grown up in American schools. They believe in democracy, and a democracy is a way of life. We told them under the N. R. A. that they had the right to organize. We clinched that right by passing this act. And what happened?

Industrial employers still lived in the nineteenth century. Ignoring the letter and the spirit of the act, they so much as said that they were above the rulings of this Board. They tied its hands in a hundred and one injunction suits, but the Board fought back. It fought to enforce this law to the letter. If it had not—if it had sidestepped and evaded its duty, then you really would have seen an overwhelming number of strikes. The Board kept its course. It held hearings. It established precedents on a sound legal basis, built up a body of labor law in accordance with the act as we wrote it. We ought to be proud of this Board. With propaganda against it, with corporation lawyers saying it was unconstitutional, it stuck to its job, and on April 12, 1937, the Supreme Court of the United States upheld it in five cases. The Court said its procedure was fair and that every move it had made was constitutional—just the contrary of what its very vociferous critics had prophesied.

Why should not this Congress be proud of an agency which took our law and under great difficulty and age-old prejudice made it work in such an equitable manner that it was clearly vindicated in a court which had to reverse all of its previous thinking in order to do so?

Why? Because it annoyed some employers to have to accept this procedure of collective bargaining. Before the Supreme Court upheld it the Board made 60 cease and desist rulings and only one employer obeyed it. However, immediately following that decision, United States Steel, International Harvester, and Goodyear Rubber—all of them under investigation by the Board—decided to give up their company unions and obey the act. The Jones & Laughlin Corporation, test case in the Supreme Court, let the Board conduct an election. Twenty-five thousand employees voted for a trade union. The company accepted their vote, recognized their union, gave it a contract, and began the most peaceful era of labor relations it had ever known.

That is why we passed this act—to get employers and employees living at peace with each other. We have what we want and do not know it.

This Board began to operate as we had hoped as soon as its validity was established, and in spite of the A. F. of L.-C. I. O. controversy which arose to harass it the Board has handled 20,000 cases and written 15,000 of them off the books. It has peacefully settled 8,000 cases involving a million and a half workers. It has found for the employer in 5,000 cases by dismissing actions against them or getting the unions to withdraw the cases. Does that fact surprise you? Then look at the record. There is nothing secret about it except that the Board has seen fit to settle these cases quietly and without the fanfare of publicity. Shall we blame it for that? Perhaps. For the charge might well be made that the Board stands guilty of excessive modesty when its opponents can spread the report that it encourages strikes, when, as a matter of record, it has settled or averted more than 2,000 strikes involving half a million workers.

Another half million workers marched to the polls and cast their secret ballots for representatives in more than 1,700 Board elections.

I say this is an amazing record. I say the Congress should grant the Board's appropriation and give it a vote of thanks. Thanks for stopping 2,000 strikes. Thanks for upholding the right of collective bargaining so honestly.

This Board has far less than 1,000 employees scattered over the 48 States and Hawaii. It has more pages of testimony to review than all the other quasi judicial agencies combined. Its employees work nights and Sundays to keep up. They are making effective the rights of workers to which America has given lip service for generations. Cut them down. Make their task impossible. But be prepared for the worst wave of strikes we have ever known. American labor means to have protection for the right to bargain collectively. To deny that justice is folly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, the National Labor Relations Board was created primarily for the purpose of protecting the men who work in their right to select their own representatives to bargain collectively on wages, hours, and working conditions. The employer by reason of his superior financial position and prestige in his community has always had all kinds of protection, including that afforded by the courts. This act was the first attempt to give to labor rights which, while guaranteed by the Constitution, have been uniformly denied by the great majority of employers.

We have heard a great deal about the sit-down strike. One would think the National Labor Relations Board invented the sit-down strike; but the gentlemen who are criticizing the labor unions for utilizing the sit-down strike, which nobody is particularly anxious to sanction, never say one word about the lock-out. Do you remember about the lock-out? What was it? It was not only a lock-out but it was a knock-out, because many of the great industrial concerns employed thugs and strong-armed brutes of all kinds to go out and beat up men who were trying to get a decent day's pay for a hard day's work.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. No; I do not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not for a question?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Not for anything.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not to tell us when the last lock-out was?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Not to you. The gentleman is speaking out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Now, my friends, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] comes here with an amendment to strike out the National Labor Board's appropriation. I do not like to use the word which I would like to use in connection with that kind of subterfuge. I am convinced that the real purpose behind it is to repeal by a shabby trick the National Labor Relations Act. If that is your purpose, why not openly say so? That would be the courageous thing to do.

You are going to find, when the vote on this comes, that the bulk of the opposition will come from the other side. This will demonstrate to the people of the country whether the Republican Party is so much in favor of labor as many of its speakers and candidates professed during the recent campaign.

This Board has accomplished, as figures presented on the floor show, a very distinct service to both industry and labor. It has operated to diminish, not increase, labor troubles, except for the period of organization and pending the Supreme Court's decision as to its constitutionality. I think it is the duty of Members of this House to protect the bill that the Appropriations Committee has brought in and refuse to amend it in this particular, for it is not an amendment but an underhanded attempt to nullify the act.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. No; I have finished.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, as just stated by the previous speaker, that this is a political issue, I can see where there is no political issue in the N. L. R. B. In the first place, money has been appropriated to carry on this work until the 1st of next July, and the present operation should not suffer. If this act is properly amended, a deficiency appropriation can be made for the purpose of carrying on the work of the N. L. R. B. after July 1 of this year, but it must be conducted in a manner fitting to our American institutions and our American life.

Last summer, in the year 1938, Mr. William Green, president of the A. F. of L., made this statement—and I quote:

No hostile employer in America has done the cause of labor more harm than those who fomented, executed, and administered the policies of the Committee on Industrial Organization during the past 18 months.

This came from the lips of a man who has been a labor representative all his life, a man who has worked, a man who knows the conditions of labor, a man who is trying to help, aid, and assist labor in every possible way.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Not right now. I will later if I have the time.

Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the idea that labor has the right to organize, unmolested from industrialists or radical labor organizers. I do not think any Member of the House of Representatives wishes to deny labor this privilege; but to let the situation continue where responsibility is incumbent only upon manufacturers and business, where there is no responsibility whatsoever on the part of labor, is very unjust. The Federal Government requires rigid compliance by manufacturers and employers of labor but gives permission to labor to do the things radical labor wants or compels it to do without assuming any responsibility. It is my belief that where there is a contract between manufacturers and labor, the responsibility and obligations of the contract should rest equally on manufacturers and on labor. That is just; that is honest; that makes for good regulation and good government.

During the past 2 years of our national life there have been more strikes than in any other like period in the history of this Nation. There is certainly something wrong when the people of this country come to the point that they deem it advisable to settle their disputes through the method of the strike. This method causes both labor and business to suffer as well as all the people. The logical thing to meet such a situation is a fair-minded board to settle the disputes before the point of a strike is reached so that both employers and those who want employment will have the opportunity of going ahead without losing time, without the industry being shut down. Therefore this law should and must be changed if we want to put 12,000,000 people back to work in industry and agriculture.

Mr. HOUSTON and Mr. SACKS rose.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield, for my time is so limited. I am unable to do so.

Mr. Chairman, our greatest gift to labor today is employment, and at good wages, where men can find contentment and happiness and secure those things of life that good work and wages afford, but I ask how this can be given when the manufacturers, the industrialists, the farmers, and the businessmen are afraid to proceed with development that would give employment? This fear is caused by the difficulties they encounter in trying to administer their affairs. Businessmen today want to get out of business rather than to continue in business, and the action and decisions of the N. L. R. B. is more responsible for this condition than anything else I know of. So I say to the Members of Congress that the duty confronting us at the present moment is that of correcting the laws that have been placed on the statute books. This method probably is not the best course to that end, but it is one way to accomplish it. We all know that Mr. Green would never have made such a statement as I quoted a few moments ago were the laws of this country all just and administered in the true interests of labor. If jobs are to be provided for people, then conditions must be brought about to restore the confidence of business, so that business and labor can go ahead hand in hand. This is the kind of cooperation we want, and this is the kind of administration of our laws that we want, to the end that the rights of both capital and labor are safeguarded, to the end that the manufacturers, the employers, and the employees of this country may go forward hand in hand to make this a greater country for all people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, lest we forget, it seems to me that the attention of the House should be called to the fact that it is now just 100 years since we ceased putting men in jail in the United States of America for asking for better wages or better working conditions. It has taken this 100 years and the experiences of the men who have done the work of the country during this time to come to the point where the National Congress recognized, and passed a law upholding, the right of labor to organize collectively under its own leadership.

That is exactly what the National Labor Relations Act means. The American people have grown from the point where under the old common law it was called conspiracy and men put in jail even in our own country to the point where we no longer recognized that principle. On the contrary, we hold that the right of men to organize is a fundamental human right, and it has been so held by the courts every time they have had a chance to decide the matter.

It does seem to me that we ought to bear this in mind when we discuss this entire question. It is not just a temporary thing we are talking about here this morning. Unfortunately, it has been brought up in a way that it should not have been brought up. It should not be considered in this manner, because if we are going to consider this law on its merits, as has been pointed out here, the whole matter should go to the Labor Committee, hearings should be held where everybody who objects to the present provisions may be heard, and a decision arrived at fairly and squarely, to be laid before this body for its decision. That is the only rational way to handle it. Therefore, it seems to me it is going a long way from the proper method to do the thing the gentleman from New York is insisting on our doing this morning.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. The gentleman does not mean to infer by his remarks that these men were put in jail in California for insisting upon their right to organize?

Mr. KELLER. I did not talk about California. I am giving you the historic view of it.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I want the RECORD to show they were not put in jail for that.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman has not studied the matter from an historic standpoint, he will find a great deal of information along that line which may open his eyes to the things that the Labor Relations Board is bringing out. I do not know the case the gentleman refers to, and I doubt whether he does, though he may.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] inferred that William Green and the American Federation of Labor are for this amendment. Did the gentleman hear anything like that?

Mr. KELLER. No; I never heard anything like that, neither did he and neither did anybody else.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. May I say I did not infer the American Federation of Labor is for this amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Then the gentleman is excused.

Mr. RICH. I would not be ignorant enough to make a statement of that kind.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am certain the gentleman from Illinois is familiar with the act and its workings. We who believe in it realize that there are controversies which arise in the beginning of the administration of such acts as this, but may I say that the Chairman of the Labor Board, a former dean of law of West Virginia University, Mr. Madden, is one of the finest men I have known, and he is fair in every way.

Mr. KELLER. There is no question about that. The truth of the matter is to expect perfection at the beginning of the creation of a board of this kind is nonsense. It is not done that way, because we happen to belong to the human race and learn through experience, as we are doing and as we are going to continue to do.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it not true that during the first 6 or 8 months the Board was trying to function all the employers fought it and took the matter to the Supreme Court for decision?

Mr. KELLER. Unfortunately there were 50 lawyers representing the Liberty League who gave as their united opinion to the manufacturers of this country that the law was unconstitutional. They did the nifty thing of standing up and telling the manufacturers of this country not to obey the law. If workmen had combined and conspired to prevent the enforcement of a law which the Congress had passed and which the President had signed, they would have been denounced as anarchists. These 50 "big-time" lawyers set themselves up as the acting supreme court of the United States. When the manufacturers refused to obey the law, the workers, after a year's abuse from their employers, also refused, saying, "When you make the big ones obey the law we will obey the law." Chaos came and only when the real Supreme Court upheld the law and overruled the Liberty League conspirators did we start toward industrial peace.

During this period, of course, chaos would naturally reign and it did reign; but since the Supreme Court gave its decision, as pointed out by several of the gentlemen who preceded me, we have been establishing peace from that time, which is the true object of the National Labor Relations Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from New York is adopted, it will be a big step backward. Since the establishment of the National Labor Relations Board a tremendous amount of good has been accomplished not only for the employees but also for the employers. A great deal of the criticism heaped upon the Board has been unjust. Instead of eliminating the appropriation it should be increased so the Board can continue to do the good work it has done since its creation. For the benefit of all concerned the amendment should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] for 2 minutes.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to say much about the pending amendment; however, may I make the observation that the Taber amendment is a glaring example of Republican leadership. [Applause.] We passed the National Labor Relations Act for the purpose of giving the workers of this Nation the right to organize and bargain collectively with their employers. This act to my mind was a Magna Carta for labor. We all know that at this late hour when there are thousands of cases unsettled, some twelve or fourteen thousand, many of the workers of the Nation are desirous of organizing, it would be nothing short of a national calamity to attempt to junk these cases, as numerous strikes and lockouts would immediately occur, thereby creating great confusion in industry.

If we should adopt this amendment chaos would reign. There is no question in my mind but that not only thousands but hundreds of thousands of workers would be on strike within a few months. The Members of this Congress owe it not only to the people but to themselves to keep faith with the workers. We passed the Wagner Act for the purpose of freeing the wage earners of this Nation so they might have the right to organize and bargain collectively and protect themselves and their families in their employment from the aggressions and discriminations of the employers, and so they might have the right to associate with their fellows without molestation or discrimination on the part of the employers. To adopt this amendment would be not only breaking faith with the workers of the Nation but would be an outrage not only to the workers but to the Nation as a whole because it certainly would create turmoil, strikes, and difficulty. We have set up this great structure to litigate questions of wages, hours, and working conditions. To adopt this amendment and cut off the appropriation for this Board would be to take away from the National Labor Relations Board the right to function. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Labor and as a Member of this House I am one of those who must assume responsibility for the creation of the National Labor Relations Board, because as a member of the Committee on Labor I helped draft the law and as a Member of the House I helped pass it.

I am not here today to defend the policies of the National Labor Relations Board. I have publicly criticized them on the floor of this House, and did so last year when the appropriation bill was up for consideration. I am pleased to say, however, that I believe that in response to criticism the Board has improved the technique of its operation.

If you wish to abolish the National Labor Relations Board, the courageous way to do it is not to snipe at it by cutting off its appropriation but to introduce a bill to repeal the act. The Committee on Labor is perfectly capable and ready and willing to consider any complaints against the operation of this law. Therefore, I am here today to defend the principle involved in the law, rather than the procedure which a board may have temporarily adopted. I say the principle is unassailable. Under our Constitution, any man has a right to join any organization he sees fit to join, provided it is not organized to destroy our form of government. Labor has this right, and this act was passed for the purpose of making effective the right under our Constitution of the working people of America to belong to any organization they see fit to join and to choose their own representatives for the purpose of negotiating in a free and open and American manner with the men for whom they work. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, let us rest this matter with the Committee on Labor. As one member of the committee, I stand ready to help any Member of this House who wants to get a real review of the operation of this law to obtain consideration by the Committee on Labor of the complaints that have been made against the Board; but I am not willing to assassinate the principle involved in this act by withdrawing financial support from the Board.

I hope the Members of the House will vote down this amendment. If you want a review of the actions of the Board, introduce legislation and refer it to the proper legislative committee for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. Is it not a fact that most of the criticism centered upon the Board is due to the fact we have a division in the ranks of labor?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I believe that is very largely responsible. It is an unfortunate situation, but it is not the fault of the Board.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The foes of the principle of this bill would try to arouse us to the belief that there is discord in the ranks of labor concerning the measure. The Board no doubt has made some mistakes. Labor, through its organizations, is united in support of the act. There is no such discord, is there?

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is no discord as to the continuation of the Board. There is some dissension in the ranks of labor as to some of the actions of the Board, just as there is as to the actions of other people, but I do not know of any laboring man or any labor organization that does not earnestly desire the continuation of this Board. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add my protest to the protests that have just been heard against this amendment. This is an unfair way to take care of whatever complaints may have arisen in regard to the National Labor Relations Act. The proper way to consider, if it is necessary to consider, any complaint with regard to the act, is in the committee where the act originated.

As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has so well said, the Committee on Labor is ready and willing to hear evidence concerned with the act if and when amendments are considered, but we do not believe that a cowardly, contemptible method such as this is the proper way to adjust complaints or disagreements.

I certainly hope the Members will vote down this amendment. For myself, I believe the act has accomplished a great deal of good, and I also believe that if unity could be established between the two labor organizations many complaints regarding the National Labor Relations Act would disappear. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, there never has been and never will be a board or commission set up in the Government that will please everybody. It happens to be my fortune or misfortune to have been connected with a great deal of legislation creating boards and commissions. From the committee on which I served came the acts creating the Federal Power Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. I was the author in the House of the three acts the Securities and Exchange Commission now administers. I was the author of the bill that brought into being the Communications Commission.

If I were to vote against appropriations to continue the life and activities of commissions just because they had performed some act or rendered some decision I did not like, then I would be voting, each and every time such an appropriation was proposed, to destroy, yea, in the language of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], to assassinate these commissions. The courageous thing for the gentleman from New York, and those who stand with him, to do with reference to the matter of the National Labor Relations Act is to introduce a bill repealing the entire act and let the bill come before the House and be discussed and given sane consideration, rather than to come in under an appropriation bill, after the board or commission has been set up, and deny that board or commission the money to perform the functions the House of Representatives only a year ago voted by an overwhelming majority to assign to it.

This amendment is typical of many amendments that are offered and many amendments that will be offered, as I understand, to the bill now under consideration.

I have found it wise, after nearly 26 years of service in this House, to follow the committee when I am not absolutely certain of my ground or feel sure I know more about what has happened in the committee or what has happened with reference to the board or the commission or any department of the Government than the members of the committee know after going through extensive hearings and giving the matter long and tortuous consideration.

I think it would be a terrible thing, an inane and an insane thing, to vote down an appropriation for the continuation of this Board, and I do not believe that men on either side of the aisle by a majority vote will do any such thing. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 5, noes 186.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, National Labor Relations Board, $3,189,600.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 33, in line 2, after the semicolon following the word "automobile", strike out "$3,039,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000,000", and in line 9, after the comma following the word "Board", strike out "$3,189,600" and insert "$3,000,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Part of the amendment certainly comes too late, because we had read that portion of the bill to which it applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] was on his feet, and the Chair was advised that, inasmuch as the amendment related to two different paragraphs of this same section, that it should be read after the reading of the three additional lines. This being no fault of the gentleman from Michigan, and the gentleman being on his feet, the Chair does not think the gentleman should be precluded from offering the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is it not correct procedure that amendments should be offered to the paragraph where the bill is being read by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, the gentleman is quite correct in his assumption that amendments cannot be offered after the paragraph has been passed. In this instance this was an inadvertence of the Clerk, who thought that the amendment related to the succeeding paragraph, when, as a matter of fact, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] was on his feet and was demanding recognition.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is practically a pro forma amendment to give the gentleman an opportunity to make a speech, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not need to withdraw it, because the Chair has overruled it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order, as a matter of fact, would be well taken; but the Chair thinks, under the circumstances, it would be unjust to the gentleman from Michigan to sustain such a point of order.

The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

FREE SPEECH AND A FREE PRESS DENIED WITH THE AID OF FUNDS WE APPROPRIATE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the Appropriations Committee handling this bill, which contains an item of $3,189,600 for the use of the National Labor Relations Board, if my understanding of the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is correct, is that, so long as legislation passed by Congress remains upon the books, it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to allocate funds to the agency charged with the enforcement of the law, regardless of the interpretation placed upon the law by the enforcing agency and of the manner in which it is using the funds appropriated.

With that theory I cannot agree and this bill shows clearly the error in their reasoning. They contend that, if the law is not appropriate for the purpose for which it was passed, or if we no longer are in accord with the policy established by the law, we should either repeal or amend the law, and that proposition is sound. Unfortunately, the error is not so easily rectified.

A majority of this House know, and an overwhelming majority of the people of the country demand, that the provisions of the N. L. R. A., commonly known as the Wagner law, be changed. About this there is no doubt.

Nevertheless, there are many of us who realize that it may be a long time before a bill is brought out on the floor of this House repealing or amending the Wagner law—this for the reason that the administration seems to be opposed to its amendment; we know that John L. Lewis and his C. I. O. are opposed to it; and this Congress is still greatly influenced by the wishes of the administration.

This law is being used by the present N. L. R. B. in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution, which provides that—Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

Just why should we appropriate money which the N. L. R. B. uses in part to suppress freedom of speech and of the press?

Just why should we wait before remedying the wrong which is being done to our citizens until some committee in the House or Senate sees fit to release for our action a bill which would correct the situation?

If we cut this appropriation by $39,600, it will serve as a warning to the Board to cease its wrongful, its arbitrary, and its un-American interpretation of the law.

So long as it is my privilege to remain in Congress and the Wagner Act remains unamended, the attention of the Members of the House will be called, as I am able to gain the floor, to the necessity for the amendment of that act.

Let me give you a few facts which cannot be contradicted and which show clearly that the Board denies the right of free speech, the freedom of the press, to some who are opposed to its views.

Under the Constitution certain members of the C. I. O. have exercised their right to free speech and, by their utterances, have coerced workers into joining the C. I. O. But the Board holds that neither an employer nor an employee, using the speech of a Congressman made on the floor of the House, can intimate to employees that they are not required to join the C. I. O. in order to get or retain a job.

On the 8th day of April 1937, Richard Frankenstein, a C. I. O. organizer, speaking in Detroit, said:

Henry (meaning Ford) will either recognize the union or he won't build automobiles.

About the same time John L. Lewis made this statement:

Henry Ford will change his mind or he won't build cars.

Here are unequivocal statements by two men who had at their command thousands upon thousands of men ready to do their will, telling a manufacturer of automobiles that he must deal with them or discontinue his business. They were, in effect, telling his employees that they would either join the C. I. O. or they would be out of a job. They exercised the right of free speech.

Our Supreme Court has held in the case of DeYoung against Oregon, decided in 1937, Two Hundred and Ninety-ninth United States Reports, page 353, that even the Communist, under this amendment, had the right to speak freely and to freely write his thoughts advocating the overthrow of our Government, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; just briefly.

Mr. COX. I am prepared to agree with the gentleman that this Board and its organization has been, in aggregate, a butcher of the rights of the people, but will not the gentleman agree with me that there is great force in the position taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] and by the leader of the majority, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], that so long as it is in existence, funds ought to be appropriated for it to carry on its work in a proper way.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Funds should be provided and they are provided in this bill for the proper activities of the Board, and the only object of this amendment is to intimate to the Board that we have no sympathy with the construction they place on the act which deprives a man of the right of free speech and freedom of the press guaranteed under the amendment to the Constitution.

Let me continue the argument to show that the right of free speech exercised by the Communists under the provisions of the first amendment and in which they are protected by the decisions of the Supreme Court is denied to the employer by the activities of this Board.

Henry Ford, evidently believing that he had the right of free speech and a free press, gave his viewpoints on labor organizations, and, among other things, he told not only his employees, but all who cared to listen or to read his pamphlets, that no man desiring work need to pay anyone to get a job with the Ford Motor Co.

This Board, to whom we are today asked by the C. I. O. to give $3,230,000, held that that statement made by Ford, advising his workers and others who might be seeking jobs that it was not necessary for them to pay John L. Lewis' organization in order either to get a job or to hold a job in the Ford Motor Co., was an unfair labor practice.

After litigation in the circuit court of appeals and in the United States Supreme Court the Board was permitted to withdraw and vacate its order.

After further proceedings, the trial examiner, by his intermediate report dated November 7, 1938, while finding in favor of the Ford Motor Co. on all the issues raised by the amended complaint, again held that the giving to the employees of the Ford Co. at the Chicago plant of the pamphlets, setting forth Mr. Ford's views, was an unfair labor practice.

If Homer Martin may be permitted, as he was permitted in the winter of 1937, speaking to a meeting of some 50,000 people on the streets of Detroit, to say that, "The Supreme Court of the United States is the greatest threat to democracy in the United States outside of fascism"; if Frankenstein can tell the workers of Detroit, as he did and as he is permitted to do, that Ford will either recognize the union or he will not build automobiles; if John L. Lewis can tell Henry Ford, through the public press, that he "will change his mind or he won't build cars," why, I ask you, cannot Henry Ford tell his employees that they need not pay tribute to John L. Lewis in order to work for the Ford Motor Co.?

Why should we appropriate money to further the activities of a board which denies to an American citizen the right freely to express his opinion, when the Supreme Court protects a Communist in the expression of his views?

On the 1st day of June 1937, on the floor of this Hall a talk was made by me, pointing out that many of the activities of the C. I. O. in the sit-down strikes in Michigan were directed by and carried on in the manner approved by the Communists. Later, that speech was republished with illustrations.

Seeking to force all the employees of the Muskin Shoe Co. at Westminster, Md., into its organization, the C. I. O. was conducting an organizing campaign. One of the employees, who was opposed to the C. I. O. secured and distributed to some of his fellow workers in the plant reprints of the speech made on the floor of Congress which contained the illustrations added by the Constitutional Educational League.

On July 5, 1938, this National Labor Relations Board held that the Muskin Shoe Co. was guilty of an unfair labor practice because it permitted one of its employees to give to some of his fellow workers copies of that speech as illustrated. It thus denied, not only to the Muskin Shoe Co., but to the employee who distributed the speech the right of free speech and of a free press.

Trial Examiner Hugh C. McCarthy on June 24, 1938, held in the case of Cooper, Wells & Co., which had factories at Decatur, Ala., and in Berrien County, in the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, that the company was guilty of an unfair labor practice because an employee of that company distributed copies of that same speech to some of his fellow workers.

On February 7, 1938, a regional director for the Board filed his intermediate report in which he complained because the Charles S. Harrison Post of the American Legion of Columbus, Ga., had adopted a resolution which quoted at length from the speech made by me on the floor of this House on the first day of June 1937, in which it was pointed out that the C. I. O. was following in the footsteps of the Communists.

Note this now, if you will, an American Legion post is condemned because it calls attention to the subversive activities of the C. I. O.

The Chairman of this Board, it has been said, has not gone so far in construing the law against the employer or the independent worker as have the two Smiths, but even the Chairman takes the position, as will be seen by reading pages 1575 and 1576 of the hearings, that if the relation of employer and employee does not raise a presumption of undue influence it does place the employer in a position of enormous influence over the employee.

Mr. Madden was asked, in substance, if an employee went to an employer and attempted to discuss organization activities, the formation of a union, or to seek advice as to affiliation with any labor organization, as to whether he should join the A. F. of L., the C. I. O., or a company union, what position the employer should take, and he replied:

I have no doubt whatever as to what I would advise an employer to do in those circumstances. I would advise him simply to say to his man, "I am sorry, but the spirit of this law asks me to keep my hands off your organization affairs."

Here we have a fair, square statement to the effect that the employer has no right as an American citizen to answer an employee's question on a matter which vitally concerns each of them.

The United States Supreme Court, in Near v. Minnesota (283 U. S. 697), has clearly defined the meaning of the first amendment. That same Court upheld the right of the citizen to circulate pamphlets in 1938 when it decided the case of Lovell v. Griffin (58 S. C. R. 666).

The N. L. R. A. has been held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it must be assumed that the act did not intend to run counter to the first amendment of the Constitution. In fact, in National Labor Relations Board v. Union Pacific Stages (1938) (99 Fed. (2d) 153) the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the act was never intended to violate the Constitution of the United States.

It further held that it was not intended to prevent the free expression by an employer of his opinion as to whether or not his employees should or should not be required to join a union.

If I read that decision correctly, the Court held that if such a construction be given to the act then the act itself would be unconstitutional.

A trial examiner of the Board having again, on November 7, 1938, held that an employer who tells an employee or one looking for a job that he need not join any particular union in order to obtain or to hold that job is guilty of an unfair labor practice, and that holding being directly contrary to the first amendment and to the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, we should cut this appropriation to this Board as a warning to it that it should proceed in a lawful way and subject to the provisions of the Federal Constitution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] it has never been contended either by the distinguished chairman of this subcommittee or myself that any Member of this House or this committee should be precluded in his right to offer any amendment to any section of this bill, to strike out any portion, or to strike out whole paragraphs of the bill. I simply defend the procedure and the authority of the Committee on Appropriations. The Congress passed the Wagner Act. Under that act the National Labor Relations Board was set up and under the Budgetary and Accounting Act of 1921 it is their business to come before the Committee on Appropriations and there justify the amount they request and justify the efficiency of the expenditures they make.

There is, therefore, no basis for the contention the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] made at the outset, and it is evidenced by the fact that an amendment was pending here a while ago to strike out the whole paragraph. If the House wishes to do so, it is quite all right; but the members of the subcommittee listened to testimony from members of the Board, from the Secretary, from the fiscal agent of the Board, and then determined in their best judgment what is necessary in order to articulate the functions of the Board for the next fiscal year. To show you how abortive and how fruitless and futile the efforts of the gentleman from Michigan are, if you strike out $39,600 under this amendment, the Labor Board can discharge 25 stenographers, and that is as far as it will go. It will not vary or alter or determine the policy in one iota or particular. It does not change the attitude of the members of the Board. It does not change one circumstance of policy, and it is a rather vain and fruitless way of going about an effort to penalize the Board, whose philosophy is probably not agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan. I stated on this floor yesterday, and stated in rather caustic and critical terms, that I did not agree with everything that the Board has done. I take exception to the viewpoint and the philosophy that has been expressed by some members of the Board, but I am not so naive as to think that I am going to change that policy by knocking $39,600 off their appropriation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman think it would be of any value to them to know that we do not approve of that, that we cut that out?

Mr. DIRKSEN. How shall the Board understand that the gentleman from Michigan has that in mind, when he simply strikes $39,600 off the total appropriation? The Board is under no obligation to infer that it was meant to change their policy, and so the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan has no value whatsoever in determining what the Board ought to do in the future. As has been stated, I think the Wagner Act ought to be amended in some particulars—in two that have come to my attention out of experiences in my own county that have impressed themselves on my attention, but this is not the way to go about it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then I ask the gentleman if he approves of this statement of Mr. Madden, on page 1576 of the hearings, wherein he said that if an employee came to the employer and asked his advice that Mr. Madden would say to the employer that he should not advise him at all, and whether or not the gentleman is in favor of an amendment to take care of things like that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I answer that by asking the gentleman this question: How will the gentleman's amendment in any way affect the statement that Mr. Madden made then, or in any statement that he makes in the future?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very well. If we cut this and if he sees the debate and understands why it was offered it might be a reminder not to make a decision of that kind.

Mr. DIRKSEN. All he will understand is that one out of 435 Members sought to strike out $39,600 because he did not agree with some principle or policy of the Board. Certainly that is not going to be very persuasive either in this body or to the Board.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is it not a good time when we discuss giving these departments money, to scold a little and offer suggestions?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then I want to ask the gentleman, did not the Board and its personnel encourage strikes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is a matter of high controversy.

Mr. GIFFORD. We could not have had more strikes if we had two boards.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly I cannot ventilate that now. It would take several hours. I could make a very persuasive statement about it.

Mr. GIFFORD. It is a good time to talk about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I believe the action of the House on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the debate which has followed has somewhat clarified the situation. Certainly it would be most unfortunate if the committee pursued the very questionable policy of trying to show its displeasure toward departments, because they do not agree with some action they have taken either on a matter of policy or a matter of personnel or appointments or whatever it might be, and chip a little bit off of their appropriation. That is a species of legislative coercion. If a department or a commission is not acting and functioning in the way that Congress thinks it should, the way is wide open to amend the organic law or to abolish the commission.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not the gentleman's memory serve him that in years past he has tried the same thing himself?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not think so, but, of course, one of the things that a good legislator ought to do is to change his mind if he has erred.

Mr. GIFFORD. If my memory serves me, it was often done on your side of the House, that I think you yourself must have done it sometime.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may have engaged in it. In 16 years' experience under the administrations I have served, I no doubt have a lot of sins to answer for.

Mr. GIFFORD. I just wanted the gentleman to recognize that there is nothing novel about this.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield briefly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The law is administered in just about the same fashion as is the Federal Trade Commission. The significant thing about this whole set-up is that out of 15,082 cases that were filed only 6 percent ever went to a decision before the Board.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct. The fact is the committee has gone into this matter very carefully. We have made appropriations for the National Labor Relations Board, and we have given them an increase of $264,000 over their appropriation for the current fiscal year. We made a slight reduction of $40,000 in their clerical help. While it would be most unwise for Congress to undertake to try to penalize a board or a commission because it did not like them, on the other hand it would be equally stupid and foolish to set up the criterion that because we do like them and because they are popular and because a lot of telegrams have been sent, we are going to go hog wild and open the doors of the Treasury to them. So I want to ask the committee to respect the calm and deliberate consideration of the subcommittee which handled this matter. Our appropriation gives the Board $264,000 more than the current fiscal year, and in the estimation of the committee it is ample to enable them to carry on the functions for which they were created.

I hope that later on when amendments are offered to increase the amount the Committee of the Whole House will permit the action of the subcommittee to stand.

I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] in making his statement referred to free speech. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that previous to the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act, when a worker went out and tried to organize a union he was brought into the office of the employer, and even though he had a family, even though that family needed food, the employer said to him, "You are out talking union organization. You are fired from this plant." What did that man at that time think of free speech? Where was the protection of free speech to him? When he went out with a piece of union literature in his pocket and he was fired for that, what did he think about free press? He has now free speech, at least, under the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For all authorized and necessary administrative expenses of the Social Security Board in performing the duties imposed upon it in titles I, II, III, IV, VII, IX, and X of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, including three Board members, an executive director at a salary of $9,500 a year, and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, including not to exceed $10,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Board when specifically authorized by the Chairman and not to exceed $5,000 for travel in foreign countries; not to exceed $10,000 for payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of persons serving while away from their home, without other compensation, in an advisory capacity to the Social Security Board; expenses of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and other personal effects (not to exceed in any case 5,000 pounds) of officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, when specifically authorized by the Board; supplies; reproducing, photographing, and all other equipment, office appliances, and labor-saving devices; services; advertising, postage, telephone, telegraph, and not to exceed $900 for teletype news services and tolls; newspapers and press clippings (not to exceed $1,500), periodicals, manuscripts and special reports, purchase and exchange of lawbooks and other books of reference; library membership fees or dues in organizations which issue publications to members only or to members at a lower price than to others, payment for which may be made in advance; alterations and repairs; rentals, including garages, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; purchase and exchange, not to exceed $25,000, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes in the District of Columbia and in the field; and miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary by the Board, $22,000,000: Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase by the Board when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $100: Provided further, That the Board may expend not to exceed $25,000 of the sum herein appropriated for temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special accounting, actuarial, statistical, translating and reporting, engineering, and organizational services determined necessary by the Board, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States: Provided further, That no salary shall be paid for personal services from the money herein appropriated under the heading "Social Security Board" in excess of the rates allowed by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for similar services: Provided further, That this latter proviso shall not apply to the salaries of the Board members nor to the compensation of persons or organizations temporarily employed for the special services described in the second proviso of this paragraph.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 42, line 21, strike out "$22,000,000" and insert "$21,450,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, first let me say that this amendment is practical and it can be practically applied. This bill carries $22,000,000 for salaries and expenses for the Social Security Board. They were authorized to spend $22,500,000 by the Budget, but we cut them $500,000 in the subcommittee. It is my belief this could be cut just a little further, and so I restore the figure to $21,450,000, which was the amount available to them during the fiscal year 1939 for administrative expenses.

It is a matter of controversy and opinion as to whether the Board should be given more. My own opinion is that we could slice off another $550,000 and not do injustice to the Security Board or cripple their functions in any respect. Let me tell you why. They have, for instance, an informational service getting out pamphlets, writing speeches, making broadcasts over the radio, and that sort of thing, in which they employ 91 people. For this they have asked $295,540. It looks to me as though the pattern of the Social Security Act has been pretty well established and that there are opportunities for economy. Certainly, they could economize in this particular bureau by diminishing the number of people who are now writing speeches and pamphlets. Offhand, it seems that to have 91 people engaged in this kind of work in a single bureau in Washington is a little too much. Then, they have a Bureau of Research and Statistics, whose work has been going on for a long time. It is my better judgment that they can be reduced. At the present time they have over 206 people working in the Research Bureau and have asked for $514,900 for this service. They have a large staff in the general counsel's office; as a matter of fact, they have 154 lawyers in the Social Security Board in Washington today, and they are asking $460,900 for this purpose.

Insofar as we were able to cross-examine the administrative staff before the committee, it was my deliberate judgment that there could be economies, that there could be consolidations of functions, and that we are entirely justified in slicing another $550,000 off of the appropriation, so that it will be reduced to $21,450,000, the amount that was carried in the 1939 act. As this thing grows they will have thousands and thousands of employees. They have not reached their full personnel stature as yet. I rather hesitate to think to what proportions the Social Security Board will grow unless we serve notice on them that we are going to demand some economy; and, as I say, this amendment is entirely practical, because it simply means a diminution of jobs that are not absolutely essential. I hope the Committee will support the amendment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. What is the nature of the speeches that are prepared by these 90 employees?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know, but I have a rough breakdown here. They gave out 2,883 newspaper releases. They wrote 484 articles, and they occupied 701 hours of broadcasting time for which they did not have to pay anything. They must, however, have men to devise broadcasting script, to write up releases, and one thing and another; and it seems here is a good place where the Congress can very well economize. I sincerely hope the Members will support this very worth while and practical amendment, because it is in the interest of economy and it will work neither injustice nor hardship upon the Board.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a very dangerous thing further to curtail the administrative expenses of the Social Security Board. The committee, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, made a slight cut in this appropriation. It must be remembered that the Social Security Board has perhaps the biggest task administratively of any bureau or board or organization which the Government has set up during this emergency. It reaches out into every county, every city, and every hamlet in the Nation. It touches the lives, the habits, the customs, and the hopes and aspirations of all the American people. For this reason it is quite natural that they must have a large force of people engaged in informational and educational work.

I cannot recall readily, but they stated in our hearings the number of communications that come to them. They get inquiries from humble citizens who want to know this and who want to know that, who are asking about the operations of this law; and it has required a large amount of educational work in order to inform your constituents and my constituents of what their duties and their privileges and prerogatives are under this law. It seems to me that for Congress now to be niggardly in the matter of their appropriations would be something that might react upon every Member of this body when my constituents and yours are not able to get the information and the service they are entitled to expect from this Board.

I hope very much that the Committee will not make any further reduction.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. If this amendment is adopted, it will mean a number of people will lose their jobs. Instead of adopting amendments which will result in people losing their jobs, we should create more jobs.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It would cripple the service which this organization is rendering to the forty or fifty million people who are policyholders or clients of the Social Security Board, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were—ayes 80, noes 86.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. DIRKSEN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 111, noes 130.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grants to States for unemployment-compensation administration: For grants to States for unemployment-compensation administration, as authorized in title III of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, including rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $49,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 44, line 13, after the sign and figures "$49,000,000", strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "of which sum such amount as may be necessary shall be available for grants under title III for any period in the fiscal year 1939 subsequent to March 31, 1939."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have shown this amendment to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Massachusetts. This does not affect the amount provided in the paragraph for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration but merely permits the use of a portion of that during the balance of the fiscal year after March 31. A deficiency item has already been acted upon, which gives the Social Security Board funds for these grants up to April 1. If language is inserted according to the pending amendment, it will permit that Board to use a portion of this money for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration during the remainder of the fiscal year. I understand the gentlemen on that side do not have any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933," approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved August 31, 1935 (16 U. S. C., ch. 12a), including the continued construction of Pickwick Landing Dam, Guntersville Dam, Chickamauga Dam, Hiwassee Dam, Gilbertsville Dam, and for construction of a dam at or near Watts Bar on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and after preliminary investigations of sites for dams at or near Coulter Shoals on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and on tributaries of said river, and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, law books, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, fiscal year 1940, $39,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation and any unexpended balance on June 30, 1939, in the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939," and the receipts of the Tennessee Valley Authority from all sources during the fiscal year 1940 (except as limited by sec. 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended), shall be covered into and accounted for as one fund to be known as the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1940," to remain available until June 30, 1940, and to be available for the payment of obligations chargeable against the "Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939," and for contractual obligations for the procurement of equipment as authorized in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939: Provided further, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Tennessee Valley Authority is hereby authorized to incur obligations and enter into contracts for the procurement of equipment to be installed in dams and powerhouses in an amount not in excess of $4,000,000, and this action shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the United States for payment of the cost thereof.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read, in that, starting with line 17, there is added to the paragraph legislation on an appropriation bill, and I therefore make a point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair inquire to which page the gentleman refers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that, starting with line 17, page 48, legislation is provided for granting authority to the Tennessee Valley Authority in excess of that which it presently has by statutory law. There is no existing law providing for the authority that would be exercised by the T. V. A. under this provision, and since it is legislation attached to an appropriation bill I make a point of order against the entire paragraph.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this language was carried in the appropriation act last year, but the gentleman is correct. It is subject to a point of order, and I concede the point of order. I offer the paragraph with that portion eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

A similar point of order as indicated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was passed upon by Chairman Vinson, of Kentucky, on the 28th of April 1937, to the effect that language in a general appropriation bill authorizing the T. V. A. to incur obligations and enter into contracts was held to be legislation and not in order.

In accordance with that ruling, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the paragraph with the exception of the language beginning in line 17, page 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 47, after line 6, insert:

"TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933,' approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved August 31, 1935 (16 U. S. C. ch. 12a), including the continued construction of Pickwick Landing Dam, Guntersville Dam, Chickamauga Dam, Hiwassee Dam, Gilbertsville Dam, and for construction of a dam at or near Watts bar on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and for preliminary investigations of sites for dams at or near Coulter Shoals on the Tennessee River, Tenn., and on tributaries of said river and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, law books, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, fiscal year 1940, $39,000,000: Provided, That this appropriation and any unexpended balance on June 30, 1939, in the 'Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939,' and the receipts of the Tennessee Valley Authority from all sources during the fiscal year 1940 (except as limited by sec. 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended), shall be covered into and accounted for as one fund to be known as the 'Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1940,' to remain available until June 30, 1940, and to be available for the payment of obligations chargeable against the 'Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939,' and for contractual obligations for the procurement of equipment as authorized in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939."

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARNES of Alabama to the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 48, in line 4, as printed in the present bill, after the comma strike out "$39,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$39,455,000."

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I should like to see if we can have some understanding about the time for debate on this paragraph. There will be several amendments, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on my amendment, which is the paragraph, and all amendments thereto, close in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have 10 minutes to present a discussion with respect to the language the gentleman wishes to strike out of that amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I should like to have 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the distinguished gentleman from Virginia if we cannot let the debate run along for a little while before coming to an agreement?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The difficulty is that if gentlemen are going to speak for 10 or 15 or 20 minutes each, there ought to be some understanding in the beginning so the Members will be advised as to how much time we are going to be able to devote to this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 20 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I wish to offer as a substitute amendment. I want some assurance that I will be able to offer the amendment in this time, or I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will have plenty of time to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that the time of debate on this paragraph be limited to 1 hour and 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I understand that out of that time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and I will each be allowed 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great interest shown in this matter, I again modify the request to an hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. The modified request is that the time be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PEARSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia, whether or not those of us who are on our feet and are interested in this matter are to be given an opportunity to be heard within the hour and a half?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The time will be under the control of the Chairman. Of course, I do not control the time.

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, will it be the purpose of the Chairman to divide the time between those in favor of the amendment and those opposed to it?

The CHAIRMAN. Insofar as the Chair is able to ascertain the views of the gentlemen who would speak, that is true. Of course, it will facilitate the work of the Chair, if the time is to be limited, if some agreement can be had in advance with regard to which Members shall speak and the length of time they shall use.

Mr. DIRKSEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it understood to be a part of the request of the gentleman from Virginia that some Members are to be allotted 10 minutes, including myself?

The CHAIRMAN. The request as presented did not include any such stipulation, but is simply a request that the time be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TARVER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that a number of amendments are to be proposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia and the Committee is not now advised as to the nature of some of the amendments. I do not believe that at this time we ought to agree to an arbitrary limitation on debate, and for that reason I am compelled to object.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we have had very liberal debate on this matter under general debate, and the question has been debated even out of order. It seems to me an hour and a half of debate on one item in the bill is ample in view of the fact there are other items which are going to be controversial. The Members will not want to stay here late tonight, and we must finish the bill today. Therefore, I am compelled to move that all debate on my amendment and all amendments thereto close in an hour and a half.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order for the gentleman to move to close debate until after debate has proceeded for at least 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to speak for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order that there shall be no motion to limit debate until after there has been debate is sustained.

The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that he may address the Committee for an additional 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to restore to this bill the sum of $455,000 which was recommended by the Director of the Budget. If this $455,000 is restored by the House, it will serve to add $25,000 as an initial step in the program for a washing plant for raw phosphate which will ultimately cost approximately $500,000, and will also add $430,000 for the construction of a commercial-sized unit for a blast furnace for the purpose of reducing raw phosphate to a commercial product so it may be used in the fertilization of farms.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. By what fuel is this blast furnace to be fueled?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. By coal.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. As a matter of information, why should the blast furnace be fueled by coal when all this electric power is available?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I want to answer the gentlemen's question. If you will let me make my statement I believe it will serve to answer many questions the Members may have in their minds.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman sure that gas may not be used part of the time in the furnace?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. No; gas may be used, and I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

This great movement had its inception or arose out of conditions which this country was confronted with in 1917. Muscle Shoals was originally developed for the production of nitrates in war and fertilizer in peace.

When the T. V. A. Act was passed in 1933 the Congress continued the original conception of the development of this great area; that is, the production of cheap fertilizer for the farmers of America as a part of the interrelated T. V. A. program.

Today the T. V. A. has approximately $3,000,000 worth of equipment down there for use in carrying on its experiments in the production of fertilizer and approximately $1,000,000 of raw material in the form of raw phosphate. They have to obtain their supplies of raw phosphate from commercial sources at the present time, and raw phosphate constitutes 40 percent of the total cost of commercial fertilizer which is sold to the farmer.

There were only two bids during the past year, and the beginning of this washing plant will act as a deterrent to commercial companies from raising the prices of raw phosphate to a prohibitive point. This is of special import to Members from the farm belt and to the Members from the West, where we have great natural beds of phosphate.

The T. V. A. has experimented more than any other agency in this country in the development of cheaper fertilizer. They have produced triple superphosphate, which is three times more powerful than the commercial product which is being sold to the farmers today by the commercial companies. They can produce this triple superphosphate at approximately the same cost the present type of phosphate is produced by the commercial companies. Real savings come to the farmer in the shipment of this triple superphosphate because it is three times more effective as a plant food than the fertilizer the farmers buy which is produced by the commercial companies.

The T. V. A. has successfully experimented with the use of electricity in reducing raw phosphates, and it is the first agency to do so.

It is interesting to note that the commercial companies have not changed their method of reducing raw phosphate to a commercial fertilizer since 1880.

The T. V. A. wants $430,000 to construct a commercial-sized unit blast furnace for the purpose of obtaining a contrast or a comparison between the economies in production in the electric furnace method and the blast furnace method. This should be of special importance to all of us and especially to those from the coal regions, and certainly this entire subject is of vast importance to the 40,000,000 farmers of the country. Having given you the background, I am making an appeal to you not to depart from the original conception in the development of this great area—the production of cheaper fertilizer and a more potent fertilizer than the commercial companies now produce; in other words, let us get a greater plant food content in our commercial fertilizer at approximately the same cost. You will then be effecting a real saving to the American farmer. The soil is our greatest natural resource. It has been impoverished by improper farming methods and erosion throughout the centuries. The replacement of phosphate is problem No. 1 in restoring soil fertility.

I listened yesterday with wonder and amazement to the remarkable and eloquent address of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] when he took a row of prosaic figures and entranced this House with his histrionic ability and told us such beautiful and amazing stories. I listened with rapt amazement when he touched upon the fertilizer situation in which he attacked the T. V. A. fertilizer program. I thought that, although the line of fertilizer which he spread upon the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on yesterday might produce the vote in certain sections of the country, it would not enrich our impoverished soil nor guarantee the production of better crops for the farmers of America. [Laughter and applause.]

I am very much interested in bringing to the farmers of America cheaper and better fertilizer. The T. V. A. has pioneered in this field, and that effort has spread not only in the T. V. A. area but all over the United States. Through the various land-grant colleges and agricultural schools of this country we have already used fertilizer produced by the T. V. A. in 38 of the States in the Union, and through the Department of Agriculture, 3 additional States, making a total of 41 States which have received benefits from the distribution of fertilizer manufactured at the Shoals by the T. V. A.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman, inasmuch as I have mentioned his name.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to read to the gentleman from the T. V. A.'s own Budget justification where we are allowing them $450,000 for small-scale research work; we are allowing them $785,000 for tests and demonstrations of the use of fertilizers, and in addition the bill contains other items on the fertilizer program that will project them into large-scale production, as distinguished from research and experimentation; and the gentleman will admit that last year we expended $1,875,000 in large-scale production and sold the fertilizer at 68½ cents per unit, which is the commercial rate, and lost $650,000 on the deal. If the gentleman will justify that, I will eat it.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama cannot admit the accuracy of the statements or the conclusions drawn by the gentleman from Illinois. They did expend $1,875,000 for the production of fertilizer, and they sold at commercial prices $1,200,000, the other $600,000 was not a loss, because that amount represents the cost of the fertilizer the T. V. A. used themselves in their own experiments.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And will the gentleman tell me what the language means in the T. V. A.'s own figures?—

Net cost of experimental production, $625,000.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. They had representatives before our subcommittee who attempted to explain to the gentleman from Illinois in the committee what that $600,000 in large part represented, namely, fertilizer which the T. V. A. used itself in carrying on demonstrations.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Oh, just a moment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to keep the record straight.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The T. V. A. has spent a total of approximately $230,000,000 on its program, and the total for research in fertilizer amounts to $6,404,000.

The fertilizer program of the T. V. A. has the general approval of the farmers of this country. Their sentiment is well expressed in a letter addressed to me by the Honorable Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, under the date February 7.

I quote in part from Mr. O'Neal's letter:

The T. V. A. fertilizer research and demonstration projects are a part of our conservation program to restore and maintain the fertility of our soils. This program has met with widespread and growing support of farmers. American farmers pay an annual fertilizer bill of about $160,000,000. The low plant-food content of prevailing mixed fertilizers penalize farmers heavily through unnecessary costs for filler.

During the past 2 years the American Farm Bureau Federation has had a special committee of farmers studying the T. V. A. fertilizer and conservation program. On the basis of our committee's findings our organization has strongly endorsed and urged the necessary costs for filler.

In view of the vital importance of the fertilizer program to the farmers of this country, I sincerely hope the House will support my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There are two propositions involved in the gentleman's amendment. The amount that is suggested is to provide for two items.

The first item, as he says, is $25,000 to start a washing plant, to bluff the private industries, so that they will not hike the price on the cost of raw materials. The facts are, as the evidence shows, that we have already a million dollar bluff there, because we have spent almost $1,000,000 acquiring raw phosphate land, and it stands there today as perpetual protection to the T. V. A. fertilizer enterprise, and as a threat to the private industries to keep them from hiking the price of the raw product.

The second item, the larger, is $430,000, and that is proposed to start a new commercial production unit.

To keep clearly in mind what the situation is we should realize what the bill still provides. There is not a single thing in the bill as it now stands, with the appropriation now provided, that will interfere in the slightest with any phase of the present fertilizer work of the T. V. A.

The bill as it now stands carries the full request for the regular operation of the present fertilizer plant. I have here the printed Budget estimates as submitted to our committee by the T. V. A. Our bill still permits the $450,000 asked for research. It still permits the amount of money necessary to produce this fertilizer that is sold through the Triple A—$1,250,000. It still permits $625,000 to be set up as the cost of providing the fertilizer that is used in the T. V. A.'s own distribution. It still provides $550,000 additional for farm tests and demonstrations and that means for the salary of the demonstrators who go out to show the farmers how to use the fertilizer they furnish to them. It still provides $110,000 for tests and research by State university experiment stations. It still permits $115,000 for soil surveys through the various States, and it still provides $10,000 for the payment of freight on the fertilizer distributed.

The only place in which a reduction is made is in the request on appropriations for new equipment, and we still leave here $240,000 for the construction of an agglomerating plant. We still leave here $100,000 for new instruments and tools and for improvements to the existing plant.

So, in the appropriations carried in this bill we make full provision for continuing the operations with the three electric furnaces now used and we provide $340,000 for additional equipment and improvements.

The $430,000 which the gentleman's amendment would provide proposes to establish at this famed home of cheap electric power a blast furnace, a commercial-size plant. Questions asked of the representatives of the T. V. A. at our hearing revealed that they recognize that the establishment of a commercial-size production plant at the present time is not justified on the basis of research now made. The question was asked as to whether or not this would be a laboratory plant or a production plant. The hearings will show that the answer was that it would be a production plant. At Nashville, Tenn., a blast furnace is in operation by a private company at the present time. This simply means Government competition. But possibly a commercial-size plant is wanted for experimentation.

I have in my hand a five-page statement that was prepared by a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority and by Dr. Miller, the man in charge of this operation, who came to see me a couple of days after the hearing. The statement says:

We recognize that there has not been sufficient experimentation yet to determine whether or not we should build a commercial plant.

In this statement I also read this sentence:

A design for stoves has been worked out with reasonable hope of satisfactory operation before much more exploratory work is necessary.

Then they go on to suggest that they would be willing to have this item reduced from $430,000 to $250,000, so that they could have a laboratory plant. In fact, they suggest that course be pursued; that is, an experimental blast furnace before they put up a commercial plant.

They conclude as follows:

As indicated in the foregoing discussion, an alternative procedure would be to concentrate efforts immediately on a smaller-sized blast furnace to develop more complete information for use in determining the larger and more expensive installation. It is therefore suggested that this course of action would reduce this item to $258,000.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am sorry; I only have a few minutes.

So that in no way does the recommendation of the subcommittee interfere at all with the fertilizer program. You may be in favor of the fertilizer program and vote for this bill with complete confidence that the appropriation carries every item needed to continue, plus $240,000 for an agglomerating plant and $100,000 for other improvements.

The only thing the committee did was to say that since the $25,000 for a washing plant is starting a half-million-dollar washing plant—not now needed—when there is a "bluff" already there, with nearly a million dollars for phosphate land already purchased, we should not start until the washing plant is needed.

And since the $430,000 is for an unproved commercial-size blast furnace, when the primary product of the T. V. A. is electricity, the committee felt that further experimentation should be made before we borrow money to spend $430,000 for a blast furnace when the gentlemen themselves said they had not had enough experimentation to determine that a commercial-size plant should be built.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee reporting this bill, but because of my membership on the subcommittee handling agricultural appropriations, I have heard considerable evidence from officials of the Department of Agriculture as well as from officials of the T. V. A. regarding this subject matter. It is for that reason that I venture to trespass for a moment on your time.

I hope no Member of the House will misunderstand the situation. The items which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] is seeking to restore to the bill are items that were asked for by the T. V. A., and which were deemed of sufficient importance by the Bureau of the Budget to merit its approval.

The subcommittee handling this bill has brought in a bill carrying with it an appropriation of $1,800,000,000, in round figures. In their report they point with some pride to the fact that out of Budget estimates of approximately that amount, they have managed to save $1,500,000. They have saved approximately one-third of that $1,500,000 by taking it out of this appropriation for the benefit of the farmers of this country who are burdened with the high prices which they now have to pay for commercial fertilizer.

The officials of the T. V. A. are satisfied that with some additional funds they can go further than they have yet been able to go in an effort to solve the fertilizer problem of these farmers living in the areas of the country where a considerable portion of their gross income must be paid out for commercial fertilizer. There is no more pressing farm problem. Those farmers are today in the grip of what I think may properly be referred to as the Fertilizer Trust. I say that because evidence has been submitted to a subcommittee, of which I am a member, showing that during recent years, although the prices of raw materials going into the manufacture of commercial fertilizer have continually decreased, the price of the completed product, commercial fertilizer as sold to the farmer, has continually increased. That situation could only be brought about by price-fixing agreements in violation of antitrust laws between the most important units of the fertilizer industry. Is not an effort to remedy that situation worthy of an appropriation of a few hundred thousand dollars? Is it not as important to have a yardstick for the cost of fertilizer manufacture as for the cost of power?

The purpose which the Congress had in mind when it provided in establishing the project at Muscle Shoals, that it should be devoted primarily in peacetime to the manufacture of fertilizer, should not be overlooked. These few thousand dollars will enable T. V. A. to proceed more effectively with that work. They desire to go further in an effort to solve this problem and they have asked this comparatively small amount of $455,000 out of a total appropriation of $1,800,000,000, and have secured for it the approval of the Budget. It is now sought to effect a paltry saving by leaving this Budget estimate out of this huge bill. I believe in economy, but I have seen little evidence of economy in government recently, and I do not want it to begin by eliminating these small items for the benefit of consumers of commercial fertilizers.

I certainly hope that in justice to the agricultural population of this country, who live in areas where commercial fertilizer must be bought in order that they can produce anything like a reasonable crop, the House will give effect to the recommendation of the Budget and not undertake to make this small saving at their expense.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this amendment is absolutely unnecessary, for, as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] stated, this bill already provides many thousands of dollars for aid to the fertilizer department of the T. V. A.

It never was the intention of the act setting up the T. V. A. that it should engage in any operation that would be in direct competition with industry. It has not been the intention to sell fertilizer in the open market in direct competition with the fertilizer companies. It was intended that the T. V. A. engage in experimentation. They have spent millions of dollars for experimentation, and I am not really opposed to their carrying on experimentation where and when private industry cannot do it. This, of course, is the only justification for the establishment of the fertilizer division. There is no justification for the expenditure of this large sum for the construction of a blast furnace. They already have at Muscle Shoals a large blast furnace in full operation operated by electricity. This furnace will be sufficient for all reasonable experimentation. The extravagant spending of money by the T. V. A. is well recognized.

Here is the proposition in a nutshell: This bill carries $450,000 in this item, and the bill is already loaded to the limit as far as T. V. A. is concerned. There is no question about it, and I dare say that the acting chairman of this committee certainly will agree with me that the bill already at this time carries as much as it ought to carry for this activity.

When we come to consider the appropriation for the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam and the Watts Bar Dam and the Coulter Shoals Dam, I hope we might strike these appropriations out. We were able to defeat the Gilbertsville Dam on several previous occasions, and I hope we can do it today. This project will cost the United States the colossal sum of at least $200,000,000. Its availability as a flood-control project or as an advantage to navigation does not justify this terrific expenditure. The Army engineers say that better navigation facilities and more useful flood-control programs can be constructed in the vicinity of Gilbertsville for at least one-tenth of this terrific expenditure.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STARNES) there were—ayes 41, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: On page 47, after line 6, insert the following:

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'The Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933,' approved May 18, 1933, as amended by the act approved August 31, 1935 (16 U. S. C. ch. 12a), including the continued construction of Pickwick Landing Dam, Guntersville Dam, Chickamauga Dam, Hiwassee Dam, and the acquisition of necessary land, the clearing of such land, relocation of highways, and the construction or purchase of transmission lines and other facilities, and all other necessary works authorized by such acts, and for printing and binding, law books, books of reference, newspapers, periodicals, purchase, maintenance, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary salaries and expenses connected with the organization, operation, and investigations of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for examination of estimates of appropriations and activities in the field, fiscal year 1940, $21,797,000: Provided, That this appropriation and any unexpended balance on June 30, 1939, in the 'Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939,' and the receipts of the Tennessee Valley Authority from all sources during the fiscal year 1940 (except as limited by sec. 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended), shall be covered into and accounted for as one fund to be known as the 'Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1940,' to remain available until June 30, 1940, and to be available for the payment of obligations chargeable against the Tennessee Valley Authority fund, 1939,' and for contractual obligations for the procurement of equipment as authorized in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939."

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, if the members of the committee having bills will turn to page 47, line 13, they will notice that my amendment proposes to cut out that language following the Hiwassee Dam down to and including all of line 17, and on page 48, line 4, it proposes to change the amount, $39,000,000, to $21,797,000, a total saving of more than $17,000,000, and an ultimate saving of at least $200,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee originally brought in the bill setting up the Tennessee Valley Authority, I feel quite sure there are but few members of that committee remaining today who are not sadly disappointed in the trend affairs have taken in regard to the T. V. A. Some time later, when we were asked to bring out legislation extending the T. V. A., we did so with a great deal of reluctance. Those who were Members of the House at that time will remember that it was, indeed, a long and bitter fight before they were able to drag from the members of that committee any authority to grant an extension to the T. V. A. Those of us who were the best acquainted with the conduct of the T. V. A. at that time had our grave suspicions of the intentions of this bureau which had been set up with such extensive and unprecedented authority. I may say to the members of this committee that here in front of you today in this proposed appropriation for the T. V. A. is a typical example of the rising tide of bureaucracy which threatens to engulf representative government in this Nation. Here is a bureau originally set up to provide nitrates for national defense, fertilizer for farmers, and to serve as a yardstick with which to measure utility rates. Now they are trying to develop into a gigantic octopus to stretch all over this Nation. Typical of all bureaus, they are endeavoring, first, to create a larger field for their own activity—endeavoring to enhance their own power and to grow until they can take unto themselves all-embracing power for all activities within their reach.

Let me say to you Members representing coal-mining districts and to everyone on this floor who is concerned about the employment situation that you should stop and think before granting any further extensions to the T. V. A. For every million kilowatts of electricity they produce they do away with the need for over 700 tons of coal, and every ton of coal mined and put on the market represents a day's work for some coal miner or railroad worker.

Today, when we are resorting to almost every resource within our power to feed the unemployed in this Nation, it seems to me to be extreme nonsense to go ahead and create more unemployment. Taking the figures of the Tennessee Valley Authority itself we find that at the present time they have a productive capacity of 570,000 kilowatts. In a recent deal they have bought 296,000 kilowatts. This, we find, gives them a total output of 866,000 kilowatts. According to their own most optimistic figures they will have sale for only 563,000 kilowatts even in December of 1941. At the present time, or, indeed, 2 years hence, therefore, they have a surplus of at least 303,000 kilowatts.

Are we to permit this octopus of bureaucracy to continue to grow? Every year they demand more, and more, and more money. Shall we grant them continually increasing amounts in order to permit them to extend their activities all over the Nation? Each year they come asking for a comparatively small appropriation to be used in preliminary work. Last year it was $5,000,000 for the Gilbertsville Dam. Today they are back asking for $12,503,000 for the same dam on the plea that this sum is necessary to save the original $5,000,000 from being wasted. At the same time they are asking for $5,000,000 additional for preliminary work on various other dams, which will make necessary the eventual expenditure of nearly $200,000,000. It is but the start of another vicious cycle. Let us stop it here.

I am sure the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] and his five colleagues, who also understand the coal industry and who are in accord with me in this matter, see the threat of the T. V. A. to the bituminous-coal industry.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman take the position this Congress should act in such a way that its actions on labor in the country in the production and advancement of higher ways of dealing with its affairs should be curtailed because it might add more labor?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; I certainly do. I do not believe this Congress is justified today, because of some socialistic experiment, in permitting labor to be displaced so far as employment is concerned, and I do not believe this Congress is justified in building up one section at the expense of other sections of the United States to the extent that it is building up this section.

The evidence in regard to the production of electricity in connection with the T. V. A. from the very first has shown that electricity has never been produced as cheaply by water power as it has by steam when it has been necessary to buy sites composed of farm land for power dams. [Applause.]

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anything new that can be said about the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam, and certainly I know of no answer that can be made to the philosophy just propounded by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania with reference to the creation of unemployment by the further construction of dams on the Tennessee River. It is an argument that falls by virtue of its own weight. It has no justification either in fact or in logic.

Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States has already approved the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam and the work is in progress there. The sum of $5,500,000 has already been spent in the construction of that project, and certainly the Congress in its wisdom would not now, in a moment of hysteria or excitement, undertake to junk the work and the expenditure that has already been made at Gilbertsville and seek to nullify the entire program of the Authority by now saying that the Authority shall not have the power to construct the dam, which means more in the system than any other single unit under construction by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In answer to the argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania with reference to the sale of power, may I ask him in his diligence to turn to page 1679 of the hearings and read what gentlemen who know something about the sale of power from the Authority have to say about that. Mr. Krug and Mr. Burke, engineers competent to fill their respective positions, said under oath before the committee that the Authority is now selling its peak load of power, that it is up to the estimate which they gave 1½ years ago to the Congress and that unless this program goes on there will not be enough power generated by the Authority to take care of the needs of that section.

I wish I had time to discuss the great work that the Authority is doing in a section of this country that needs it worse than any other part of America. I am only appealing to the fairness of the membership of this House in the consideration of this great question and in considering the needs of that section from which I come, the great Tennessee Valley area, which through this instrumentality, the Tennessee Valley Authority, which Congress created in 1932 is bringing into its own a section that has always had potentialities but which has never been implemented with those agencies which made it possible to realize on those potentialities. The Tennessee Valley Authority is making those things possible, those things to which we are entitled and which we can never hope to attain except through this agency.

The money which has been expended through the Authority has gone into good citizenship; it has gone into valuable public resources that will yield dividends in time to come, dividends in dollars and cents, dividends in matters that are of vital concern to the citizenship of this country, and has added to our natural wealth and resources. I appeal to the membership of this House to permit this program to proceed in an orderly manner. Let the Tennessee Valley Authority proceed with its activities and vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania which would only have a tendency to hamstring and throttle one of the greatest works that any Government instrumentality has undertaken in the southern region of this country.

The hearings reveal the value of the Gilbertsville project from the standpoint of navigation, flood control, and eventually the generation of power. It is shown to be the most essential unit in the whole river program and to abandon it now will mean the virtual loss of all that the Government has invested in the Tennessee Valley. I hope the amendment will fail.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to any curtailment which would destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority and its usefulness. I would like to speak for a moment with reference to a matter on which I spoke yesterday. I believe that as far as the Ohio Valley is concerned the first thing to do in that valley is to undertake the construction of levees and sea walls for those cities that were stricken in the 1937 flood. Flood control for navigation and for power, irrespective of merit, should give way for the present to the imperative demand of immediate levees and sea walls.

During the floods of 1937 an estimated value of between $400,000,000 and $800,000,000 worth of property was lost, and in addition to that something like 1,100,000 or 1,200,000 people were marooned and moved from their homes to places of safety. One million two hundred thousand people would amount to 120 cities with a population of 10,000 each. That gives you an idea of the number of people who were moved during the floods of 1937.

Mr. Chairman, we are going to ultimately build these levees and sea walls. The floods may return this year or next year. If it returns—and there has been a near approach to it recently—you will probably have another half billion dollars of loss. You would still build the levees thereafter. So why not build the levees and sea walls, appropriating sufficient money now to do it, and save the ultimate loss which is sure to come if there are further delays? It has been 2 years now since those floods. Further delay cannot be tolerated. We have need for the labor. We have the unemployed which can be utilized on those projects. My opinion is that every Member in the United States who has a district affected by floods should join with me in asking the Appropriations Committee to appropriate the full amount necessary to construct these needed levees and sea walls, which, in my opinion, the War Department will recommend to the committee as being necessary to start the construction of this year. I am informed the War Department will suggest near $200,000,000 as necessary to properly get under way in the whole United States necessary flood control. I urge serious consideration to the appropriation of a sufficient amount by this Congress to do the job and do it right and save the repetition of another damaging flood.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if it would be possible now to fix a time for closing debate. I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 30 minutes. There are five or six gentlemen on their feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Did not the gentleman's request apply merely to this amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is the heart of the whole program.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us find out what the gentleman's request is.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia kindly restate his request?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, as a parliamentary inquiry, may I ask if there are any other amendments on the desk to be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] has an amendment to be offered, in addition to the two amendments now pending, which are the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia and the substitute to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Under those circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I modify the request and ask that the debate be limited to 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 45 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, am I included among those who will be allotted time to speak?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Chair will control the disposition of the time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I should like to have 5 minutes on my amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I assume the Chair will divide the time equally between the proponents and opponents?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no way of reading the minds of those who will speak in advance of their utterances, but the Chair will endeavor to be fair in that regard. The Chair will recognize first the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], who has an amendment to offer, in order that his amendment may be pending, and the Chair will then endeavor to equalize the time to the best of his ability.

Mr. SHORT. I would be pleased to follow the gentleman from Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state further that the Chair is endeavoring, insofar as possible, to alternate between the two sides in the recognition of Members to address the Committee.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee to the amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: In line 9 of the amendment, after the word "for", insert the words "completion of."

In line 10, after the word "sites", insert the words "and construction of", and in the same line strike out the letter "s" in the word "dams."

In line 23, strike out "$39,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$41,228,000."

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I concede, of course, that if the amendment which is pending should be adopted the amendment I have offered would become absolutely futile and a nullity.

I do not believe there is anyone on this floor who is any more strongly for economy than I am, but there are different kinds of economy. There is sound economy and there is unsound or false economy. In my opinion, the adoption of this amendment would mean unsound economy in its essence, because I believe the time has certainly come when the membership of this House must realize that the T. V. A. is a permanent institution and that the program as originally outlined by the War Department, and under a Republican administration, I would remind my Republican colleagues, must be ultimately carried out.

Of course, if this amendment should be adopted it would simply mean that the work of the T. V. A. would stop with the completion of the Chickamauga Dam, and that would leave the Gilbertsville, Watts bar, and Coulter Shoals Dams suspended like Mahomet's coffin, and entirely out of the picture. It seems to me that to stop this work at a time when the T. V. A. has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars building up an organization would be the quintessence of stupidity. We have this trained organization already built up, and we also have a great army of unemployed, not only in that area but throughout the country, that would benefit from this development. To go ahead with this program now, it seems to me, would be the soundest sort of economy.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Last year when the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam was under consideration I made some remarks, and at that time pointed out that in a statement issued by Dr. A. E. Morgan, the former Chairman of the T. V. A., he took the very definite position that the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam was fully justified from the standpoint of flood control alone. I am sure the gentleman will recall that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I recall that statement of Dr. Morgan and I concur in his statement. Originally as the T. V. A. was projected it was primarily a flood-control and navigation project. Now, with the completion of the Chickamauga Dam we have navigation up to a point in Rhea County, near Dayton, where there is no traffic for transportation whatever.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. In the original intent of the act was there any national defense included?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Of course, national defense was included and on yesterday I discussed at considerable length the question of national defense which, in my judgment, is the major feature of the development down there; because in the event of emergency we can locate plants in that area, as was suggested by the War Department during the World War, when a commission was sent all over the country to select sites for munitions plants, and out of the nine sites recommended by that commission, eight of them were in the Tennessee Valley and one of them was nearby.

This was for the reason that we will have, in the event of an emergency, an abundance of electricity in the Tennessee Valley. It is far removed from our coasts where plants would be within easy access of enemy aircraft. Then we have ore of all kinds there, zinc, lead, copper, and everything down there, in fact, conducive to the proper location of munitions and airplane facilities, and from the standpoint of national defense alone this program is fully justified.

My amendment provides $2,000,000 for beginning of work at Coulter Shoals, and with the completion of Coulter Shoals and Watts bar, with Gilbertsville, we will have a 9-foot navigation channel all the way from the Ohio River to Knoxville, Tenn.

I wish my Republican colleagues would finally realize the fact that T. V. A. is a reality and get behind us in this movement, because I think it means something politically for the Republicans to get behind this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my distinguished friend from Tennessee—in fact, the two gentlemen from Tennessee—that there is no one in this House that I more dislike to disagree with than they; but when my friend from Tennessee, the last gentleman who spoke [Mr. TAYLOR], talked about national defense and the construction of plants for the production of munitions of war down in Tennessee, it came to my mind somehow that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of this Congress and the last three or four Congresses are full of facts showing that we have a $67,000,000 nitrogen plant at Muscle Shoals that has not produced a dime's worth of nitrogen since it was constructed. It is as dead as the tomb of Moses. That $67,000,000 is gone, and that $67,000,000 plant is being kept there as a relic or as a souvenir to national defense at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars a year for its supposed maintenance by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Now, with respect to my other friend from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON], than whom there is no more delightful gentleman in this House, I am just wondering if he would read the printed hearings of the House Military Affairs Committee of 3, 4, and 5 years ago on the subject of T. V. A., and find there that the proof showed that the Tennessee Electric Power Co. had a surplus of 50 percent of the normal requirements of the entire State of Tennessee and that it and other allied private companies operated a distribution system in every town and city with a population of 300 or more with the exception of one, and that the T. V. A. has recently acquired all of them, which is 50 percent above needs and has developed at the expense of the taxpayers 480,000 additional kilowatts in the three dams that have been completed.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. PEARSON. I would like to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I am somewhat familiar with the business of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and its activities in Tennessee, and that the Tennessee Electric Power Co. furnishes power to but two single counties west of the Tennessee River in the State of Tennessee, and that entire area is dependent on other companies for its electrical power and is now purchasing from the Tennessee Valley Authority all of the power that it produces just as fast as lines can be built to transmit it.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman take into consideration in that estimate the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority has sold largely below the cost of production its entire surplus to four great private corporations, including a chemical company and the Aluminum Co. and the Arkansas Power Co., and that is the reason it does not have what it claims as a surplus at this time?

The deal it has recently made provides that they take over every facility of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. in the State of Tennessee. However, I must get along to another point I wanted to make. I am going to leave the question of kilowatt capacity and ability to serve because I think it is settled that they are able to serve the entire State now and that there will be no shortage.

I want to call attention to this fact: If the Tennessee Valley Authority can expand at will because it can come to the Congress and say, "We want to build three more dams and we will just let you wet your feet a little by giving us $200,000 to start with," and then come back and say, "You have already authorized it, approved it, and confirmed it, and now give us enough money to spend thirty or forty million dollars more on it."

The point has been made that they have spent $5,000,000 at Gilbertsville Dam. Let me say that the record discloses—and it has never been contradicted—that they spent more than $2,000,000 on that project in the purchase of land before the dam was ever authorized and they had the titles for it and they were recorded. They were presuming upon the liberality of the Congress. They figured we were all liberals in the spending of other people's money. Now they say that is a waste. I will tell you what we can do with that. They have bought that fertile, that productive, that fine bottom-land on both sides of that river and we can convert that land into homesteads for the homeless coal miners from my district and from western Kentucky who are suffering in the mines and want to go back to agriculture.

Mr. RANKIN. And drown the last one of them the first time they have any high water.

Mr. MAY. No; we will not drown them. I may say to the statesman from Mississippi, who has gone Socialist, that T. V. A. will drown the taxpayers of this country and probably electrocute the gentleman from Mississippi. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman from Mississippi and, as a matter of fact, is trying to alternate recognition between the two sides, and in the list of nine Members among whom the 45 minutes was to be divided the gentleman's name does not appear.

Mr. RANKIN. It was there when I was up at the desk awhile ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Virginia was for 45 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. My name was on the original list before the time was limited to 45 minutes. I asked for time from the very beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The only way under the circumstances to obviate the difficulty would be to give 4 minutes to each speaker instead of 5.

Mr. RANKIN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is agreeable. Under the plan of alternate recognition, the Chair will recognize someone on the Republican side of the Chamber. The Chair has the names of the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN; the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. JENKINS; and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SHORT.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is it understood that I am to have additional time under that original request from the Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no such understanding in the request.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, we could not agree to that out of the 45 minutes. The gentleman had an hour yesterday, and we Members who are not on the Committee on Appropriations get very little time. We could not agree to that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman objects?

Mr. RANKIN. I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, to make sure that you have an adequate appreciation of what the issue is, I am going to suggest, first of all, that you vote down the Taylor amendment now pending, and then vote for the proposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS]. If you do so, you will save the Federal Treasury $17,203,000. That will be an immediate saving in the fiscal year 1940, and, in addition, if we do not ultimately authorize Watts bar and Coulter Shoals, two dams on the tributaries, and Gilbertsville, we may effect an ultimate saving of approximately $201,000,000. That is what is involved in the proposal on the floor at the present time. Let me picture the thing in this fashion. Here is a U-shaped river which reaches out into North Carolina, Kentucky, Virginia, and Tennessee. It flows southwest, a little west, and then northeast into the Ohio. The first dam is 20 miles from Paducah, known as Gilbertsville, and it will cost at least $107,000,000, and possibly a great deal more, according to the testimony. There has been expended thus far or will be by the 30th of June of this year, about five and one-half million dollars on Gilbertsville Dam. They want $12,500,000 for 1940. If you vote for the Faddis amendment, you strike out that $12,500,000. They want $4,252,000 for another dam known as Watts bar. We have only $678,000 invested in that now, or we will have on the 30th of June, but if you vote for the Faddis proposal, we will strike that out and save four and a half million dollars in 1940. Incidentally, if we never authorize them to go ahead with Watts Bar, you will save the Federal Treasury ultimately $30,000,000. Then there is Coulter Shoals. There the cost will be $26,000,000. We have only $550,000 of exploratory work invested at the present time, and they want $220,000 more for the next fiscal year. I was of opinion that this would be a 10-dam project, but it will most likely be a 12-dam project, and possibly a 13-dam project, before they get through, according to the testimony. So you have a chance today, by voting down the Taylor amendment and supporting the Faddis amendment of saving $17,000,000 and a possible saving running into hundreds of millions of dollars before we get through.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have only a few minutes. To show you that they do not need any more new dams for power now, T. V. A. has six stalls at the Wheeler Dam in which they have not installed any generators; they have four stalls waiting for generators at Pickwick Landing Dam, and they have stalls for four generators at Chickamauga that have not been installed as yet. They have stalls at Hiwassee that have no generators installed in them. They can put 10 more generators in at Wilson Dam, so why build any more dams or authorize any more preliminary work until the stalls they can use down there at the present time are provided with generators, as the engineers tell us they shall be. So much for power. There are 820,000 potential kilowatt-hours of power that can be developed by installations in the idle stalls in which no generators are set at the present time. They ask for generators. Let us give them to them. The dams have all been built, but why authorize them to proceed with more exploration on Gilbertsville, Watts bar, Coulter Shoals, when there has not been any justification for proceeding with the construction.

Now, they will not want them for navigation. Let me tell you what Mr. Parker, the chief engineer of the T. V. A., told the committee. I asked him what would be required to make navigation possible on this project, and he said, on page 1675 of the hearings:

I think the possibility of developing navigation on the project is rather remote.

That is the T. V. A. engineer speaking. Those are the figures which they supplied the committee. There is no justification for giving this additional money. So vote down the Taylor amendment and vote for the Faddis amendment, and save the taxpayers over $17,000,000 in immediate economies and possible economies running into $200,000,000 before we get through. That is the issue. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] at this time, and will then recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, nobody is surprised at the attitude of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]. We know of his fight against the Tennessee Valley Authority almost from the very beginning.

I know that the T. V. A. is one of the most profitable investments that the American people have ever made. From a power standpoint it benefits every single constituent you have that even uses electric lights every month it rolls around.

It has resulted in a reduction of light and power rates to the electric consumers of $556,000,000 a year. I shall break that amount down by States and show how much it has benefited your people.

For instance, during the year ending February 28, 1932, we used 62,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity in this country, for which we paid $1,803,000,000, according to the Edison Electric Institute Bulletin—the mouthpiece of the private power interests.

During the year ending February 28, 1937, we used 91,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours, for which we paid $2,086,080,300, according to the Edison Electric Institute Bulletin.

If we had paid the same rate for this 91,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours that we were paying back in 1932, the year before the T. V. A. was created, the cost would have been $2,642,000,000, or $556,000,000 more than we actually paid.

I have broken these figures down by States to show the amount saved to the people of each State during last year.

They are as follows:

Alabama	$7,600,000
Arizona	1,500,000
Arkansas	3,400,000
California	33,200,000
Colorado	5,000,000
Connecticut	11,600,000
Delaware	604,000
Florida	11,000,000
Georgia	7,600,000
Idaho	3,000,000
Illinois	65,600,000
Indiana	20,600,000
Iowa	6,800,000
Kansas	4,800,000
Kentucky	6,800,000
Louisiana	3,600,000
Maine	2,000,000
Maryland and District of Columbia	13,600,000
Massachusetts	29,600,000
Michigan	14,600,000
Minnesota	5,600,000

Mississippi	$3,400,000
Missouri	12,000,000
Montana	4,000,000
Nebraska	5,000,000
Nevada	230,000
New Hampshire	2,400,000
New Jersey	18,400,000
New Mexico	1,800,000
New York	67,400,000
North Carolina	4,000,000
North Dakota	1,200,000
Ohio	55,400,000
Oklahoma	3,800,000
Oregon	5,200,000
Pennsylvania	70,600,000
Rhode Island	4,400,000
South Carolina	2,000,000
South Dakota	1,600,000
Tennessee	1,200,000
Texas	14,200,000
Utah	6,200,000
Vermont	1,200,000
Virginia	2,400,000
Washington	7,200,000
West Virginia	6,600,000
Wisconsin	16,200,000
Wyoming	470,000

If the amount of savings for any one State is overestimated, remember that the savings for some other State is underestimated, because, as I said, according to the figures of the Edison Electric Institute Bulletin, these savings amount to $556,000,000 a year.

Everyone who turns an electric switch benefits or participates in these savings every time he pays his light or power bill.

Remember, this $556,000,000 represents the savings for only 1 year. It will be repeated every year that rolls around and will increase as time goes by.

This Gilbertsville Dam is the most important piece of flood-control construction that is before this Congress or will be before it at this session. It is primarily a flood-control project. You cannot hurt me personally from a power standpoint by opposing this appropriation, for the simple reason that I have taken time by the forelock and have every county in the district I represent provided with electricity from the Tennessee Valley Authority at the T. V. A. rates. You cannot hurt me, but you can hurt the American people if you adopt the Faddis amendment. Why? Because this Gilbertsville Dam is not so much a power dam; it is primarily a flood-control dam and will do more to control floods on the lower Ohio and lower Mississippi Rivers than any other construction that has ever been attempted.

Two years ago Norris Dam alone saved the city of Cairo, and if we had had the Gilbertsville Dam we could have held back the flood on the Tennessee behind that dam and could have prevented the great disaster that happened to the lower Mississippi River in 1927. If you defeat this appropriation you might as well defeat all flood-control legislation in the future.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not true that the estimates show that the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam will reduce the flood heights on the gage at Cairo about 2 feet?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly; and 1 foot reduced at Cairo in 1937 would have saved a great deal of the trouble. One foot in 1927 would have saved the great catastrophe on the lower Mississippi that cost probably hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The flood-control problem is a national problem.

Mr. RANKIN. Why, of course.

Mr. McCORMACK. Last year some of us from New England voted against this particular dam because it was 100 percent Federal contribution, and New England and other sections of the country were not receiving it, but conditions have changed now.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, sir. We are doing the same thing for New England that we are doing here. The Federal Government is contributing 100 percent of the cost. Therefore the engineers can build these dams where they ought to be built. We are doing the same thing for your States and for your localities; but if you follow the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], who are both avowed enemies of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and have been almost from the beginning, then you simply strike at every effort at flood control in your own territory and in every other section of the United States. This is a national issue.

This question involves the welfare of all the American people. It is a project for the benefit of the American people. I hope you will vote down the Faddis amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I wish it were possible to take a vote on the Gilbertsville Dam just to see what would happen if there were a promise made that no power would be developed there. I just wonder what the result would be under those circumstances.

In the few minutes that I have I want to address myself generally to the T. V. A. as a whole. I believe that any project as important in its scope as the T. V. A., any project doing as much as the T. V. A. has done to cut power rates to the ultimate consumers of America, having been as much in the public eye as it has and subject to as much attack as it has, if there were anything unsound about this project or anything to be criticized in the management of the project, it certainly would have been blazoned across the headlines of every paper in the country long before this.

So I say, first, I have the utmost confidence in the people who are carrying on this great enterprise.

The second thing I want to say is this: We have been told a great deal about empires, about the great empire of the T. V. A.—and there was some implication that because of the scope of the work attempted down there it should be criticized. I believe the reason this "empire" is criticized is because it is conducted primarily and basically for the benefit of the American people. I could name you some other empires: Empires of power, empires of finance, empires of steel, and so on, and so forth, far larger, far more powerful, economically, than the T. V. A. today; but we do not hear these empires criticized.

I am concerned not so much with the liberty of the power trusts and monopolies to control the people of America as I am in preserving the independence, for example, of the small farmer of this country who has been recognized as the backbone of the Nation. From the national-defense standpoint you could do nothing better than to get power to him at cheap cost and to get fertilizer to him at cheap cost.

There are only three nations in this world that have adequate supplies of phosphates, perhaps the most important fertilizer there is—only three nations, and ours is one. If there is any natural resource on the development of which the American Government could well spend money it is phosphates. One other point. We have heard talk about saving money; yes, we could save money by not building any of these dams. Money could have been saved by not building the railroads. Money could have been saved by not making any capital investment of any sort. The question is: Is the expenditure justified in the results that it yields for the benefit of the people? Ask anyone who comes from the region of the T. V. A. what they think about it and you will find hardly an individual who is not strong for the T. V. A. If this is true, then those of us who come from other parts of the country who stand up and vote against this great enterprise must necessarily do so on the ground that we are not willing to see the welfare of that section of the country built up. For my part, I am not only willing but eager to see the purchasing power, the economic welfare, of the people of the Tennessee Valley built up to the largest, the greatest possible extent that we can. I believe further that the falling water God has given to humanity to be used for the benefit of humanity is being far better used in the Tennessee Valley than it is in any other place I know of in the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. FADDIS. I hope the gentleman will speak somewhat on the argument that has been made that flood-control affairs should be taken out of the hands of the fanatics and put into the capable hands of the Board of Engineers of the United States Army. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. I do not presume to tell the old Members of the House anything they do not already know, but for the benefit of the new Members I may say that this proposition was voted down by a subcommittee on appropriations in the last Congress. It was voted down by the full Committee on Appropriations and was twice rejected by the Members of this House. Over in the Senate, however, $5,000,000 was stuck on because a certain Senator was up for reelection, was brought in here in a conference report, and in the closing hours of the session when bad, vicious legislation always is rushed through when few Members are on the floor and everyone is anxious to go home—it was passed, I think, by a margin of seven votes.

For the life of me, I cannot understand how any reasonable or sane man who has read the hearings carefully can support this indefensible proposition. I want every Member to know that I am tremendously interested in navigation, flood control, power, and the like. I have served on the Flood Control Committee of the House, on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, and have listened to the hearings as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Gilbertsville Dam does not give flood-control protection; neither does it improve navigation. The truth of the matter is it makes navigation next to impossible. It builds a dam 100 feet high, creating a lake 184 miles long, 7 miles wide, and at the lower end of this reservoir you could float a battleship. Modern barge traffic would not be able to operate on the lake which would be created if this proposition is carried out. All of the witnesses before the various committees of the House have testified to this.

About 50 years ago the greatest disaster on any of our inland waterways occurred on Lake Pepin on the upper Mississippi River when a storm kicked up and a boat sank. Nearly 100 human lives were lost.

To have flood control there must be an empty reservoir, like the conservancy district on the Miami River above Dayton, Ohio. If the reservoir is full it cannot, of course, hold back floodwaters. In order to have power the reservoir must be full. Flood control and power are constantly and at all times in conflict. You cannot have flood control and power at the same time.

They talk about affording flood control. Mr. Chairman, if you build this dam you are going to prevent the waters of the Ohio from backing up into the Tennessee and you will simply sweep Cairo off the map. Instead of giving flood control it would add to the hazard. It destroys navigation; and, whereas, you have but one flood every 10 or 12 years that covers only 480,000 acres of land, here you will by the construction of this dam cover over 937,000 acres of improved farm land.

The Mississippi Valley Association at its annual convention held last November in St. Louis, which I attended and which was attended by more than 500 delegates from 25 States, went on record against this proposal. I would like to read one of the resolutions passed at that convention.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have some time and I ask unanimous consent that my time may be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the time to be yielded to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], will be yielded in extension of time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, this resolution to which I referred reads as follows:

Electrical energy can now be generated so cheaply by modern fuel engines as to challenge the wisdom of flooding fertile lands and valuable improvements by the construction of high dams for power creation when low and less expensive dams for flood control and navigation would better serve the public interest.

The truth of the matter is if you want flood control and improvement of navigation by the construction of a series of low dams, they may be constructed for ten to fourteen million dollars. Here you are going to spend $112,000,000 of the taxpayers' money when this country right now is facing bankruptcy.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman know and understand that they have projected in their future plans a high dam a few miles below Paducah, across the Ohio River, and a canal from the Tennessee River to the Cumberland River?

Mr. SHORT. Yes; of course. Over $600,000,000 is involved in this whole program. It is going to cost the taxpayers over a billion dollars before we are through.

Let me say this in conclusion: Sometimes you plead flood control; sometimes you plead improvement of navigation; sometimes you plead power; but the whole T. V. A. set-up was based on flood control and navigation in order to avoid constitutional objections. Even the Senator from Nebraska said that they used flood control and navigation as a peg on which to hang the whole program, when the primary purpose was to generate, distribute, and sell cheap hydroelectric power that can be produced just as cheaply by fuel today. They are not only paralyzing but destroying the coal industry, not only of Pennsylvania and Kentucky but of Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, and the other coal-producing States of our country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not a fact that the gentleman is supported in his statement when he says that these projects are not primarily navigation and flood control by the Army engineers themselves?

Mr. SHORT. I am absolutely supported by the Army engineers.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I love him, but my good friend [Mr. RANKIN] cannot talk about a pretty girl without discussing power. [Laughter.] He has the power complex, and no man has championed this as much and no man deserves more credit in the whole United States, either in or out of Congress, for championing the T. V. A.; but I want to remind my good friend [Mr. RANKIN], that unless we cease this Government subsidized competition with private business, we are not only going to destroy every source of taxation which supports government but we will in fact not put back to work the unemployed men in this country. I want to remind him that 4,000,000 American citizens, not "economic royalists" and "princes of privilege," but 4,000,000 good, average, middle-class Americans, have invested over $12,000,000,000 of their own money in the utility industry of this country. That industry hires and employs 250,000 American citizens. It pays $250,000,000 a year to the Federal Government in taxes, only to have the Federal Government come in and set up an organization in direct competition with private enterprise which it, the Government, taxes to support the Government itself.

Mr. RANKIN. And they overcharge the people of the United States a billion dollars a year for electricity, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from the far Northwest, and from the congressional district that has the Grand Coulee Dam in it, which is one of the Nation's greatest projects, I am naturally favorable to T. V. A. Coming from a region that is now beginning to be served with cheap electricity by the great Bonneville project and the region that has the mighty Columbia River flowing through it, which is one of the world's greatest hydroelectric power streams, it will be quite natural that some will charge me with a partisanship and a bias in favor of public power versus private power. It may be that I possess this weakness to a degree, but I think any fair-minded man or woman who will read the record of the history of the development of private utilities, with their holding companies and multiplied holding companies, will see at least something in it which indicates a necessity for the Federal Government to enter this matter of supplying electric power and protect its citizenship.

The first step of consequence was taken through the creation of the T. V. A. I had heard so much concerning T. V. A. that I doubted some of the statements in reference to its services that its advocates presented on the floor of this House. After we adjourned last year I spent a full week down there and then following that, with my good friend, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] and other members of a joint House-Senate committee, we held hearings on phosphates throughout that region for another week. I had the opportunity to at least see first-hand and draw some inferences and conclusions about T. V. A. that are better than those that its friends or enemies may paint, who have never seen it.

The amendment here proposed to kill Gilbertsville Dam. The proposal seems to be more one to injure and destroy than for any other purpose. The enemies of public power foolishly seem to think that here is a chance to strike a blow for the old Power Trust. In this they are mistaken.

Gilbertsville Dam is not a power dam. It could never justify itself as a power project and it is not sought to be so justified. It is the key dam in a mighty river development that is intended to protect the people who live in that region, both for many miles above and below, against the ravages of Nature, and as an incident to that development, power will be produced and there will be involved a land-conservation program. Gilbertsville is primarily a flood-control and a navigation dam, and anyone who sees the picture first-hand must come to that conclusion. The fact that it will store water and back up water for 100 miles does not in any way disqualify it from being a flood-control dam and at the same time having some use as a power dam, because it will not be kept filled to capacity; no, not even to half its capacity.

Work has now been commenced on the Gilbertsville Dam. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has stated, the T. V. A. is itself a project now so far along that neither those who are in principle opposed to the Government's engaging in activities of this kind nor those who have selfish motives can defeat it. The Supreme Court of the United States in the last 10 days, after literally years of litigation, has stated that the T. V. A. is not subject to attack by the Power Trust. In my judgment we would make a serious mistake if we turned this project down now. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as has been stated in the debate today, that in the last session of Congress there was a very heated controversy over the question of whether or not the Tennessee Valley Authority should begin construction of the Gilbertsville Dam. The legislative history is just about as stated here today. The Committee on Appropriations deleted the item and the House concurred. The Senate reinserted the item. The matter was debated and carefully considered. Finally, by a roll-call vote—by a very narrow margin, it is true, but by a roll-call vote—the Gilbertsville Dam was authorized and money expended.

Mr. Chairman, I do not mind being frank to say that I was not one of the Members who last year insisted on the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam. In the subcommittee and in the conference committee I hoped that the item could be deleted, certainly until economic conditions in the country might be more propitious, if and when; but that was not the judgment of the Congress. Let us remember that, speaking in the parlance of the legislation involved, the question of whether there ought to be a T. V. A. or ought to be a Gilbertsville Dam is water that has gone over the dam. In the beginning of this program, when the administration asked for the Tennessee Valley Authority legislation, there was laid down a program of development of a series of dams for the purpose of flood control, navigation, and power—those three objectives. The matter was considered, and Congress authorized the T. V. A. We have gone on year after year and have constructed periodically, systematically, and logically the different units in this program.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Just one question is all.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; I know; I know what the gentleman would say. We understand each other.

Mr. MAY. I wanted to ask about the Gilbertsville Dam. How much money is spent that cannot be utilized?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman does not approve of the Gilbertsville Dam; we understand that.

The Gilbertsville Dam seems to be the bone of contention here, because the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would stop the construction of the Gilbertsville Dam, which is under construction. Colonel Parker, who, if my information is correct—and I should like to be corrected if I am wrong—was an Army engineer before he went with the Tennessee Valley Authority, or, at any rate, a very eminent engineer, and is now the engineer for the Tennessee Valley Authority, agrees with Dr. Morgan, the deposed head of T. V. A. There has never been any difference of opinion as to the need for or the value of the Gilbertsville Dam as a flood-control project. No provision is made here for any power units in the Gilbertsville Dam. Colonel Parker states in the hearings at page 1768 that at this location it is perfectly logical to provide a dam for water storage that at the same time has power proclivities, because there is provided a difference of flood heights that is maintained all the time, so when the flood seasons come the water in the dam can be lowered to take care of a certain number of feet for flood-control purposes, without in any way interfering with power, if power should be installed.

We have not reached the point of producing power at Gilbertsville. There is not a penny in this bill for any power unit at the Gilbertsville Dam, but there has never been any difference of opinion in the T. V. A. about the value of Gilbertsville Dam as a flood-control project and as a navigation project.

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield first to the member of the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I believe it should be said in all fairness that there is something more involved here than Gilbertsville. There is involved also a potential expenditure of $30,000,000 on Watts bar, $26,000,000 on Coulter Shoals, and $40,000,000 on two dams on tributaries, on which exploration work is being done at the present time. This aggregates $96,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will explain the parliamentary situation. The vote will come first on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. The vote will then come on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. The vote will then come on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The first vote is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. RANDOLPH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it in order that the amendment be again read at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. By the unanimous consent of the Committee. Does the gentleman make such a request?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read. I believe the parliamentary situation would be helped thereby and that Members would appreciate it if the amendment should be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, as the matter in the amendment is set forth by page and line, it does not conform with the copies of the bill in the hands of the members of the Committee, and I would suggest, therefore, that the Clerk transpose the lineage so we can follow the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FADDIS) there were—ayes 135, noes 113.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. FADDIS.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 159, noes 122.

So the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia as amended by the substitute amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

To increase the construction fund established by the "Merchant Marine Act, 1936," $100,000,000, of which not to exceed $3,990,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the United States Maritime Commission, including, but not limited to, the following: Personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended, including not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Chairman of the Commission, at meetings concerned with work of the Commission; printing and binding; law-books, books of reference, and not to exceed $2,500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services, including telephone, telegraph, radio, and teletype services; purchase and exchange (including one at not to exceed $1,500), maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use; typewriting and adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent, including heat, light, and power, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; expenses (not exceeding $10,000) of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other personal property (not exceeding 5,000 pounds in any one case) of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, upon specific authorization by the Chairman of the Commission; expenses incurred in preparing and transporting, to their former homes in this country or to a place not more distant, the remains of employees who may die while in the discharge of their official duties abroad or in transit thereto or therefrom, and for the ordinary expenses of interment of such remains; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act of June 26, 1930; and including not to exceed $75,000 for the employment, on a contract or fee basis, of persons, firms, or corporations for the performance of special services, including accounting, legal, actuarial, and statistical services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 49, line 10, after the word "which", strike out the word "not" and insert "no part is available to any carrier in competition with another carrier subject to the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and not."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to protect one of America's outstanding industries and an industry that employs millions of people, and upon whom other millions depend for their daily livelihood.

During the past months and here today we have discussed the unemployment problem of our Nation. Some say 14,000,000 are unemployed, while others say 13,000,000. We have spent billions of dollars to date, and will, no doubt, appropriate during this Congress billions of dollars to take care of the unemployed, and my amendment will in no way increase the cost of taking care of the unemployed, but will provide employment for the unemployed.

The railroads of this country have plenty of competition. I speak of busses, I speak of private cars, of airplanes, and, especially, of the inland waterways and coastwise transportation vessels, and so forth.

This bill calls for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to construct vessels, and my amendment will simply restrict these cargo vessels that compete with the railroads of this country, especially in coastwise service.

Please do not forget that in your districts throughout the entire United States there are thousands upon thousands of railroad men dependent upon the railroads, and if you continue to subsidize competition for the railroads of this country, you are simply adding to the unemployment ranks.

I speak here today as one who had been employed on a railroad for 21 years, as one whose family has been employed by the railroads likewise for years, and I know the plight of the engineer, the fireman, the mechanic, and the laborer, and if I were permitted to take you to my home town I could introduce you to thousands upon thousands of railroad men who have not worked for months and months, and who today are refused relief by reason of the fact that they are on the extra list of the railroads.

So let us adopt this amendment and let us give the railroads of this country an opportunity to haul the cargo or the freight they used to haul, and let us restrict the cargo vessels that the Maritime Commission will construct to the hauling of trans-Atlantic cargo and not coastwise. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

An amendment of this kind should be considered much more fully and carefully than it can be considered here. As a matter of fact, I think the $100,000,000 which is contemplated here will be expended almost entirely for ships engaged in ocean transportation and trading with foreign countries. At the same time, there is injected by this amendment matters that are now receiving the careful consideration of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House and also in a short while will receive the careful consideration of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House. I refer to an adjustment or a regulation of rates whereby there may be a cooperation rather than conflict. As a matter of fact, it is seriously questionable if there is any real conflict between the coastwise shipping and the railroads of the country. In some places the railroads themselves are interested in these ships. I think the common-sense thing to do is to defeat this amendment and to permit this question to be considered in the usual regular way. It is impossible at this time to say whether the amendment has any serious effect or not, but it might have and it may be embarrassing to the Commission. The amendment provides that no part of the fund shall be used in connection with any shipping that is in competition with any railroad. There are hundreds of thousands of seamen on the beach, and they are entitled to consideration along with the railroad labor of the country—men who have devoted their lives to the sea and to the sailing of ships. What we ought to do is to try to get at some constructive program that will allow all of these services to survive, so that commerce may be transported at a reasonable rate to all parts of the country and all kinds of labor may be employed. Do not destroy by an amendment of this kind, but let us approach the problem in a constructive way. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do that for the purpose of getting more light on this amendment. I wish to propound a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], the author of the amendment. What is the effect of this amendment on the railroads and the labor of the railroads?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. One hundred million dollars under the present bill is appropriated to permit the construction of ships that will haul cargo—trans-Atlantic, trans-Pacific, or coastwise. My amendment will restrict the use of the money or will restrict the use of ships to the hauling of cargo as far as coastwise traffic is concerned. In other words, no ships built with this money shall haul cargo in competition with railroads that operate, say, between New York and Savannah, New York and New Orleans, New York and San Francisco. The ships could be used only to haul cargo trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific and would not be permitted to go on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MAY. Does it likewise affect the transportation on the Mississippi River and on the inland waterways?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: Page 50, line 22, change the period to a colon and insert "Provided, That no part of this construction fund shall be expended for the construction of any cargo vessel unless said vessel is equipped with coal-burning equipment."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides a $100,000,000 fund to be used by the Maritime Commission for the construction of vessels and a grant authorizing the Commission to contract for an additional $230,000,000 of ship construction. My amendment would add this language on page 50, line 22, after the period:

Provided, That no part of this construction fund shall be expended for the construction of any cargo vessel unless said vessel is equipped with coal-burning equipment.

Inasmuch as my amendment is in line with the avowed purpose of the President's recovery program, I fail to see how gentlemen on the majority side of this Chamber could oppose it in good conscience. The adoption of this amendment would revive two great industries. It would take men off relief rolls and put them back to work at decent wages and give our cargo-carrying merchant marine a time-tested fuel at low cost.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman understand that on the west coast of the United States we do not know what coal is. All we have there for fuel is oil.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I do. While the benefits of this amendment would be Nation-wide, it would result in tremendous benefit in my district alone. I think it is safe to say that fully 75 percent of the people in the Twenty-third Congressional District of Pennsylvania are either directly or indirectly dependent upon the coal and railroad industries for a livelihood.

Both of these great industries have been hard hit for a decade. The coal industry has suffered as a consequence of this administration's hydroelectric development program, such as the Tennessee Valley projects and the widespread use of fuel oil. The railroads have suffered in consequence of the development of gasoline-propelled transportation of both passengers and freight.

I am not suggesting that naval vessels use coal. Nor am I asking that passenger liners burn coal. But there is no argument against burning coal in the cargo ships to be constructed with these funds totaling $330,000,000. The equipment for burning coal in cargo ships is modern and efficient.

Moreover, this is not a question of sacrificing efficiency to give millions of men and women honest jobs. To build ships now not designed to use coal is to fly in the face of plain economic facts. To do otherwise will prove expensive and destructive in the end.

New processes recently have been perfected whereby petroleum may be refined to a point where 80 percent of high-grade gasoline can be produced and in the refining it is not necessary to produce any fuel oil whatsoever.

It is well known that fuel oil has been sacrificed by the oil industry and sold for any price that it would bring. Under the old refining processes it was necessary to make fuel oil because gasoline had to be made. Under the new processes, it is not.

While it may take perhaps 5 years to get this new process into full swing, it is now an accomplished fact and wisdom dictates that we prepare for that time. When this new process is in general use it is obvious that the price of fuel oil will go to such a level that it would be wholly uneconomical to use it for fuel.

The President and other officials of this administration are constantly harping about private industry taking up the slack to relieve unemployment. How can private industry survive, much less take up the slack, if this administration persists in policies which would destroy entire industries and throw more men and women out of work?

Take the question of labor cost in producing coal and oil, for instance. Today the labor cost in producing a ton of coal is $1.27, while the labor cost in producing 4 barrels of fuel oil, including its refining, which is the equivalent of a ton of coal, is 68 cents. Therefore the Government itself can help solve the unemployment problem by using coal in its cargo ships.

There is a movement in England to put the merchant marine back on a coal-burning basis to put the miners back to work in Wales. Central Pennsylvania and West Virginia produce the best coal adapted to ships. There is no reason why Congress should not see to it now that these new ships are constructed to burn coal.

Let us use some common sense in this recovery program. Let us pass legislation which will not impose a greater burden on the taxpayers of the Nation, but which will revive two great industries and will not only restore employment of the miners and railroaders but will help save these industries from destruction rather than add to the army of the unemployed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I just want to ask the gentleman if he will not make a correction. He spoke of the excellency of the coal in Pennsylvania and in southern West Virginia. I think it is unnecessary to jump from Pennsylvania to southern West Virginia, because the northern West Virginia coal is just as good.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. We will correct it to say "West Virginia," because I know of the gentleman's deep interest in the coal industry in all sections of his own State.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I appreciate the gentleman's position about coal, but I have an oil district. What am I to do? Move to a coal district?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I am concerned about the unemployed miners in the Twenty-third District of Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Gentlemen, the Maritime Commission, charged with the responsibilities imposed upon it by the Congress, is trying to build up a merchant marine in this country upon the most economical basis and to meet the responsibilities with which they are charged to build up an American merchant marine for national defense and for the promotion of the commerce of this country. In order to have a merchant marine provided for national defense, we must have the most modern, up-to-date ships, and we must take into consideration the merchant marine of all nations of the world. Insofar as it is possible to use coal, if most economical, I am sure it will be considered, but we must consider the nations of the world which are using oil. I may add that there are oil districts in this country, too. It is not to the interest of our merchant marine that we shall devote these cargo carriers entirely to coal. One of the gentlemen on the minority side asked a few moments ago what would be done on the Pacific coast where there is no coal. That question is peculiarly pertinent. What is to be done with the cargo carriers going to other nations of the world where they cannot get coal? What is going to be the extra expense of building bunkers in the ship to carry the coal to foreign destinations and return, even if possible. What about the space used for coal which will destroy the cargo-carrying capacity?

I wish you could realize what we are up against in fighting the merchant marine of other nations of the world, seeing how Germany and Italy and other nations are driving, in a perfectly proper way, to build their merchant marines. We must meet these nations on an economical basis. We cannot pass upon this question of construction here on the floor of the House, but must leave those questions to the agencies in which we have vested this great responsibility who will try to solve these and other problems so as to reduce the cost to the American people.

I appeal to you to defeat this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans", approved July 3, 1930 (38 U. S. C. 11-11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $97,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,500 of this amount shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, of employees, detailed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science and conventions of organized war veterans: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available also for personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; for expenses incurred in packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other property, not exceeding in any one case 5,000 pounds, of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty and when specifically authorized by the Administrator; furnishing and laundering of such wearing apparel as may be prescribed for employees in the performance of their official duties; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; for passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of same, including not more than two passenger automobiles for general administrative use of the central office in the District of Columbia, one of which may be replaced during the fiscal year 1940 at a cost, including exchange, of not to exceed $1,500; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to utilize Government-owned automotive equipment in transporting children of Veterans' Administration employees located at isolated stations to and from school under such limitations as he may by regulation prescribe; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to expend not to exceed $2,000 of this appropriation for actuarial services pertaining to the Government life-insurance fund, to be obtained by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable; for allotment and transfer to the Public Health Service, the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, for disbursement by them under the various headings of their applicable appropriations, of such amounts as are necessary for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration, including minor repairs and improvements of existing facilities under their jurisdiction necessary to such care and treatment; for expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of farms; for recreational articles and facilities at institutions maintained by the Veterans' Administration; for administrative expenses incidental to securing employment for war veterans; for funeral, burial, and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration accruing during the year for which this appropriation is made or prior fiscal years: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for the care and maintenance of veterans in hospitals or homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available for the purchase of tobacco to be furnished, subject to such regulations as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall prescribe, to veterans receiving hospital treatment or domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration hospitals or homes: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888 (24 U. S. C. 134), as amended, for those veterans eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities for domiciliary care.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: On page 51, line 16, strike out "$97,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$98,000,000."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in bringing this amendment before the House is to provide that the United States Government shall do with some of its own employees that which it is trying to get industry to do with its employees. We pass fair standard labor acts and other provisions and at the same time the United States violates every rule and every principle of that act in the veterans' facilities, with its own employees.

When the hearings on this bill were in progress I asked the gentleman from Virginia—and I am not complaining of him at all—if he would interrogate the witnesses before him to know why it was that waitresses, nurses, firemen, chauffeurs, attendants, and other persons are required to work outrageously long hours at these facilities and for unreasonably low pay. In the case of chauffeurs, some of them were required to work for 24-hour stretches. The excuse for that action was that this chauffeur was on a "stand-by" service. In other words, he could lie down, with a phone close by during the night; but if somebody called the chauffeur to take him out to a hospital or for other legitimate purpose, or for any excuse, he would have to go out.

That is not rest. That is violating every 8-hour principle that is known. It is true an attempt is made to justify it in this way. I said if you will go into the wages and hours of these facilities you will find that few industries, if any, against whom the United States is aiming legislation, have as grossly violated the principles the present administration seeks to establish, as does the United States itself.

I have not had this up before with the Appropriations Committee. I brought it up with them for the first time this year. I am not complaining of them. However, personally I had taken the matter up with the head of the veterans' facility in my own district, and the answer was "We do not get enough appropriation." I do not know whether the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], who has a veterans' facility, find these conditions in his hospital or not; but I have found that they exist in mine. I think they exist generally. If they do not, I wish the discrimination against my institution to cease. If they do exist generally, I desire the conditions remedied as to all.

Mr. Hiller, executive assistant to the Administrator, appeared before the committee. He said they have been trying to put into effect a schedule for an 8-hour day insofar as attendants and nurses were concerned. He states:

We have asked field stations for an estimate of the cost of establishing three shifts a day of 8 hours each, and they have submitted them. We are now analyzing those estimates and testing their accuracy, but they will, of course, call for additional funds.

The same old answer has been given for many, many years. The time has come when we need action. We should stop analyzing, reach a conclusion, submit estimates, and bring in appropriations.

I had a letter today from General Hines with reference to an inquiry submitted to him along this line, and he says:

Concerning the different statements with regard to hours of duty, as you know, the Veterans' Administration is in favor of a minimum straight 8-hour day for all employees of facilities. It has not been possible, however, to put this into effect generally or at all stations and at the same time render proper care to the beneficiaries over a 24-hour period. In order to accomplish it fully additional funds will be necessary for the purpose of additional personnel, which have been requested in connection with the 1940 estimate.

As I understand it, these are the 1940 estimates we are considering now? I may be mistaken. I ask if they are?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. And yet Mr. Hiller says they will not have enough money. The time has come for somebody to act. I do not wish to criticize the Veterans' Administration, but the time has come to stop talking and to do some acting. Probably this additional $1,000,000 will help take care of some of these people that are working 12 hours and longer a day in these facilities.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have introduced legislation along the line the gentleman advocates. I hope the Civil Service Committee will approve it. Long hours and the type of work they are engaged in is certain to tax their mental power, weaken them physically, and tear down their nerves.

Mr. BLAND. Of course, it is; and it is not right. They should not be treated this way.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman bring out the fact that many of these employees have deducted from their subsistence allowance things they do not use?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely. I did not have time to go into that, but that ought to be mentioned. In other words, they ought not to be made to pay for a meal that they do not eat.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a report to the Veterans' Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to submit that request in the House.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment merely because it affords me an opportunity to again protest the Veterans' Administration's practice of making compulsory deductions from salaries of low-paid hospital employees for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, regardless of whether these services and facilities are used.

I desire to call attention of this Congress to the fact that some 37,000 employees in veterans' hospitals and facilities are being subjected to these compulsory deductions and that in my district alone it is costing these employees nearly $16,000 a year. I have in my possession a report of an investigation recently made by my colleague from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] setting forth this fact. The report, which I will insert in the Appendix of today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, further shows that the Veterans' Administration, or Federal Government, has actually profited through these compulsory deductions.

Mr. ENGEL's findings should be studied by every Member of this House and I invite every Member's attention to my extension of remarks. I also take this opportunity to again call attention to a bill, H. R. 2402, now pending before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, which would prevent the Veterans' Administration from continuing its practice of compulsory pay deductions and would also prevent the Administration from charging more than actual cost for quarters, subsistence, and laundry.

The present policy of the Veterans' Administration is manifestly unfair and Members of this Congress should insist that it be abolished. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new matter that has come to the attention of Congress. For the last 2 or 3 years the matter has been considered by the Committee on Appropriations and by the Veterans' Administration, and a great deal of remedial action has been taken administratively. The universal rule over the United States in hospitals is for attendants and nurses to work 12 hours a day. There are very few private institutions that have found it possible to establish an 8-hour day for attendants and nurses. The Veterans' Administration is trying to do it, trying to see if it can be worked out administratively.

There is also the question of deductions from the attendants' pay. This committee is just as anxious as any Member of the House to remedy the situation. We called it to the attention of the Veterans' Administration. You will find it in the hearings and even as late as yesterday I talked personally with General Hines about it and was given assurance that administrative action would be taken as quickly as possible to remedy the situation.

It is necessary that some of these attendants live on the station. The Government in some instances has built quarters for them. It is necessary for the attention of the veterans to have nurses and attendants available at all times. An additional appropriation of a million dollars does not affect the situation at all. General Hines told me yesterday they did not need additional money; that they could find the funds in their appropriation. It is purely a question of administrative action. To add a million dollars to this item is purely an idle gesture. We have the word of the Veterans' Administration that it will correct this situation as fast as it can be done administratively. I hope the committee will not add on another million dollars for this purpose.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This is a matter I have taken up with the Veterans' Administration for a number of years, and I fear it is necessary that the House take action in order to get the Veterans' Administration to do anything.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If you put $10,000,000 in here, it will not make the Veterans' Administration issue an administrative order.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think it would help.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The committee has accomplished a great deal in this connection, and if the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has informed herself, she will find they have accomplished a great deal in remedying this situation. More will be accomplished later. But just sticking money in here does not affect them at all. It requires administrative action, unless the Congress wants to pass an organic law to require the Veterans' Administration to do so.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It would be notice to the Veterans' Administration that that should be done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has been definitely inaugurated in a number of hospitals already, has it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Veterans' Administration, $561,093,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes except for cooking purposes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday the statement was made in the House in connection with the consideration of this bill that the veterans have the most liberal insurance privilege of any American citizen. I take issue with that statement and I will try to prove that the veteran who is insured under the War Risk Insurance Act of 1917 and 1918 has anything but the most liberal insurance privilege of any American citizen.

At the department convention of the American Legion of Minnesota last August, that department adopted the following resolution, which I will read, in part:

That Congress investigate the insurance section of the Veterans' Bureau with a view to determining the equity of the present cost to the veteran; that the policies be changed to provide that the insurance will not lapse for nonpayment of premiums as long as the loan value is sufficient to pay such premiums; that the interest rate be reduced to not more than 3 percent, and that such reduction be made retroactive to the date the loans were made; that the nonassignable clause in the policy be removed and that the veteran be given full control over its disposition.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the hearings held on this resolution at our department convention, facts were offered showing that the veterans are paying in many cases as much or more for Government insurance than they would if they had similar insurance in old-line insurance companies. I know from my own experience that is the case.

It will be remembered that at the time of the World War some 4,700,000 veterans were induced to take this insurance on the basis of the claim made at that time that it would be at cost; there would be no salesman's commissions, no doctor's fees, no office overhead, or expense of any kind, but notwithstanding those savings, so inefficiently, it is felt in many quarters, and although the Bureau is a paragon of efficiency in most respects, so inefficiently has the insurance division of the Veterans' Administration handled the insurance section for the World War veterans that the cost to them is now equal to or in excess of that being paid on ordinary insurance taken out in private concerns.

You can borrow money from the banks in my State for 5 percent. You cannot borrow money of the Government on your Government war-risk insurance at less than 6 percent. Why? It is because of one reason mainly. There is a non-assignable clause in these Government insurance policies, as pointed out in this resolution. Is there justice in that sort of treatment of these men and women who have carried this insurance throughout the long years since the World War, and especially since the Government's money cost is less than 3 percent?

May I ask further: If this insurance is such a wonderful thing, if it is such a great privilege and benefit, and if it is such a liberal proposition, then why have only 602,614 of the nearly 5,000,000 policies been retained? Why is there only $2,569,240,190 worth of the approximately $50,000,000,000 of potential insurance, which was or which might have been placed on the Government books in 1917 and 1918, to be found in force at this time?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true many veterans who hold their war-risk insurance today, converted of course, have borrowed the limit on their policy and are unable to repay the loans to the Federal Government, not only by reason of the rate of interest but also by reason of unemployment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. That is another point I wish to cover.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You hear a great deal in this House about the economic royalists and about the unemployed, but you hear very little about the 75 or 80 percent of the people, the great middle class of this Nation, like these 602,614 veterans who are carrying this insurance. I say "like these veterans" because, to my mind, they represent, not the economic royalists and not the unemployed but the good, self-respecting, hard-working people who are trying to set up a little estate for themselves to provide for their families and to protect themselves against Government dependency; yet, notwithstanding this highly laudable desire on their part, instead of being encouraged they are being discouraged; they have been forced to pay 6 percent on their Government insurance policies and to pay as much or more for this insurance as they would if they had taken the insurance in the beginning from private insurance corporations, because this highly inefficient Government insurance agency has taken advantage of their liberality and their trusting natures.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the old-line companies are reducing their rate of interest to 5 percent?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know as to that, I may say to the gentleman, but I do know that I could borrow money at 5 percent on my name in my bank in my city, and I could borrow money at that rate on my insurance policy if this nonassignable proviso were not included. Why should we be forced to pay 6 percent?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Have organized efforts ever been made by ex-service organizations to have the Veterans' Administration adopt such a plan?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There have been many attempts, but not of a systematic, well-organized nature.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the 6-percent feature in the organic law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The law was set up that way originally, as I understand.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. If the gentleman will yield so I may answer the question of the gentleman from Kansas, I may say the organized veterans at the present time have presented to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation a proposal that will reduce the rate of interest from 6 percent to as low as 3½ percent if my memory serves me correctly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope such a proposal is adopted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. A bill has already been introduced in this session of Congress with the aim of reducing the interest rate on Government loans on war-risk insurance policies to 3½ percent. When this measure comes before the House, as I hope it will in the near future, I trust you will give it very careful and conscientious consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I submit herewith for inclusion in the Record the insurance resolution of the Department of Minnesota, American Legion, above referred to, together with some of the evidence supporting that resolution:

1. That Congress investigate the insurance section of the Veterans' Bureau with a view to determining the equity of the present costs to the veteran.

2. That the policies be changed to provide that the insurance will not lapse for nonpayment of premiums as long as the loan value is sufficient to pay such premium.

3. That interest rates be reduced to not more than 3 percent, and that such reduction be made retroactive to the date the loans were made.

4. That the nonassignable clause in policy be removed, and that the veteran be given full control over its disposition.

5. That the insurance division of the Veterans' Bureau be requested to improve the service in general and place it on a plane more comparable to that rendered by commercial insurance companies.

The foregoing was adopted by the convention delegates as part of the rehabilitation program for 1938. The full text of the insurance resolution follows:

Whereas there has been a growing dissatisfaction among those World War veterans who are carrying converted Government insurance based on costs, types of policy, interest notes on loans, and service in general; and whereas some posts have made a study of the reasons underlying these dissatisfactions and find as follows:

1. Annual costs: That the net annual cost of the Government insurance is higher than seems reasonable when it is considered that there are no agents' fees to be paid, and that the Government is supposed to pay all operating costs. We find that for some classes of policies the costs are about the same or even a little higher than those of some of the larger insurance companies.

One individual case investigated reveals that the veteran took out a $10,000 straight life policy at the age of 47 for which the annual premium, based on quarterly payments, is $31.60 per $1,000. Inasmuch as the policy does not and has not for many years paid a dividend, this $31.60 represents the net cost per thousand.

At the same age (47) the veteran took out a $2,000 policy in one of the larger mutual companies on which he pays a quarterly premium of $21.08, or $42.16 per $1,000 per year. However, this latter policy has consistently paid an annual dividend of about $10.50 per $1,000, making the net cost approximately $31.66 per $1,000, or the same as the Government.

Both policies have a permanent-disability clause and are very comparable. The premium of the old-line policy is sufficient to pay all agents' fees, overhead, etc., that are not required of the Government premiums.

2. Lapses: The policy contract is such that the insurance lapses if the premium is not paid before the end of the 31-day grace period, even though there may be a substantial loan value. The policy referred to under paragraph 1 and most all other policies issued today provide that the insurance will not lapse for nonpayment of premium as long as there is sufficient loan value to meet the premiums. In case of nonpayment the loan is made automatically.

We have knowledge of numerous cases where this feature has saved policies during the depression. The Government contract could and should incorporate this feature without adding to the cost.

3. Interest rates: The contract provides that loans shall be at a rate not to exceed 6 percent compounded annually. No minimum interest rate is specified. We fail to find any case where less than the maximum rate of 6 percent has been and is being charged.

The World War veteran being no different from the cross-section average of American citizenry, has suffered from the depression of the last decade and the collapse of values just as have the others. Many, yes most, with or without employment, have been forced to borrow money to keep off of relief rolls as long as possible and to protect investments.

Many policies are rapidly becoming valueless due to the accumulation of interest at this high rate. Many veterans' families, for whom the veteran has earnestly attempted to provide an estate, are going to be left destitute and to the mercies of charity.

The Government has adopted the policy of lending money to others in distress at substantially lower rates and on security that is frequently of a doubtful nature, and we see no reason why the rates to veterans on such gilt-edge security should not be retroactively reduced to around 2½ or 3 percent.

Inquiries made regarding high rates of interest now charged have been met with the argument that this rate increases the dividend, that the policyholder himself is the beneficiary; and that it is a good thing in that it discourages borrowing. In view of the very small dividend paid (on such policies as are paying anything and to the large number that are paying no dividend at all) we believe this argument to be without merit. Further assuming that it has some merit, we do not believe that any veteran wishes to be the recipient of dividends for which a comrade is penalized.

4. Nonassignable clause: The policy contains a provision that it cannot be assigned, which makes it useless as security for loans from banks or other institutions that would be glad to make loans at rates less than 6 percent, even as low as 4 percent.

We are told by representatives of the Veterans' Bureau that this is in the interest of the veteran in that it discourages borrowing, and that it protects the veteran's family by preventing the veteran from assigning his policy and losing it.

This paternal interest may have been proper 20 years ago, when many of us were young and inexperienced. But in our now mature years it would seem that the veteran should have fuller control over his own affairs.

We have knowledge of cases where, had the Government policies been assignable, loans made from the Government could have been negotiated at banks at a lower rate. Further, from such inquiries and observations as we have made, we find that loans made locally with a definite maturity date are more frequently finally paid than are those made from the Government or insurance companies.

5. Service in general: Investigation of complaints of poor service has revealed cases where it has taken months for veterans to secure insurance. There are cases where policies have lapsed because premiums were received by the Bureau a few days late and the veteran did not receive notice of such lapse until 30 or 60 days later.

We see no reason why such conditions should exist and why the veteran should not reasonably expect to receive the same prompt and efficient service from the Veterans' Bureau as he gets from other insurance companies.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the matter just brought to your attention by the gentleman from Minnesota, I can tell you why and how it happens that the veterans who have converted their insurance are unable to borrow money on their policies at less than 6 percent.

In 1919, after the war, we were all privileged to convert our insurance. The commercial companies saw to it that the Government insurance policies were not too lenient with the veterans; in other words, they saw to it that the same type of insurance policy was offered to us that they could offer us in civil forms of insurance. Now, about one-third of the 600,000 veterans who have converted their insurance have borrowed on their policies. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has introduced a bill to reduce the rate of interest on such loans from 6 percent to 3½ percent. I hope this bill comes before the Congress, because I believe if we cannot get 3½ percent, the rate of interest should be reduced to at least what the farmers have to pay, approximately 4 percent.

The Veterans' Administration has nothing to do with this situation at the present time. Under the law, the Veterans' Administration cannot change that rate of interest, so I believe it is up to the Congress to take the law in its hands and pass some measure that will provide better treatment for the veterans. It seems we are paying now a high enough rate of interest to reimburse the Treasury of the United States for considerably more than we are giving the veterans who are unable to convert their insurance in connection with the bill we passed last year continuing term insurance for another 5 years. There is no reason why the Treasury of the United States should profit by the payment of this exorbitant rate of interest by the veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Let me say to the Members of the House that this question is now being considered by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. The representative of the American Legion, testifying before the committee this morning, suggested a reduction of the rate of interest on these insurance loans from 6 percent to 5 percent. As chairman of the committee, and without attempting to commit any of the other members of the committee, I suggested to him that the rate might be lowered to 3 or 3½ percent.

I believe it was in connection with loans of the Rural Electrification Administration that we had some difficulty a year or two ago in fixing the interest rate. My recollection is that we finally agreed to base the rate on the rate of interest the Government had to pay for money the year before. As a result, we got the rate down to 3 or 3½ percent, as I recall. It might have been the Electric Home and Farm Authority that was involved instead of the Rural Electrification Administration, but it was one of those agencies.

If the Government can borrow money at 2½ percent or 3 percent, I see no reason why the Government should charge the veterans more than one-half of 1 percent, or certainly not more than 1 percent more than the Government has to pay for its money.

I am unwilling to let the old-line insurance companies set the pace. It has been argued that we ought to keep up with them and let them fix the interest rates. The trouble is now that we have let the money changers fix the interest rates of this country too long. It is time for the Congress of the United States, representing the American people, to take steps to bring interest rates down.

I do not know what kind of legislation we can bring out, and I do not know what kind of legislation we can get passed and approved, but I do wish to say that this matter will be carefully considered by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and that we will do the very best we can. My opinion is that the Government should pay the administration expenses of the Veterans' Administration and not charge that expense up to the veterans who have to borrow on their insurance policies. If that is done, I feel confident that this interest rate can be reduced to at least 4 percent and probably to 3½, or maybe 3 percent.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Not to exceed $24,500,000 of the funds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, established by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 128), shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for administrative expenses of the Corporation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); expenses (not to exceed $5,000) of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Corporation when specifically authorized by the Board of Directors; printing and binding; lawbooks, books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; use of the services and facilities of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal home-loan banks, and Federal Reserve banks; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof: Provided further, That except for the limitations in amounts hereinbefore specified, and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Corporation shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1461-1468).

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. SUTPHIN: Strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, on page 57, all of page 58, and lines 1 to 4, inclusive, on page 59.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was organized for the finest purpose in the world: to save the home of the distressed home owner. They made more than 1,000,000 loans. They loaned more than $3,000,000,000. At the present time they have had to take over approximately 114,000 properties. They bailed out the insurance companies, the banks, building and loan associations, and other lending agencies, but at the present time they are nothing more than a collection agency with a property management division. There are two different departments here in this city that have fully equipped collection agencies with property management divisions that are able to take over the functions of this Department at the present time.

We have heard a lot said about favoring economy. Here is an opportunity to save $24,500,000 by not giving it to a bureau that is performing work than can be performed by other agencies already established. By supporting this amendment you will save the Government that much money. We have heard a great deal about reorganizing the Government. Here is an opportunity to reorganize by legislation, and I hope you will support the amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, and I would like to have 2 minutes of the time myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN] and I are seldom apart on questions, and it is rather difficult for me to take issue with him on this particular question, but I am forced to do so.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is something more than a collection agency. It supervises $4,750,000,000 worth of bonds, fully guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the Federal Government. It supervises $100,000,000 of capital which it has invested in the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and it supervises the $300,000,000 which was set aside for purchasing the bonds and debentures and the notes of the Federal home-loan banks, shares of the Federal Savings and Loan Associations, and shares of the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. SUTPHIN. The gentleman is referring to the Home Owners' Bank Board?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am referring to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the H. O. L. C.

There is no agency which is set up which can take over without a great deal of expense to the Federal Government the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They have innumerable offices throughout the United States.

I think the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has done a very fine job in the face of almost insurmountable obstacles. We set up the system as an adjunct to certain credit facilities to save the homes of distressed people. It has done a splendid job. We laid out a plan for them, and they have followed it. We virtually wrote the policy under which they would operate. If there is any question about efficiency in the operation of Home Owners' Loan Corporation, we have got to share the responsibility for it. So far as the personnel of the Board is concerned, and I believe a large majority of the employees, it is probably one of the most efficient agencies of the Federal Government.

In my personal estimation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation comes next, perhaps, to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the efficiency of its administrative functions and its desire to do the job as we laid the job out for it to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, we all recall that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created in June 1933 for the purpose of extending a helping hand to those millions of home owners who were unable to obtain refinancing through private sources because of the conditions which then existed. Having quickly geared itself to cope with the millions of applications which flooded its offices, it emerged at the end of its refinancing period 3 years later, in June of 1936, with a total of over 1,000,000 mortgage loans. Since that time it has been engaged in the task of servicing and liquidating these million mortgage loans. Some idea of the vast responsibilities which are involved in such a gigantic operation will be apparent to you from reading the recent report covering the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House during its consideration of the bill now before us. The difficulties inherent in the necessity of adequately reservicing its outstanding loans in the economic management and resale of the properties it has been forced to acquire, and in carrying out the financial and administrative processes of its organization all require continuance of control in those hands which have become thoroughly familiar with these problems by actual contact.

Throughout its operation the Corporation has shown and is continuing to reveal a record of efficiency, economy, and competency unusual in the annals of public service.

Those charged with its control have evolved and are practicing policies which show every consideration to the distressed home owners with whom they are required to deal. Its million borrowers have become thoroughly familiar with these policies and know where they stand and on what they can rely in the difficult process of paying off the obligation in their hands.

A far-sighted plan for the disposition of those properties which it finds it necessary to acquire is now in operation. The financial affairs of the Corporation and the billions of dollars in bonds which are in the background are being ably controlled by those trained to the task.

Into this picture, it seems highly inadvisable to introduce the extensive new complications which necessarily must come with any change of control.

Any such move will add new uncertainties and disturbing factors to many phases of both the internal set-up of the corporation and the national picture. It will increase the anxieties of its million borrowers and leave them facing all the possibilities which are inherent in any change of control. It will produce an adverse effect upon the financial markets of the Nation. It will immediately interfere with the efficient discharge of the Corporation's functions by causing its loyal and hard-working employees to anticipate such changes in their jobs as may be brought about by the change in control. The legal complication and the additional involvements which such a change will bring about in the titles of a million parcels of real estate should be the cause of grave concern.

It seems to me that to advocate a step which necessarily involves all these undesirable consequences would seem to be justifiable only were there a present evil which required a drastic remedial step. But I can see none in the record. The closest scrutiny has revealed that the Corporation, both in its past and present operation, has conducted its affairs in a manner which would compare favorably with the record of any private corporation throughout the country. Its heads have demonstrated unusual ability to foresee and deal wisely with all its problems and have a record of efficiency that can meet comparison anywhere and a tendency toward economy that is unparalleled in an organization of its kind.

I want to stress the thought that we all bear foremost in mind the fact that although the Corporation is in liquidation it is still a vast and going business enterprise, and I wish to urge that no change, such as that proposed, be introduced into its future so as to unnecessarily imperil its course toward final liquidation. [Applause.]

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, on February 6, in the county of Allegheny, which includes the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., there were apparently a large number of foreclosures of homes by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The reason for the foreclosures was, of course, the inability of the former owners of these homes to meet either the interest or the principal on their loans.

Over the week end in Pittsburgh I was besieged by these unfortunate citizens to do something to save their homes. There is a gradually growing impression in the United States that the Government of the United States itself, through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, has become the most vicious shylock in the Nation's history.

This H. O. L. C. was created by the Congress to save the distressed home owners of the Nation, the homes that many of them have spent their lifetime in acquiring. Agents and officials of the H. O. L. C. have since its creation given the impression to the home owners, many thousands of them unemployed or receiving such small pittances from private industries that they could not maintain their homes, that the kindly hand of Uncle Sam would be extended to assist them. Let it be known that this kindly hand has become a clutching hand; that the United States is now the largest owner of repossessed small homes in the Nation; that thousands of men, women, and children are being kicked out of their homes all over the Nation in a manner that would shame even the Irish landlords of infamous memory.

I have in my possession notices of foreclosures of those Pennsylvania homes signed by James M. Guffey, 2d, of Pittsburgh, foreclosure attorney for the H. O. L. C. We have been told countless times in Pennsylvania that the very name signed to these eviction notices stands for charity, understanding, and compassion for the poor and the oppressed. On the other hand, we know that the name stands for complete governmental generosity here in Washington.

Our small-home owners in Pennsylvania have been tricked into the belief that the H. O. L. C. would save their homes; now they know the bitter fact that the cold and calculating, steely eyes of Uncle Sam are just as relentless in their demands for his pound of flesh as any of the fabled bankers of Wall Street. If we could transfer this relentless capacity for collecting what is due the United States from thousands of small-home owners of the country to those European powers who owe us billions of dollars, and about which we send polite notes, the American people would be greatly benefited in both respects.

My colleagues, I am bringing you the emphatic protest of thousands of Pennsylvanians who want this vicious practice stopped and who want the H. O. L. C. investigated, reorganized, or abolished.

On March 4, 1933, on the steps of this very building, almost the first words uttered by the incoming administration were those denouncing the money changers in the temple. Mr.

Chairman, Members of the Congress, I invite you to look around among our Government bureaus and get a short-range view of the money changers. Despite all declarations to the contrary, they are still sitting right here with us in the temple. It is time we did a real job of kicking them out. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the statement that the United States Government is a heartless Shylock is so ridiculous and fantastic when compared with the actual fact that it is hardly necessary to answer the insinuation. From the time when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was established until it ceased functioning on June 12, 1936, it had made loans to 1,017,000 home owners who could not secure relief from the banking institutions in the United States aggregating the sum of $3,000,000,000. Subsequent loans incurred increased that amount to $3,146,000,000. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has made marvelous collections on these loans, but has had to repossess 14 percent of its loans, which is substantially more than any other lending company in the United States. They have a record that cannot be met or challenged by any private lending concern in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that they were called upon to do business with a crowd of American citizens who were down and out because of economic disaster, and not in a single instance has that Corporation ever foreclosed upon any citizen where there was the slightest chance of his ever being able to pay up the funds. Gentlemen should bear in mind that Congress created this agency to make loans and not hand out gratuities, and if Congress wants to amend the law to give back the interest and wipe out the debt that is one proposition; but as the law stands today they are loans, and as the record stands today they have an unsurpassed record. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SUTPHIN) there were—ayes 11, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Not to exceed $9,000,000 of the mutual mortgage insurance fund and $3,500,000 of the funds advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Federal Housing Administration, created under authority of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 1246), in all $12,500,000, shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for administrative expenses of the Administration, including: Personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833), but there may be allowed in addition to mileage at a rate not to exceed 4 cents per mile for travel by motor vehicle reimbursement for the actual cost of ferry fares and bridge and tunnel tolls, and employees engaged in the inspection of property may be paid an allowance not to exceed 3 cents per mile for all travel performed in their personally owned automobiles within the limits of their official posts of duty when such travel is performed in connection with such inspection; printing and binding; law books, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,500 for periodicals and newspapers; not to exceed $1,500 for contract actuarial services; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; purchase of one and maintenance, repair, and operation of three motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administration; not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings concerned with the work of the Administration; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property of the Administration acquired under authority of title II of said National Housing Act, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof, and shall be paid from the mutual mortgage insurance fund created by said act: Provided further, That, except for the limitations in amounts herein before specified and the restrictions in respect to travel expenses, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the Administration shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of said act of June 27, 1934, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1701-1723): Provided further, That not exceeding $300,000 of the sum herein authorized shall be expended in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1940 for purposes of the Public Relations and Education Division.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia: Page 59, line 6, after the word "exceed", strike out "$9,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,500,000"; and on page 59, line 11, strike out "$12,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,000,000"; on line 11, after the figures "1940", insert the following: "Provided, That of such sum of $15,000,000 the sum of $2,500,000 shall be available for the remainder of the fiscal year 1939."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in explanation I will say that, of course, we recall in the case of the Federal Housing Administration that they have their own funds and Congress authorizes an expenditure for administrative expenses. The administrative expenses are running into a deficit, and there is a Budget estimate of $5,000,000 deficit for the remainder of the fiscal year for the Federal Housing Administration pending before the deficiency subcommittee, but under the present situation it looks as though we would not get another deficiency bill for some 6 to 7 weeks. They are badly in need of an authorization to use their own funds. This amendment would permit the use of half the amount the Budget committee has recommended for the remainder of the fiscal year, until the subcommittee on deficiencies can have a hearing upon the matter. I have shown the amendment to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and I understand that they have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, the salaries of the members of the Authority and the Administrator, Civil Aeronautics Authority, of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission, and the Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission shall be at the rate of $10,000 each per annum.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 66, beginning in line 18, strike out all of section 3.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the section to which I referred in my remarks on Monday and Tuesday that places a limitation on the amount of money appropriated in this bill that can be paid to the members of the Authority and Administrator, Civil Aeronautics Authority, the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission, and the Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission.

The gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of this committee, yesterday told the House, in opposing an amendment that had to do with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, that the House, after deliberate consideration, passed the bill organizing the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The gentleman further stated:

I believe every member of the subcommittee was impressed with the ability and sincerity of the people who are operating this department.

Yes; the House did pass that bill; and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] voted for it and practically every member of this subcommittee voted for it, if not all. If I am in error, correct me. In that bill you provided a specific salary for the members of that Authority and the Administrator. That was only in the last session of the Congress. The bill, of course, was brought to the floor by a legislative committee. Now, the Appropriations Committee, through the medium of the Holman rule, seeks to legislate on this appropriation bill by reducing the salaries they voted for last year. That is only one commission that is affected. I named the others a moment ago.

A few years ago Congress created the Maritime Commission. Everyone knows that men who understand ships and shipping laws must of necessity be members of the Maritime Commission. Without such men the Commission would be at the mercy of those having business with it. They are now handling a billion and a quarter dollars, but the big thing they are doing is rebuilding our merchant marine, an arm of our national defense. The Chairman of that Commission is one of the most outstanding naval architects and naval constructors in the United States. He spent many years of his life in the Navy, and after his retirement, instead of going into private industry, he responded to the appeals and accepted this position. At the time, and today, the law provides a specific salary, and now the Appropriations Committee, not the legislative committee, reduces the salary. While this amendment reduces his salary, it is only temporarily, and I will tell you why before I finish.

The gentleman from Minnesota said comparable commissions should all receive the same salary. By no means are they comparable. Anyone who knows anything about the work of the commissions know there is a vast difference. The fact is Mr. Chairman we have other commissions where the commissioners are underpaid. I might mention the Federal Trade and Water Power Commissions.

I cited in the RECORD on Monday six unanimous decisions of our courts, four by the Court of Claims and two by the United States Supreme Court, wherein they held that the fact that the Congress of the United States did not appropriate sufficient money to pay the salary of the official, when the salary was fixed by organic law, did not relieve the Government of the United States from its obligation to pay that salary. In every case the court permitted the official to recover, and they came back to Congress with the request for money to pay the claims, and the Committee on Appropriations appropriated the money; not only the salary, but also interest on the unpaid amount.

I am going to cite those decisions again.

The citations are:

Robert M. Danford against United States, Court of Claims Reports, 51, 61, page 286: Court held plaintiff was entitled to recover. As commandant of Military Academy, statute provided he was to receive pay of a lieutenant colonel. For 2 years pay was reduced due to failure of Congress to appropriate sufficient money.

Strong against United States, Court of Claims Reports, 1924-25, page 627: Statute provided that each professor at the Military Academy whose service exceeds 10 years shall have pay and allowance of colonel. Court held pay and allowance fixed by law and while Treasury could not pay until necessary appropriation was made, the liability of the United States to pay exists independently of the appropriation and may be enforced by proceedings in the Court.

United States against Laughton, United States Reports, October term, 1885-86, page 389: Court of Claims held Laughton, Minister to Haiti, was entitled to salary allowed by law. Government appealed to Supreme Court. Court held in part that, according to the settled rules of interpretation, a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount.

James against United States, United States Reports, volume 202, October term, 1905: Charles P. James was an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. After his death administratrix brought suit to recover $6,688.90, holding judge was paid at rate of $4,000 per annum while statute fixed salary at $5,000. Judgment favorable to plaintiff.

In view of the decisions how can anyone say we have a legal right to reduce the salaries without changing the organic law. You might think you save a few dollars here, but in the end, the Congress will be required to not only pay the balance of the salary but interest besides.

Aside from that interest the Department of Justice will employ special attorneys at a high rate of pay to defend the cases for the Government. As each and every one of the officials affected by this provision can, and in time will, go into court and recover the salary the organic law provides they should receive, it is folly to pass this provision.

You know my record in this House in regard to economy, but I insist this is not economy.

This matter should be considered by the various legislative committees, and if, in their judgment, they feel the salaries now provided in existing law are too high, and bring in a bill and justify their recommendation for a reduction, I will support that bill, but I am not going to vote for a provision which the highest court in our land declined to approve on two occasions.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment striking out the paragraph will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be limited to 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will prevail. I listened with a great deal of interest and was almost moved to tears by the earnest, eloquent, and appealing address of the majority leader of this House today in which he urged the Members of the House to stand by the legislative committees and to uphold them in their work. That is what I am asking you to do now. The legislative Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries considered the question of salaries when it framed the bill creating the Maritime Commission. The other committees did the same thing as to the agencies created by them. The Interstate Commerce Commission is affected. I submit that their salaries should be restored. I believe that if you had fewer Interstate Commerce Commissioners and better-paid men, the railroads would not be in the jeopardy they are today. [Applause.]

I submit further that when these commissions were considered by the committees the question of salaries was gone into much more fully than could possibly be done by the Appropriations Committee. Whenever the Appropriations Committee wants to sustain its position it asks you to stand by the legislative committee of the House if that is agreeable with their desires. I am asking you to do that now. When we consider the work that has to be done by the Maritime Commission and the extent of its work, and how far-reaching it is, there should be no question about the salaries originally provided. The Maritime Commission is operating a world-wide business. It is in competition with the nations of the world. It must know the rules and regulations. The same is true of the Aeronautics Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission is concerned with all the problems of the railroads, and they are very grave. Let us not be picayunish in reducing these salaries, but keep them at the figures the legislative committees said should be paid.

I appeal to the House to pass this amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman think that if we raise the salaries of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners we would be able to get better men than Amle, of Wisconsin, on the Commission?

Mr. BLAND. I have my own views. I would not vote to confirm Mr. Amle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 was reported to this body by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am a member. Long and exhaustive hearings were held on this most important bill and a great deal of care and consideration was given to the section fixing the salaries of the members of the Commission.

The Maritime Commission has a great executive as well as financial responsibility. I have always been in favor of economy in Government, but I sincerely feel it is a mistake to reduce the salaries of members of this Commission.

It is estimated that it will cost $1,250,000,000 to rehabilitate our merchant marine, one of the most important links in the chain of our naval national defense. The Maritime Commission, whose salaries you would reduce from $12,000 to $10,000, have absolute control over this enormous fund.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936 fixed the maximum salary of $25,000 a year for the presidents of all Government-subsidized shipping companies. In the pending bill there is a provision to reduce the salaries of the members of the Maritime Commission, which has charge of all Government-subsidized and Government-operated shipping companies from $12,000 to $10,000 a year. I submit, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, that this is poor economy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and concur in his effort to strike out section 3 of this bill. In taking this position I think I am following the same course I followed this morning when I opposed the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] attempting to strike out the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board.

Last year we created the Civil Aeronautics Authority. After much discussion and a difference of opinion between the two legislative bodies in the Capitol the salaries were agreed upon at $12,000 per year. The President offered these positions to the men now occupying them. They accepted them at that salary, and we are breaking faith if we come in now, less than a year after the organizations were created, and reduce their salaries. The same thing applies to the Merchant Marine situation, the Maritime Commission, and to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The legislative acts creating these positions designated a certain salary, and we ought not to break faith with them by simply refusing to appropriate the money which the substantive law calls for and directs the Congress to appropriate.

I cannot see how the Committee on Appropriations can sustain its position in this matter when they opposed the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] to legislate out of existence the National Labor Relations Board. The principle is exactly the same in this case. They are undertaking to change the act creating the agencies by lowering the salaries. The people holding these positions accepted them with the understanding that they were to get the salaries provided in the act creating the agencies, and Congress, in my judgment, ought not to act in this way. If anybody wants to change these salaries, let them introduce a bill to that effect and have it considered by the legislative committee having jurisdiction.

I hope the Committee will vote with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and strike out this section, which ought not to be in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] is recognized.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. I also reiterate what has just been said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

I should like to direct my remarks, and to invite your attention especially, to the salaries for the members of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. This happens to be the Authority most recently created by the Congress of the United States. It was established in the last session. Many of the Members here present will recall that there was most painstaking consideration and most exhaustive debate upon the subject of the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The members of this new organization were drafted into most important positions in the Government of the United States. I cannot too strongly say here this evening that they are charged with one of the highest responsibilities that has ever been placed upon any board created by legislative act.

There is a moral agreement with the men who took those positions at the salaries set by Congress, and I am not certain but what beyond the moral agreement and contract there is also a legal agreement which is binding in cases of this type.

Mr. Chairman, I, in closing, say to the members of this committee that, regardless of whether we sit on one side of the aisle or the other, the vote upon this amendment, which is offered by a Democrat, certainly should not be considered in any wise on a partisan basis. Mr. WOODRUM and his committee, I understand, will oppose the contention we make. The members of the Civil Aeronautics Authority are charged with a very heavy responsibility in a specialized field and should receive from the Congress of the United States at this time support from those of us who are interested, as all of us are interested, in a real organization for the development of not alone civil aviation in this Government of yours and mine, but also a meshing of our civil aviation activities into the national-defense program. Aviation is a developing industry in the country. We should do nothing to retard the work of the Authority. We should lend every encouragement. I caution you, and I caution in the fairest spirit, that we make, in my opinion, a grievous error, and one that in the future will be a bad precedent, if today we allow the Appropriations Committee, in the consideration of funds for the various agencies of the Government, to bring here a legislative proposal in effect. I trust that the committee will support the very fair contention in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the debate so far protesting against these salary cuts has been directed against two commissions that have been in existence but a couple of months. Nobody so far has shed any tears over the Tariff Commission that has had this cut applied to it by the House of Representatives, my beloved friends here, and myself year after year since the Economy Act went into effect. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the Tariff Commission members' basic salaries are $12,000. We have cut their salaries back every year to $10,000, and, as I stated, no one has shed any tears.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to say I was the first one to offer an amendment here to reduce the salaries of Government officials, but I found out I was wrong, and I have sense enough when I find out I am wrong to turn around and go the right way.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will turn around and vote against his own amendment, because he is making another mistake.

Mr. COCHRAN. No; because they will recover the money, anyway.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will not recover the money.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will show the gentleman in a minute.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to become personal, and if Congress wants to pay these people $12,000 a year I do not care, but there is no use getting emotional about it. Let us read the list of the gentlemen on these two commissions. I have before me the Maritime Commission, a splendid, fine aggregation of men.

Before Admiral Land, Chairman, was appointed a few months ago, he received the pay of an admiral in the Navy, $9,700. Another member is a distinguished former Member of the House who was involuntarily left at home. Another member was an administrative official in another agency. Not one of them, so far as I know, ever received as much as $10,000 a year, certainly not from the Government.

Let us turn to the Civil Aeronautics Authority. One of the distinguished members, a very able lawyer, was general counsel for another commission and received $10,000. Another member was an administrator in a department of the Treasury receiving about $9,000 a year, and so on.

Let us not get emotional about this matter, and conclude that some great injustice has been done. If we are going to put it on the basis of value rendered to the Nation, how are you going to evaluate in dollars and cents the services rendered to the people of the country by some of the men who serve in this body on both sides of the aisle? It is not very complimentary to these two Commissions, the Aeronautical Authority and the Maritime Commission, to say that the members would have taken those jobs only because they would receive $12,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDOLPH), there were—ayes 28, noes 65. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 66, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for or against the other Commissioners mentioned in this section. They are all entitled to retain the salary of $12,000 a year prescribed for them in the law creating the Commission. If the salaries are to be changed, the legislative committees ought to change them and not the Appropriations Committee.

I do want to call attention to the services rendered by the Maritime Commissioners. I do not know of any other commission or agency that is running a world-wide business, that must know world conditions, the costs, practices, rules, and regulations of ocean commerce of every maritime nation in the world. That is what the Maritime Commission must do. I do not know of any other body of men who in the very limited time they have occupied office have settled claims against the Government aggregating $92,500,000 for the small sum of $7,390,152.20. That is what the Maritime Commission has done.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. OLIVER. I think a statement, made, perhaps, unconsciously, by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] should be corrected at this point. He said that one member of the Maritime Commission, a former Member of this House, was involuntarily left at home. As a matter of fact the man who was a former Member of the House and who is now a member of the Maritime Commission was not a candidate for reelection to the House.

Mr. BLAND. I am very glad to have that correction of Mr. WOODRUM's statement. That was former Member Mr. Moran.

At the time these salaries were adopted, it is my recollection there was before the committee the question of making the Commission a body of seven, with salaries ranging from $10,000 to $15,000 or more. It was the judgment of the committee that five men with a salary of $12,000 a year would offer an inducement to secure better men for this work.

I referred to the work of the Maritime Commission. I resume. Not only does that Commission make settlements but it also must know conference rates and conference agreements affecting our commerce, oceangoing, coastwise, and intercoastal. The Commission keeps in touch almost daily with the Department of State and with the Interstate Commerce Commission. I shall refer to these services later.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the effort on the part of the Congress today to reduce the salaries of the members of the Maritime Commission will be construed by the other maritime nations of the world as a weakening in our position in support of our merchant marine. I would rather that they remain as they are even if I believed that the salaries were too large than to have it go out to the nations of the world that we are weakening in our determination to have a merchant marine. Our competition is keen today. These men are vested with a great responsibility. They must know the cost of shipbuilding in all other nations of the world. They must know operating differentials in the various services. They are charged with working out these differences in the interest of the American people.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The very sound contention which is made by the gentleman from Virginia in behalf of the members of the Maritime Commission applies with equal force to the specialized gentlemen who are serving on the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It was significant that the gentleman from Virginia failed to read down the list of members of that body.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELOSON. The Maritime Commissioners are running ships that are owned by the United States Government?

Mr. BLAND. Some of the lines are owned by the United States Government and some are private lines.

Let me say further that we limited the salaries of the men who are to operate the lines to a specific sum, $25,000 a year, I think, yet all the problems involved in the operation of these lines are to be worked out now by a Commission whose members are to be paid $10,000 because gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations, who, I respectfully submit, do not know anything in the world about it, have not fully considered the proposition. Before they try to usurp the functions of the legislative committees let them attend to the responsibilities and functions purely and properly belonging to the Committee on Appropriations. Let us not have these vetoes by the Committee on Appropriations.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to call attention more in detail but by no means completely to the work these men have to do.

Members of the Maritime Commission are charged with responsibilities vital to our national welfare at home and abroad both in peace and war.

In peace: Twenty to thirty millions of our citizens depend directly or indirectly upon our foreign trade. This trade must be carried in ships. Congress has declared that a substantial portion must be carried in ships of United States registry. The Commission is responsible for providing these ships, both in cooperation with private operators and for its own account where necessary, in adequate numbers and proper proportion.

In war: The merchant marine provides the Navy with what is called the "service of supply." Fast, efficient merchant vessels are essential to the proper operation of fighting ships. They feed, fuel, and service them generally in emergencies. Without such an auxiliary, the Navy's usefulness is materially reduced and our "first line of defense" is perilously weakened.

Upon the judgment, experience, and ability of the Commission members depend the achievement of these two paramount purposes.

Shipping is our oldest and most complicated industry. To restore it to its former vigor and to return the United States to a position among the maritime nations commensurate with our importance as a world power involves what may fairly be called one of the major current activities of the Government. Members of the Commission are continually called upon to formulate opinions and judgments involving economic problems, both domestic and international, upon complicated financial questions of substantial magnitude, upon numerous matters vital to our international trade, and upon legal problems requiring appearance in courts throughout the world. As an example of the latter, it can be said that within a few days the Commission lost one lawsuit in Venice and won another in Ireland, and is at present involved in litigation in Brazil and in Japan.

Upon its creation under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, the Maritime Commission faced the task of rehabilitating the merchant marine, more than 90 percent of which will become obsolete by 1942. So great had been our decline as a maritime power that our foreign-trade fleet stood fourth in tonnage, sixth in speed, and seventh, or next to last, in age among the principal maritime nations of the world, while the country itself stood second only to Great Britain as a world trader.

The Commission started from scratch. No comprehensive study of the merchant marine had even been made. Therefore, before attempting to work out the complexities which confronted it and the maritime industry, the Commission undertook an exhaustive study.

The questions formulated by the Commission, and for which answers were sought and found, included:

- (1) Should the United States attempt to compete in the international carrying trade?
- (2) What are the requirements of the United States?
- (3) What is the present status of the subsidized merchant marine?
- (4) What should be the policy of the United States?
- (5) What does it cost to maintain an adequate merchant marine in the foreign trade?

Upon the completion of this study in November of 1937, the Commission after long and arduous discussions was ready to begin the major portion of the task delegated to it by the Congress.

It should be said, however, that while this study was going on, the Commission was also engaged in the extremely difficult and trying effort of settling claims approximating $92,500,000 filed against the Government by reason of the termination of mail-pay contracts as of June 30, 1937. Within 60 days, actual settlement of a major portion of these claims, at something less than 10 cents on the dollar, had been effected, and without interruption of service on subsidized lines. The quality of judgment, of legal skill, and economic and financial knowledge involved in these settlements were of necessity of the highest order. Otherwise, the Government and the merchant marine would have been seriously handicapped and the taxpayers would have stood to lose many millions of dollars. These claims were settled for $7,390,152.20.

To formulate a replacement program and to effect its systematic and orderly accomplishment, the Commissioners were called upon to acquire an intimate knowledge of both the foreign trade and national-defense aspects of the merchant marine. It was decided informally that the minimum requirements for this systematic and orderly replacement program must involve construction of 50 ships a year for 10 years.

Under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, the Congress declared that the merchant marine should be "owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States insofar as may be practicable * * *", which has been interpreted to mean that the Commission must bend every legitimate effort to support and maintain private operation. The successful achievement of this goal alone requires the best brains and judgment in matters economic and legal, which can be brought to the Government service.

Even so, this has been a very small part of the responsibilities resting upon members of the Commission. Once the elements involved in this question in an individual case have been properly assembled, there then arise the intricacies involved in determining the proper construction-differential subsidy to offset the cheaper building costs abroad, and that in turn is followed by the necessity of determining an equitable operating-differential subsidy to bring the American-flag operation as close as possible to economic parity with the operator's principal foreign-flag competitor. In this way alone, can American standards of living, based on American wages, be maintained among those employed in our merchant marine.

As an example of the far-reaching effects of shipbuilding alone, it can be said, in truth, that into the fabrication of a single substantial vessel go the products of the fields, mines, or factories of practically every State in the Union.

As a concrete example of what the Commission's program means in dollars and cents, it can be shown that between January 1, 1938, and the end of the next fiscal year the Commission's construction schedule will have put into the pay envelopes of shipyard workers approximately $140,000,000. It will also have resulted in the purchase of material amounting approximately to $175,000,000, and it will have been the means of paying overhead expenses and profits in the amount of some $78,000,000.

The administrative ability alone involved in the prudent expenditure of such amounts of money requires business and technical judgment, skill, talent, character, and integrity which cannot be easily found for the Government service.

The records covering earlier administration of our shipping laws indicate somewhat tragically the handicaps, the expense, and the embarrassment which result from incapable management.

The Maritime Commission is subjected to pressures from individuals and groups to perhaps a greater degree from the point of view of their potential effect upon men's judgments than any other independent agency of the Government. For men capable of withstanding these pressures, $12,000 per year is a modest price.

Aside from the construction and subsidy responsibilities placed upon Commission members, there are very extensive and complicated regulatory functions to be carried out. They have been compared with those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That comparison fundamentally would seem to end almost at the beginning. It would seem to stand only insofar as it can be said that both agencies derive their regulatory powers through Congress from the same constitutional authority, namely, the interstate- and foreign-commerce clause of the Constitution. While it is true that the mechanics of administering their respective regulatory functions are somewhat similar, the problems to which these mechanics apply are in many ways entirely dissimilar, and in the case of foreign commerce no comparison exists.

While the Interstate Commerce Commission is primarily a regulatory agency, the Maritime Commission exercises its regulatory powers over a considerably wider field and as only one of a series of interlocking responsibilities.

A simple illustration may be drawn concerning the regulatory problems of the two agencies by saying that trains run on rails to which their movement is restricted, and their operation, for purposes of comparison, is limited to the United States. Ships, on the other hand, in endless numbers, can navigate the breadths of the seven seas and under the flags of many nations. That alone inspires far keener and more acute competition among carriers by water than among those by land. Quite different regulatory problems are involved in the two operations.

The Maritime Commission, under the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, is directly charged with obtaining preference for American-flag ships, both as to passengers and cargo. It also must be alert to all discriminations against American-flag ships. These duties frequently involve delicate diplomatic questions upon which sound judgment must be exercised. For this reason a close liaison must, therefore, be maintained with the Department of State and other agencies of the Government involved in activities abroad. This in turn leads other Government agencies to consult the Maritime Commission to obtain its opinions and advice on matters pertaining to international trade and transportation.

An important and little-known Commission activity involves the direction of numerous studies of specialized maritime problems and the formulation of recommendations as to solutions for the information and assistance of Congress.

For example, the Commission is at present completing a comprehensive examination into the organization and services of coastwise and intercoastal shipping operators. This study covers their financial set-up, their management, the condition of their fleets, the requirements of their tonnage, particularly from the point of view of obsolescence, as well as their potentialities as naval auxiliaries.

The Commission has recently completed and submitted to Congress an exhaustive report on the training of personnel for our own merchant marine and a thorough examination of the training systems of our principal competitors.

A third study involves disposal of obsolete tonnage. This question, upon its face, would appear fairly simple to resolve. However, it includes aspects of international importance, especially where sale by private companies abroad is contemplated at times of international tension and insecurity.

The above examples, selected at random, appear in isolation to constitute a minor activity of the Commission, but, measured by their ramifications, the results of special studies frequently involve consequences of the utmost importance.

Taking the Commission's duties and responsibilities as a whole, we find that they include, among others, important quasi-judicial functions, very extensive mortgage, banking, insurance, shipbuilding, and purchasing activities, as well as ship operation and the management of terminal facilities.

For men of the character and ability required to assume and discharge such responsibilities as are involved in those activities, considerable financial sacrifice is required in the public interest. While the reward for public service well rendered should not be measured in dollars, this Government should be willing to maintain their compensation at a level as nearly commensurate with the dignity and responsibility of the office as possible.

In closing I wish to say that I am impelled to urge retention of the salaries provided in the act solely by my interest in the merchant marine and by my abiding conviction that the defense of our country in time of war and the promotion of our trade in time of peace are indissolubly associated with the existence of an adequate American merchant marine.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDOLPH) there were—ayes 22, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. No part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be available for the payment of enlistment allowance to enlisted men for reenlistment within a period of 3 months from date of discharge as to reenlistments made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, notwithstanding the applicable provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922 (37 U. S. C. 13, 16).

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the inclusion of this section in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The provision would come under the Holman rule as a limitation except for the fact that it contains legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the independent offices appropriation bill, 1940 (H. R. 3743), had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? The Chair hears none. The Chair will put the amendments en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful and compassionate Father, who knowest our nature and readest our thoughts, from whom nothing can be hidden: Help us at this moment of supplication to unburden ourselves of everything unreal and to find rest in being what we are and nothing more, that, without shame or pretence, we may live in the realm of freedom and sincerity.

Life, with her sharp-edged tools of joy and pain, has engraved upon our face a legend of her own, and life at times becomes almost too hard to bear; duty is too large, and feeble hands hang down; and so we come to Thee, with all our weakness, asking for Thy strength, for we cannot live without Thy blessing, nor adequately serve Thee and Thy people except the spirit of the Christ abide in us. Amen.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1939.
The honorable the VICE PRESIDENT of the United States,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: By direction of the Chief Justice I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a copy of the order entered this day selecting three Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to serve as members of the committee constituted by the joint resolution of Congress of June 22, 1938 (52 Stat. 943, ch. 595), entitled "To authorize the acceptance of title to the dwelling house and property, the former residence of the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, located at 1720 Eye Street NW., in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and Congress to provide for Kern River flood control

Whereas floods on the Kern River from time to time constitute a serious menace, causing erosion, damage to homes and farms, destruction of farm crops, and the necessity of maintaining expensive constructions and levees to protect the city of Bakersfield; and

Whereas the construction of dams for storage and to control the waters of the river would create a supply of stored waters which could be used to irrigate a large acreage of very fertile land in Kern County; and

Whereas the present system of storage in the open valley results in a high percentage of evaporation of the waters so stored which are thereby lost for use for purposes of irrigation; and

Whereas construction of storage reservoirs and hydroelectric power plants in connection therewith would furnish power during the growing season, which power would lower the cost of pumping in those districts where pumping is done, and at the same time would eventually pay the entire cost of all the storage dams, reservoirs, and power plants in connection therewith; and

Whereas the construction of such storage reservoirs and hydroelectric power plants is of such an extensive and intricate nature as to require handling as a Federal project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States be memorialized to include the construction of dams and hydroelectric power plants in connection therewith on the Kern River as one of the Federal construction projects and that Federal moneys be appropriated in sums sufficient to complete the construction of the dams and other works in connection therewith at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to each Senator or Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to continue the Works Progress Administration Federal art project

Whereas the Works Progress Administration Federal art project has been in existence over a period of 3 years, providing employment for workers of all arts crafts; and

Whereas the number employed on the Federal art project has tended to relieve to a certain extent long periods of unemployment for a great number of artists of all the arts; and

Whereas the Federal art project has given to many workers in the fine arts and crafts a chance to rehabilitate themselves for future employment in this industrial world; and

Whereas private enterprise is now unable to absorb musicians, actors, painters, and workers of other art crafts because of technological development and mechanical devices which reproduce and supplant the necessity for their personal presence; and

Whereas art of all phases in itself is a necessity for upright, honest, sincere, wholesome, and enjoyable living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully urges, requests, and memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to pass such legislation as will make it imperative that the Works Progress Administration Federal art project be continued in its present form; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Assembly joint resolution relative to Federal aid to State or Territorial veterans' homes

Whereas there exists in the State of California one of the outstanding State homes of the Nation for the care of disabled veterans who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living; and

Whereas the per capita cost for maintaining such veterans has greatly increased due to advancing age and physical disabilities; and

Whereas the State of California is deluged with veterans who come from other States who become disabled, and by reason of their becoming legal residents must be cared for in California; and

Whereas the $120 per year per capita Federal aid represents a very small part of the total cost of maintaining a veteran in the California State facility: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation that will result in increasing the Federal aid: Provided, That any State shall not be paid a sum exceeding one-half of the per capita cost of maintaining a veteran; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Assembly of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate letters in the nature of memorials from the Industrial Union Council, C. I. O., of Eau Claire, Wis.; the Saginaw District Industrial Union Council, C. I. O., of Saginaw, Mich.; the Iron Range Industrial Union Council, C. I. O., of Pongilly, Minn.; and the Kansas City Industrial Union Council, C. I. O., of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against curtailment of the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board contained in the independent offices appropriation bill, and also remonstrating against amendment of the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Resolution commending Members of the Congress of the United States for introducing a bill designed to guarantee to farmers the cost of production

Whereas 18 Senators and 6 Representatives have introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill designed to guarantee the cost of production to farmers; and

Whereas it is the sense of this house that such legislation is essential if the economic status of agriculture be raised to a parity with other industry: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Twenty-sixth Montana Legislative Assembly do hereby commend said Members of Congress for their action in introducing this legislation, and that the clerk of this house be and is hereby directed to convey to each of said national legislators this expression of commendation.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House resolution memorializing Congress and the President of the United States to appropriate funds for the public-welfare assistance payments on the basis of 66½ percent by the Federal Government to 33½ percent by the State of South Carolina

Whereas the total estimated revenue for general purposes in the State of South Carolina amounts to $10,576,533.10; and

Whereas for the year 1939-40 the appropriations recommended by the South Carolina State Budget Commission amount to $10,534,970.29, exclusive of any appropriation whatever for the social-security program in South Carolina; and

Whereas if these appropriations recommended by the South Carolina State Budget Commission are enacted into law, there will be either no funds for the purpose of granting old-age assistance payments and other payments under the public-welfare program of South Carolina or there will be necessity for levying new or additional taxes on the overburdened taxpayers of South Carolina; and

Whereas the average per capita income for the State of South Carolina is among the lowest in the United States; and

Whereas it is a well-recognized fact throughout the Nation that the ability of South Carolina to care for its aged needy is far below that of most other States; and

Whereas the National Government has recognized through the enactment of social-security legislation the responsibility of the United States to its aged and needy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, That the President and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, memorialized to provide at this session of the Congress funds for public-welfare assistance payments on a basis of 66½ percent on the part of the Federal Government to 33½ percent to be appropriated for public-welfare assistance payments by the State of South Carolina; be it

Resolved further, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the two Senators, and to each Member of Congress from the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES also presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution relating to the cotton-control program

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina, That inasmuch as the cotton farmer of South Carolina lingers in despair regarding the low price of cotton, that this general assembly now gathered here in session go on record favoring a cotton-control program administered by our Federal Government. This seems paramount; and be it further

Resolved, That the huge surplus accumulated in the Federal warehouses be largely dissipated through the channels of the W. P. A. workers with credit of goods in clothing and house material distributed to the worker. This will afford relief for the textile worker, the manufacturer, and the merchant as they will prepare and distribute these cotton goods.

This body would commend that the Secretary of Agriculture follow such procedure as to make every effort to place the highest loan price of cotton at no less than 15 to 16 cents so that the cotton farmer can earn a living commensurate with the outside standard of living and sell his cotton at a price on even keel with other commodities that he has to buy. Let a copy of this resolution be sent to our Congress in Washington.

We realize that the past efforts made to raise and maintain a higher price level of cotton have been feeble, futile, and valueless; but we know that in the palm of that Federal hand lies the secret of control elevating the price of cotton which will challenge the cotton farmer to work and live and develop some financial strength worthy of his future which he can share in the hearts and eyes of this great Nation.

And furthermore, as the cotton farmers must receive immediate relief we implore the Department of Agriculture to set aside this whole surplus of cotton by allocating and utilizing major portions in building and constructing roads and highways in the United States, in such a manner as will provide immediate outlet, and we would even suggest forcing some of it, if need be, on the world market.

Mr. BYRNES also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution requesting the United States Senators and Members of Congress from South Carolina to initiate and cooperate in supporting legislation to restore cotton to its former economic importance in world commerce

Whereas by reason of legislation creating trade barriers to the cotton trade, discriminating freight rates, the tariff, and other legislation, and by reason of world economic conditions and competition from cotton growers in foreign countries with living standards below that of this country, the cotton farmers in the Southern States have been reduced to a tragic financial condition, their export markets have been almost lost, they are subject to competition which they are handicapped in meeting, and the growing of cotton made economically impossible under existing conditions; and

Whereas unless concerted action is immediately taken by the Senators and Members of Congress from the cotton States looking to the relief of the cotton farmers from the handicaps under which such conditions have come about, the growing of cotton may soon become a thing of the past in this country, and the welfare and income of large sections of the United States seriously affected: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina (the senate concurring), That the attention of the Congress of the United States is respectfully directed to the fact that cotton is the leading product in America's commerce and international trade, and that the cotton farmer represents the world's largest primary wealth-producing group, and that it is of paramount importance to the producers of this commodity, as well as to the continued life of world trade on the part of the United States, that this interest be adequately rehabilitated and fostered. To that end the Senators and Members of Congress from the State of South Carolina are respectfully urged to take immediate steps to meet with the Senators and Representatives from all other cotton States for the purpose of securing concerted action by the Congress for the relief of the cotton farmers and of the industry from the handicaps and barriers under which they and it now suffer in the marketing of cotton, domestic and foreign, and it is respectfully suggested that among the things they are called to advocate are the following:

(1) Legislation for the removal of statutory trade barriers, as far as possible, against our cotton trade, such as the modification or repeal of the Johnson Act, the enactment of legislation bringing about the equalization of transportation rates, the revision of the tariff to relieve discrimination against the cotton farmers, and other legislation; (2) the sale to and use by the Government for the manufacture of equipment and munitions of war of 6,000,000 bales of surplus cotton; (3) allocation to producers of cotton from the cotton being carried under Government loans a sufficient number of bales to pay them the balance due on 3 cents per pound subsidy authorized by national legislation effective on 1937 cotton crop and on which only 1.8 cents per pound had been paid; (4) increase the subsidy payment to the cotton producers by the further distribution of Government loan surplus cotton to 65 percent of parity prices on cotton during the crop years 1937, 1938, and 1939; (5) allocation or reapportionment of 4,000,000 bales of cotton being carried by the Commodity Credit Corporation to the cotton growers in lieu of their making an additional reduction of one-third or less in their cotton-acreage allotment for 1939, each farmer so additionally reducing his allotted cotton acreage to be allotted the amount of cotton he would have produced on this acreage based upon his average yield as allowed by the Government, and farmers so reducing to be paid the same soil-building and other amounts they would have been paid had they planted the full cotton acreage allotted by the Government for 1939; (6) selling to the Post Office Department 1,000,000 bales of cotton now being carried by the Government under loans, this cotton to be used to be manufactured into twines and other materials for use of the United States mail service, the Post Office Department to place this cotton through bids to be manufactured for their use; (7) to allocate or reapportion from the cotton being carried by the Government under the loans, 1,000,000 bales, to be manufactured into cotton bagging to be distributed to cotton farmers as an additional subsidy without charge for baling their 1939 cotton and cotton of subsequent years; (8) the allocation of cotton in point of time to comply with the time now required under the law for the sale thereof; (9) the retention of soil-conservation payments as now made pending the working out of a definite permanent plan for the future of cotton; (10) the pledging of the Government to a definite support of cotton production profitable to the cotton growers; (11) the protection of cotton growers, through a subsidy payment increasing the selling price to 65 percent of the parity price of cotton, so that they may successfully compete with foreign growers and regain lost export markets; (12) the granting to cotton growers of the privilege of planting other money crops than cotton on surplus lands resulting from reduction of cotton acreage, and not needed for production of feed and food crops for home consumption, without imposing a penalty against compliance payments as now done; (13) the immediate payment to cotton farmers of all amounts due for 1938 compliance, as was promised; (14) there is no one in the United States Department of Agriculture whose primary interest is the promotion of the welfare of the cotton farmer. To remedy this condition create an office of cotton commissioner in the United States Department of Agriculture. It should be the Commissioner's duty to develop new uses and markets for cotton and to represent producers of cotton in developing farm programs; (15) in addition to finances otherwise available, that a sufficient fund be appropriated from the general funds of the Treasury and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect this program here recommended and that funds for agriculture be raised in the same manner that funds are raised for other Government expenditures; (16) the formation in each House of Congress of a bloc to advocate measures for the protection, encouragement, and support of the cotton farmer, both now and in the future; be it further

Resolved, That the legislative bodies of the cotton States be urged to take immediate action to request from their Senators and Members of Congress similar cooperation and support of such actions and measures; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house do forthwith transmit copies of this resolution to the United States Senators and Members of Congress from this State, and to the legislative bodies of each of the following States, to wit: North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Arizona, New Mexico, California, Missouri, Kansas, Texas, and Tennessee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolution memorializing Congress to amend the National Housing Act amendments of 1938 to permit insuring of mortgages involving a principal obligation not to exceed $3,000, without requiring that the owner and occupant of the property shall have, at the time of issuing the insurance, paid on account of the property 10 percent of the appraised value thereof in cash or its equivalent

Whereas there are thousands of people in Oklahoma and in other States of the United States who have started on the road to home ownership because of the National Housing Act program of the Federal Government; and

Whereas there are yet multiplied thousands of people in Oklahoma and other States of the United States in the lower income brackets who desire to become home owners but whose income is required to meet everyday living expenses, and they are not, therefore, able to accumulate the necessary 10-percent down payment required under the present National Housing Act; and

Whereas if given an opportunity to start on the road to home ownership without being required to make the 10-percent down payment now required under the National Housing Act, these people would fulfill their obligations under a loan placing them in possession without a down payment and thereby be removed from the tenant and renting class to a substantial home-owning class; and

Whereas such would tend toward the establishment of a more stable citizenship among the lower income groups: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, That we request the Congress of the United States to amend the National Housing Act amendments of 1938 to permit insuring of mortgages involving a principal loan obligation not to exceed $3,000 without requiring that the owner and occupant of the property shall have at the time of issuing the insurance, paid on account of the property 10 percent of the appraised value thereof in cash or its equivalent; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to furnish each Member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress and the President of the United States with a copy of this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Resolution requesting and memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize sufficient appropriations to carry on the development of the water resources, flood control, drainage, soil erosion within the State of Oklahoma, and commending the Oklahoma delegation in Congress for their activities in behalf of such projects in this State, and commending the attitude of the President of the United States in his efforts to bring about such improvements, and commending the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army in solving the water-resources problems of this State

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Session of the Oklahoma Legislature, That it express the hope that all flood-control and water-resource development projects now approved by the Army engineers and adopted by the Congress of the United States as Federal projects, and which have been in the interest of the people of Oklahoma and have met widespread approval and are not controversial, be advanced to early completion and that sufficient appropriations be made therefor; be it further

Resolved, That we commend the efforts of the Oklahoma delegation in the United States Congress in their efforts to speed the development of our water resources program; be it further

Resolved, That we expressly commend the Members of the Oklahoma delegation in the United States Congress and the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army in solving the water-resources problems in this State in connection with the development of Grand River, Washita River, and their consideration of the development of Rush Creek, Kiamichi, Verdigris, Canadian, Cottonwood, and Poteau Rivers and their tributaries and all other rivers and tributaries thereto within this State, and urgently request that their efforts be directed toward the continuance of the necessary surveys and consideration of these problems within this State; be it further

Resolved, That we commend the attitude of the President of the United States in his efforts to bring about the aforesaid improvements of the water-resources problems of the various States of the Union; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately forwarded to the President of the United States, to the members of the Oklahoma delegation in the United States Congress, to the members of the Resources Committee of the Federal Government, and the proper officials of the engineering division of the United States Army; be it further

Resolved, That it is the express intent of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma that all projects referred to herein, or which may be hereafter considered, be rushed to completion at an early date, and Congress is hereby memorialized to direct their efforts and urgently requested to grant every consideration to the State of Oklahoma in this respect.

Mr. NYE presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

House Concurrent Resolution 114

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein):

Whereas the employment of women in paid work outside the home has increased materially in recent years; and

Whereas the home-keeping women going into commercial and industrial work was mentioned by the report of the Biggers Committee on National Unemployment as one of the causes of the unemployment problem; and

Whereas in 1940 the Federal Government will take a census of the United States; and

Whereas we all recognize the service rendered by the women of our homes in the building of character: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, the Senate concurring, hereby petition the Women's Bureau, under the Department of Labor, at Washington, to use its influence toward the securing of data on women employed outside the home as one of the objects of the 1940 census and thereupon to make a survey and a study of the problems of the home-keeping women, to find the reason for the tendency to leave home for commercial and industrial work and to make recommendations to reduce and, so far as possible, eliminate this tendency in modern living.

Mr. NYE also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Resolution F

Resolution memorializing Congress to enact necessary legislation and make the required appropriation to complete the Missouri River diversion project in North Dakota

Whereas surveys have been made of the Missouri River, and completed, the same being favorable for the diversion of such river; and Whereas considerable money has been expended in the making of such surveys, the engineers having made their reports thereof; and

Whereas a great deal of time and money have been expended in water conservation and flood control; and

Whereas it appears that the diversion of the Missouri River would be most advisable and beneficial to the people in the State of North Dakota: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, That we earnestly and emphatically recommend to the Congress of the United States, and request them, to enact necessary legislation and make the required appropriations to provide for the completion of the Missouri River diversion project in the State of North Dakota as soon as the same may possibly be done; be it further

Resolved, That we direct attention to the many benefits that will be generally provided for the people of the State of North Dakota, in addition to the water-conservation and flood-control benefits from such diversion; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of this assembly transmit a copy of this resolution to each of our Congressmen in both houses of the United States Congress, with the request that the matter be brought up for immediate attention.

Mr. NYE also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House Concurrent Resolution 83

Whereas President Roosevelt has asked Congress for an extensive appropriation which, if passed, will result in the employment of many additional W. P. A. workers and the expenditure of additional Federal funds in the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas there is pending in Congress an act to curtail W. P. A. activities, which act, if enacted into law, will result in the discharge of 2,600 W. P. A. employees in the State of North Dakota, and will mean a reduction of $150,000 per month of Federal money which would otherwise flow into North Dakota for relief workers; and

Whereas if the President's request for appropriation is denied and the act of Congress curtailing W. P. A. activities is passed, the people of North Dakota who are in desperate need of Federal assistance in maintaining their homes will suffer untold hardship: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That we memorialize Congress to make the full appropriation asked for by President Roosevelt for W. P. A. purposes, and that Congress do not enact into law any act curtailing W. P. A. activities; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to forward copies of this resolution to President Roosevelt, to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture, and to Col. F. C. Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. NYE also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House Resolution G

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota:

Whereas the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, requested of Congress an appropriation in the amount of $875,000,000 for relief for the needy and jobless through the Works Progress Administration; and

Whereas progressive-minded citizens and leaders in business, labor, and agriculture are supporting the President in this matter and have stated that it would be very unwise at this time to seriously curtail the work programs throughout the Nation; and

Whereas this legislative assembly does believe and has gone on record in the proper resolutions asking that our representatives in Washington do support the President in this matter; and

Whereas news reports indicate that the efforts of our President to aid the needy and jobless were frustrated when, in the United States Senate, by a majority of 1 vote, a slash of $150,000,000 was made; and

Whereas Representative WILLIAM LEMKE, from North Dakota, did vote against the wishes of the majority of the people of the State of North Dakota in an endeavor to obstruct the passage of said measure by the House of Representatives in Congress; and

Whereas the junior Senator from North Dakota, GERALD P. NYE, did vote against the President and against the wishes of the majority of the people of North Dakota as expressed in our resolution, and by his vote did defeat the high purpose of the President: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota do hereby severely criticize and condemn the actions of Representative WILLIAM LEMKE and Senator GERALD P. NYE as being detrimental to the best interests of the people of North Dakota.

Mr. NYE also presented the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 12

A concurrent resolution relating to the research by the Northern Federal Laboratory on production of power alcohol

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas it is apparent that the investigation and production of power alcohol from agricultural products is in its infancy, and whereas this field holds tremendous possibilities for the future in stabilizing farm income and increasing the demand for agricultural products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States, the United States Congress, and the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture be, and are hereby, urged and requested to make the research and investigation of the conversion of agricultural culms, wastes, and surplus into power alcohol a project on extremely active basis at the Northern Regional Laboratory to be established at Peoria, Ill.; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Member of Congress from North Dakota.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 24

Concurrent resolution urging the establishment of a Division of Cooperatives in the Department of Agriculture

Whereas the establishment and maintenance of cooperative organizations is of vital importance to the Nation, and affords a commendable solution of the serious problems involving the farmers, workers, and consumers; and

Whereas there is no Government agency dedicated to the principles of cooperation and pledged to the upbuilding of the cooperative movement, the present status being as follows:

In the Department of Agriculture the former Division of Cooperative Marketing has been shifted, first to the Federal Farm Board, and thence to the Farm Credit Administration, performing certain services for farmers' producing and marketing cooperatives; the Consumers' Counsel Division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration rendering assistance to consumers' cooperatives by supplying them with information and reporting progress in The Consumers Guide; and

In the Department of Labor the Bureau of Labor Statistics conducts surveys of consumers' cooperatives and issues publications on the subject; and

Whereas it is highly desirable to coordinate the work in cooperative buying and selling done in the several Government agencies, and to strengthen it in such a way that it will provide the maximum of service to farmers, workers, and consumers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we petition and urge the Congress of the United States to enact legislation and make the necessary appropriations to create and establish a Division of Cooperatives in the Department of Agriculture, having for its purpose the assembling, compiling, and maintaining of files of statistical data relating to the accomplishments of cooperative enterprises, the statutes of Congress, of the several States, and foreign countries affecting cooperatives, together with the coordinating of all duties and responsibilities toward cooperatives, now reposed in the various agencies of government; all to be used for the benefit and use of established cooperatives and new projects in process of organization, and further providing for the appointment of a Director, whose duty it shall be to render all personal and other assistance possible to such cooperatives, to make appropriations therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is instructed and directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Members of Congress of this State.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 42

Concurrent resolution for reestablishing and rehabilitating the foundation herds of livestock for the farmers and ranchers of the State of North Dakota

Whereas by reason of extreme drought conditions existing throughout the State of North Dakota during the past several years, the foundation herds of cattle and other livestock have been seriously depleted; and

Whereas the limited number of acres which can be planted to wheat under the Federal Crop Control Act, the land taken out of wheat production can, for the most part, only be planted to feed crops or used for grazing land; and

Whereas a return of the farmers of North Dakota to a condition of economic stability can only be accomplished by providing a source of such loans to farmers for the purpose of rehabilitating themselves by means of a restocking program; and

Whereas despite the many forms of loans now being made available to the distressed farmers of the United States through the various Federal loaning agencies no provision has been made by such agencies for loans to be used in reestablishing foundation herds of livestock; and

Whereas such loans must of necessity run over a considerable period of time and are in the nature of capital loans which the banks, State and national, are not permitted to make because of the length of time involved in the liquidation thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, That the serious drought conditions be called to the attention of all Federal agencies set up and now operating for the purpose of extending loans to distressed farmers, and that said agencies be urged to immediately make available to such farmers residing in the State of North Dakota, such loans as may be deemed advisable considering the condition and circumstances of each and such farmer, for the purpose of reestablishing foundation herds of livestock; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately transmitted to each such Federal loaning agency, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Dakota.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 44

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to make credit immediately available to finance wheat crop insurance

Whereas the act of Congress providing for wheat crop insurance is in force and effect, but a very large number of our farmers, by reason of crop failures and existing economic conditions, are unable to take advantage of such act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

(1) That Congress is hereby petitioned to pass such legislation as may be required to make the necessary credit immediately available to the wheat farmers of this country so that they will be able to take advantage of said act of Congress and to finance the wheat crop insurance provided for in such act.

(2) That copies of this resolution shall be sent to our United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of Agriculture.

House Concurrent Resolution 135

Concurrent resolution petitioning the United States Secretary of Agriculture to favorably interpret, or the Congress of the United States to amend, the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act

Whereas the State of North Dakota, by means of Federal land grants and through foreclosure or liquidation of real-estate mortgage loans, has acquired title to and now owns 19,439 tracts of agricultural lands comprising approximately 3,879,269.03 acres; and

Whereas it has in past years been the policy of the officers supervising and administering said lands to have same farmed and placed in compliance with the Federal Agricultural Adjustment Act; and

Whereas, because of drought, grasshopper infestation, and other damage to agricultural pursuits during past years, tenants farming the said lands have received considerable benefit by reason of same having been placed in the compliance with said Agricultural Adjustment Act; and

Whereas the 1938 amendment to the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act provides that beginning with the calendar year of 1939 no total payment for any year, to any person, shall exceed $10,000, except in the case of payments to any individual, partnership, or estate the said limitation shall apply to the total of the payments for each State, Territory, or possession, which limitation, under definitions formulated by the Department of Agriculture, has been interpreted to apply to a sovereign State, a political subdivision of a State, or any agency thereof; and

Whereas said definition of the term "person" by the Department of Agriculture seems unjustified by the language used in said act, and contrary to the usual and accepted meaning of said term when used in legislative enactments; and

Whereas the Federal Crop Insurance Act provides that insurance can be obtained only on lands which are farmed in compliance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and consequently, unless said act is defined and interpreted by the Department of Agriculture, or, if necessary, amended by the Congress, to permit all lands owned by a sovereign State, Territory, or possession to be placed in compliance and made eligible for benefit payments, the State of North Dakota and its tenants on 19,439 tracts of land will be denied an opportunity of taking advantage of said Federal crop-insurance benefits: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring):

1. That the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States is hereby petitioned to interpret the said $10,000 payment limitation provided for in said 1938 amendment to the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act as not applying to a sovereign State, any of its departments or agencies, or to a Territory or possession of the United States, and, if necessary, to accomplish said exemption of States, Territories, or possessions from said limitation, that the Congress of the United States is hereby petitioned to pass such legislation as may be required to provide for such exemption; and

2. That copies of this resolution shall be sent to the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture and to our United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Washington.

TAXATION OF MUNICIPAL BONDS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present and ask permission to have printed in the Record and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Commissioners of the City of Passaic, N. J., with respect to taxation on municipal bonds or other evidences of municipal indebtedness.

JANUARY 31, 1939.

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of the City of Passaic, N. J., does hereby express its opposition to any Federal legislation tending to remove or diminish the exemption from taxation now pertaining to municipal bonds or other evidence of indebtedness on the ground that to do so will add to the expense of municipal financing and so increase the burden of the already grievously overburdened taxpayers.

HENRY C. WHITEHEAD,
Director of Revenue and Finance.

Approved:

NICHOLAS MARTINI,
JOHN J. ROEGNER,
Z. A. VAN HOUTEN,
BENJ. F. TURNER,

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. VANDENBERG. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 63 and Senate Resolution 64, each of which seeks information regarding the Florida ship canal, one from the Department of the Interior and the other from the Department of Commerce. The committee recommends striking out the preambles.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] joins with me in asking for the immediate consideration of the resolutions, so that the inquiry may promptly get under way.

I first ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution No. 64.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan for the immediate consideration of the resolution referred to by him?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will yield to me to make a statement, I should like to say that, while I had a little different opinion as to procedure only, namely, that the committee rather than the Senate should request this information, I am in hearty accord with the desire to obtain the information, and I am sure the Senator from Michigan is in accord with me in wanting it to be expedited as much as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 64) submitted by Mr. VANDENBERG on January 19, 1939, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce is requested to survey its previous findings respecting the Florida ship canal and bring them down to date and to report thereon to the Senate at its earliest convenience.

The preamble was rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I now ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the other resolution reported by me. It is Senate Resolution No. 63.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 63), submitted by Mr. VANDENBERG on January 19, 1939, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the Senate at his earliest convenience the present opinion of the United States Geological Survey regarding the probable effect of the construction of the Florida canal, as reprojected, upon ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, while the statement just made by me applies also to the resolution now pending, I should like to add, merely for the information of the Senate, that the Commerce Committee yesterday agreed that the full committee would conduct public hearings at a date to be fixed at the next meeting of the committee upon the authorization bill, Senate bill 1100, introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was rejected.

AMENDMENT OF NAVY SELECTION LAW

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I introduce, for proper reference, a bill dealing with the present selection law governing promotions in the Navy, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be printed in the RECORD, together with an explanation thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee will be received, properly referred, and, together with the explanatory statement, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1255) to correct injustices resulting from faulty application of the Navy Selection Act of June 23, 1938, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, and retirement of officers of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes," as relates to the retirement or discharge of officers of the grade of lieutenant colonel, major, captain, and first lieutenant in the Marine Corps, as a result of having twice failed of selection under the provisions of that act, as affects those officers who will be retired or discharged on or before June 30, 1939, is hereby suspended.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a board of five officers, above the rank of commander in the Navy or lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps, none of whom shall have sat as a member of a selection board for the 2 years prior to July 1, 1939, and shall furnish this board with the records, except health records, of all officers now in the grade of lieutenant colonel, major, captain, and first lieutenant in the Marine Corps, who would be retired or discharged on or before June 30, 1939, as the result of the aforementioned act of June 23, 1938.

SEC. 3. The board appointed under the provisions of the preceding section shall meet within 1 month from the passage of this act, and shall carefully examine the records of those officers with which it shall have been furnished by the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the provisions of the preceding section. Within 15 days from the date of its initial meeting, it shall submit to the Secretary of the Navy the names of those officers, from the foregoing list, which it considers best fitted for promotion from the grades in which they may be then serving, to the next higher grade, not to exceed promotions to the number of 4 colonels, 8 lieutenant colonels, 16 majors, and 32 captains, respectively: Provided, That the board shall be governed, in selecting the officers for promotion as aforesaid, by an examination of the records of the officers concerned in their present grades, and shall recommend for promotion only those officers whose records in their present grades contain no matter unfavorable to them, being governed by no other consideration: And provided further, That the board shall, in addition, submit to the Secretary of the Navy, at the same time as the list of the officers recommended for promotion, a list of those officers not so recommended, with the reasons therefor, which reason or reasons in each case shall be supported by an extract or extracts from the record of the officers concerned, which shall be certified by the president of the board to be a true extract of the record of that officer in his current grade.

SEC. 4. The report of officers not recommended for promotion having been submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, he shall, without delay, notify each officer named therein of this fact, quoting the reasons given in the aforementioned report of the board, and shall permit the officer concerned to present himself in person before the board, to be examined by the board on any matter or matters appearing in his record which may be of a nature unfavorable to him, to be represented by counsel, and to have the right to examine any member of the board, or any other witness, with regard to his record in his current grade, or any part thereof: Provided, That the meeting of the board for the hearing of any officer not named on its original list of recommendations for promotion to the next higher grade shall take place only after a reasonable time, sufficient to allow all the officers concerned to present themselves at the place of meeting of the board: And provided further, That an officer, not recommended for promotion, who, being duly notified by the Secretary of the Navy of his right to appear in person, must, within 5 days after the receipt of such notification, notify the Secretary of the Navy in writing or by official dispatch of his desire to so appear, otherwise he will be assumed to have automatically forfeited his right to appear: And provided further, That no cost shall accrue to the United States, on account of travel of officers desiring to present themselves before the board, nor shall the time absent from their duties by such officers, on account of such appearance, be counted as other than leave of absence.

SEC. 5. The board shall proceed with a separate hearing of any officers who may have stated their desire to appear before it, under the provisions of the preceding section, and shall, within 5 days after the hearing of all such officers shall have been terminated, recommend to the Secretary of the Navy either that the list of recommendations as originally submitted be approved and forwarded to the President for nomination of the officers named therein to be promoted as set forth hereafter, or that the names of any or all officers whose cases the board has considered as a result of personal hearings be added thereto, and that the revised list be then submitted, as above, or that, in case addition of the number of officers recommended as a result of personal hearing to the original list will result in an excess over the number allowed by section 3, above, those officers who may be added as a result of hearing be retained in their current grades on the active list for a period of 1 year, or until such time as their eligibility for promotion shall have been again considered by a selection board, convened pursuant to the act approved June 23, 1938, above-mentioned: Provided, That no retirements or discharges under the provisions of the act of June 23, 1938, above-mentioned, shall be carried into effect until the President shall have approved the final action of the board appointed pursuant to section 2 of this act.

SEC. 6. Officers selected for promotion as a result of the action of the board appointed pursuant to section 2, above, shall be promoted as additional numbers in their respective grades. They shall take rank after the officer promoted as a result of the action of a selection board convened in obedience to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1938, whose name appears next above theirs on the lineal list established by publication of the Register of Commissioned and Warrant Officers of the United States Navy and Marine Corps, published by authority of the Navy Department under date of July 1, 1938: Provided, That the officers so selected shall be promoted subject to the laws governing physical and professional examination for promotion, and shall then be subject to all other laws governing officers on the active list of the Navy: And provided further, That no discrimination, as regards the character of duty to be assigned these officers, shall be made by reason of the fact that they are additional numbers in their respective grades.

SEC. 7. If the total number of officers selected and promoted as additional numbers, as above provided, shall be less than 60, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make recommendation to the President for the commissioning of such number of second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, as shall bring the total number of officers promoted as additional numbers, or retained as a result of the recommendation of the board appointed pursuant to the provisions of section 2, above, in accordance with the provisions of section 5, above, and officers newly appointed second lieutenants, to 60 officers: Provided, That the appointment of second lieutenants shall be in all respects in accordance with existing laws.

The statement presented by Mr. McKellar is as follows:

DISCUSSION, TOGETHER WITH CERTAIN REMARKS ON THE OPERATION OF THE PRESENT NAVY SELECTION LAW, AS APPLIED TO THE MARINE CORPS

The present Navy selection system is the result of a makeshift law, hurriedly thrown together by certain Members of last year's Congress, who realized that the operation of the selection law of May 29, 1934, was entirely unsatisfactory. The makers of the present law themselves realize, as well, that the present law has many defects, and have frequently so stated. While it may have partially fulfilled its purpose during the 2 years following its enactment, the law of 1934, and its successor, the present measure, have served to separate from the active list an overwhelming majority of officers of excellent attainments, good professional background, and considerable promise.

The officers so separated go to the retired list; they have an expectancy of life of from 15 to 30 years, during which time they will draw retired pay on which the United States gets no return. Their records of service have, for the most part, been above the average. It is believed that a comparison of the two lists of those officers who have been selected and of those who have been retired from having failed of selection will show that the records of one group are no better nor no worse than those of the other. This fact, once established, bears out the assumption that Marine Corps selection boards in the past 3 years have been actuated not by an impartial examination of officers' records, as they are required to do, but by prejudices formed by a casual knowledge of the officers under scrutiny, or by that insidious and entirely specious quality known as "service reputation", which may be composed of about one-tenth fact, the remainder being a sort of haphazard digest of rumors and opinions supplied alike by friends and enemies of the officer under consideration. It is, of course, well known that no person can go through a considerable period of his life without making some enemies, unless this person be of extremely negative character.

Moreover, selection boards in the Marine Corps have not been carrying out the wishes of Congress in another respect. According to the act of June 23, 1938, certain officers whose records would justify their promotion, but who, in the opinion of selection boards, did not possess the requisite personal characteristics for higher commands, were to be considered as "fitted," and promoted to the next higher grade, whence, after a given period of service, they were to be retired. Certain selection boards convened since the passage of this act have selected as fitted an extremely small proportion of those officers under consideration. This would indicate either—

That the records of these officers are much worse than would be generally believed;

That individual members of the board are bringing their personal prejudices into play;

That some directive, contrary to both the letter and spirit of the law, has been given selection boards by persons in authority in the headquarters of the corps or in the Navy Department; or

That a faulty interpretation of the law has emanated from the same source.

That the records of certain officers passed over are, in some cases, better than those of officers selected is definitely known. There is the case of one officer—his entire record is clear of any unfavorable matter; his reports of fitness have been either very good or excellent during his entire service; he has letters of commendation on his record almost continuously from the World War period until the present; he has occupied many positions of responsibility. An instance of this is furnished during the period of the withdrawal of the American forces from Haiti in 1934. At this time the colonel commanding the Second Marines, the only infantry regiment then in the island, and the second in command, were detached from duty in Haiti several weeks prior to the actual withdrawal, and the command of the regiment given to this officer, even though he was at that time only a captain. During the period in which he was serving as an instructor at the Marine Corps Schools he was allowed to take the advanced course at these schools, in addition to carrying on his duties as an instructor, and successfully completed this course, even though he was responsible for the preparation and presentation of more hours of instruction than any other officer in his particular group. He has been serving in his present detail for almost 3 years, although the normal tour of duty therein is only 2 years. A few days before the meeting of the last selection board which acted on his case an officer in headquarters informed him that the general officer having charge of his particular activity wished him to continue on his present duty through 1940.

This officer has recently been officially notified that, having failed of selection as best fitted for promotion, his separation from the active list will take place on July 1 next. In contrast to this there is the case of an officer recently selected who is known to have had at least two incidents in his history which do not reflect credit on him. While in command of a detached post in Santo Domingo certain members of his command got out of hand, got drunk, burned down several native houses, and beat a native so severely that he later died. Again, in 1935, while he was serving on duty with the Organized Reserves, he was relieved for unsatisfactory performance of duty and given a letter of reprimand and an unsatisfactory report of fitness. Both of these latter were later removed from his record, at the instance of one of his superiors, through invoking a technicality. It is, however, noteworthy that the duty from which this officer was relieved in 1935 is identically the same duty which the officer mentioned in the preceding paragraph—who has been passed over—is now performing, and in which his immediate superiors desire to have him continue. It is also noteworthy that the future of each of these two officers was decided by the same selection board.

There are other instances of officers with apparently excellent records being passed over. Their records, in detail, are not sufficiently well known, but it is significant to note that, among the officers passed over, one has a Navy Cross and a Distinguished Service Medal, two have Navy Crosses alone, and others have decorations or citations of different characters.

The proposed legislation to which this discussion is attached is not submitted with a view of correcting the evils of the selection system, as they have developed up to the present, but in order that the services of the officers who must leave the active list by July 1 will not be lost to the United States without first determining whether or not they have been dealt with arbitrarily and unjustly. There is little question of their worth to the service; that has been proven by the officers themselves, as shown in their records.

Under a scheme initiated during the session of the last Congress, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, is asking, or will ask, Congress to appropriate for the commissioning of 60 second lieutenants, in addition to the present authorized strength of officers in the Marine Corps. The complete plan, made known to last year's Congress, contemplates taking in this number for this and the succeeding 3 years, so that a total of 240 officers, in addition to the present authorized strength, will have been taken into the corps at the end of the period. All of these second lieutenants will be untried and uneducated. Before they can be of the same value to the Government as the officers who are being forcibly retired, they must serve from 12 to 20 years, during which time they must be paid, hospitalized, transported from place to place, and specially educated; the cost to the Government for their services and education will be something in excess of $100,000, as has been the cost of these officers who are now about to be retired. It is then apparent that, by retiring an officer of, say, the grade of major, whose services have been satisfactory, if not conspicuous, the Government is relinquishing its interest in an investment of this size, obligating itself to one equally large, and adding thereto a payment of from two thousand to twenty-five hundred dollars a year for the next 20 years in retired pay for each of the trained and efficient officers which it is placing on the shelf. It is normal to expect the officers shelved to live not less than 20 years longer.

Examining the proposed legislation in detail, it will be seen that section 1 thereof provides for the suspension of the retirement provision of the act of June 23, 1938, as regards the officers who must retire at the end of the current fiscal year.

Section 2 provides for the appointment of a board of five officers, either of the Navy or Marine Corps, who shall be of the grade of captain in the Navy or colonel in the Marine Corps, or higher. None of these officers shall have served as a member of a selection board for the past 2 years, and can therefore be expected to approach the problem with entirely open minds. The section also provides that the records of the officers due to be separated from the active list shall be furnished the board so appointed. Health records are excepted, as the officers under consideration have all been examined physically for the current year and have been pronounced fit for the performance of their duties.

Section 3 provides that the board shall meet within 1 month from the enactment of the proposed measure, and that it shall carefully examine the records of the officers concerned, and as a result of the examination of these records shall recommend the promotion of those officers among the group whose records, in the grades in which they are now serving, are clear of any unfavorable matter. This phrase "unfavorable matter" has a definite meaning in the military or naval service. It embraces evidence of conviction of the individual concerned by a general court martial; record of proceedings of an investigation or court of inquiry, wherein the individual has been named as a defendant, or wherein evidence has been adduced to show improper conduct of any sort by the individual; a letter of official reprimand; a report of fitness wherein any of the markings are lower than satisfactory; or a report wherein the reporting senior has, by his remarks, indicated that the performance of duty by the individual has not been, in some respect, up to the minimum standards for officers of his grade; or a letter calling the attention of the individual to his negligence in discharging financial obligations, or inattention to other matters which may affect the good name of the service. Any item of unfavorable matter is clearly recognized by anyone examining an officer's record. This section also specifically provides that the only consideration by which the board shall be guided is the excellence of an officer's record; it contemplates that the board shall not exercise its discretion, nor shall it be guided by such nebulous factors as "service reputation," referred to previously. It further provides that, in the case of officers not recommended for promotion, the board shall substantiate its recommendations with certified extracts from the records of the officers concerned.

The number of officers to be recommended for promotion in the respective grades is the same proportion as to grades for officers in the Marine Corps at present. It will be noted that the total maximum number to be promoted is 60, which is the number of second lieutenants the Major General Commandant contemplates adding to the officer strength of the Marine Corps for the current year.

Section 4 provides for recourse by officers not recommended by the board, and provides final assurance that there shall be no taint of "star chamber" proceedings attached to the process of their selection or nonselection for promotion. This consists, briefly, in permitting the officer to be present at a second hearing of the board, to be personally examined, to be represented by counsel, and to have the privilege of questioning individual members of the board as to his fitness for promotion.

Section 5 continues the provisions for a hearing allowed officers not favorably reported on in the original meeting of the board, and provides that, on final approval by the President, those officers not recommended by the board for promotion or retention shall be retired or discharged pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1938.

Section 6 provides that the officers selected for promotion as a result of the action of the board mentioned in section 2 shall be promoted as additional numbers in grade. By this provision the officers who may have benefited by the action of previous selection boards will not be placed at a disadvantage, and the services of those worthy officers who have heretofore suffered by selection-board action will be saved to the United States.

Section 7 provides for the commissioning as second lieutenants of a sufficient number to bring the total number of officers promoted as extra numbers or otherwise retained under the provisions of the proposed legislation, plus newly commissioned second lieutenants, to 60 officers.

REDUCTION AND LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow it to be read in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) authorizing the President of the United States to call an international conference to formulate measures for the reduction and limitation of armaments was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the increase in world armaments is causing deep concern among the people of all nations, and is regarded by them as provocative of international conflicts; and

Whereas such increase imposes heavy burdens of taxation upon the people and every form of industry and interrupts trade and commerce among nations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite the governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations to appoint representatives to a conference to be held in the city of Washington, which shall be charged with the consideration of the causes and purposes of present military and naval expenditures, and with the formulation of measures by which armaments of war, either upon land or sea or air, shall be effectually reduced and limited in the interest of world peace and the relief of all nations from the burdens of inordinate and unnecessary expenditures for armaments.

Sec. 2. Resolved, That it is the sense of the Congress, in case an understanding is reached at such conference, that it will conform its appropriations for military and naval purposes, including building plans, to the terms of such understanding.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it had been my purpose upon the introduction of this joint resolution to submit some remarks, but, in view of the fact that the Temporary National Economic Committee, of which I am a member, is in session, I shall pretermit any observations at this time. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and give notice that at an early date I shall speak in support of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ADMISSION OF GERMAN REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. WAGNER. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it may be properly referred and printed in the RECORD, together with an explanatory statement and a statement by a number of distinguished clergymen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from New York will be received, properly referred, and, together with the statements referred to, printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 64) to authorize the admission into the United States of a limited number of German refugee children was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is now in progress a world-wide effort to facilitate the emigration from Germany of men, women, and children of every race and creed suffering from conditions which compel them to seek refuge in other lands; and

Whereas the most pitiful and helpless sufferers are children of tender years; and

Whereas the admission into the United States of a limited number of these children can be accomplished without any danger of their becoming public charges, or dislocating American industry or displacing American labor; and

Whereas such action by the United States would constitute the most immediate and practical contribution by our liberty-loving people to the cause of human freedom, to which we are inseparably bound by our institutions, our history, and our profoundest sentiments: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That not more than 10,000 immigration visas may be issued during each of the calendar years 1939 and 1940, in addition to those authorized by existing law and notwithstanding any provisions of law regarding priorities or preferences, for the admission into the United States of children 14 years of age or under, who reside, or at any time since January 1, 1933, have resided, in any territory now incorporated in Germany, and who are otherwise eligible: Provided, That satisfactory assurances are given that such children will be supported and properly cared for through the voluntary action of responsible citizens or responsible private organizations of the United States, and consequently will not become public charges.

The statements presented by Mr. WAGNER are as follows:

The joint resolution I have just introduced authorizes the admission into the United States of 10,000 German refugee children of every race and creed, during each of the calendar years 1939 and 1940.

Millions of innocent and defenseless men, women, and children in Germany today, of every race and creed, are suffering from conditions which compel them to seek refuge in other lands. Our hearts go out especially to the children of tender years, who are the most pitiful and helpless sufferers. The admission of a limited number of these children into the United States would release them from the prospect of a life without hope and without recourse, and enable them to grow up in an environment where the human spirit may survive and prosper.

This resolution does not suspend existing quota restrictions on the immigration of adults. It merely authorizes the admission during a limited period of a limited number of refugee children, 14 years of age or under. This could readily be accomplished without their becoming public charges and without any danger of dislocating American industry or displacing American labor.

Their admission would be predicated on satisfactory and voluntary undertakings by responsible American citizens or private organizations that adequate provision would be made for their maintenance and care in homes of their own faiths.

Thousands of American families have already expressed their willingness to take refugee children into their homes. Recently 49 of the outstanding Catholic and Protestant prelates of the United States, including His Eminence Cardinal Mundelein, joined in a statement urging our people to join together without regard to race, religion or creed in offering refuge to children as a token of our sympathy and as a symbol of our faith in the ideals of human brotherhood. Both branches of the labor movement have now joined in expressing sympathy for this objective.

Such action by the United States would follow the precedent of England and Holland, which have given sanctuary to many of these unfortunate victims of persecution. It would constitute our most immediate and practical contribution to the cause of human freedom, to which we are inseparably bound by our institutions, our history, and our profoundest sentiments. I have every confidence that there will be prompt and wholehearted response throughout the country to this noble cause, whereby the American people will give expression to their innermost cravings for liberty, justice, and international peace.

A STATEMENT BY PROTESTANT AND CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN OF AMERICA JANUARY 10, 1939.

The American people have made clear their reaction to the oppression of all minority groups, religious and racial, throughout Germany. They have been especially moved by the plight of the children. Every heart has been touched, and the nation has spoken out its sorrow and dismay through the voices of its statesmen, teachers, and religious leaders. Americans have felt that protest, however vigorous, and sympathy, however deep, are not enough, and that these must translate themselves into such action as shall justify faith.

We have been stirred by the knowledge that Holland and England have opened their doors and homes to many of these children. We conceive it to be our duty, in the name of the American tradition and the religious spirit common to our Nation, to urge the people, by its Congress and Executive, to express sympathy through special treatment of the young robbed of country, homes, and parents. A heartening token of the mood of America is to be found in the fact that thousands of Americans of all faiths have made known their eagerness to take these young children into their homes without burden or obligation to the State.

Working within and under the laws of Congress, through special enactment if necessary, the Nation can offer sanctuary to a part of these children by united expression of its will to help.

To us it seems that the duty of Americans in dealing with the youthful victims of a regime which punishes innocent and tender children as if they were offenders is to remember the monition of Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." And in that spirit we call on all Americans to join together, without regard to race, religion, or creed, in offering refuge to children as a token of our sympathy and as a symbol of our faith in the ideals of human brotherhood.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3743) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on January 4, 1939, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] introduced a bill dealing with the crime of homicide within the District of Columbia. I think, inadvertently, the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It ought to have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I therefore move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 186) to amend section 798 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MURRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, 1939, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place to insert the following:

"WATER-CONSERVATION AND UTILITY PROJECTS

"For construction, in addition to labor and materials to be supplied by the Works Progress Administration, of water-conservation and utilization projects, including acquisition of water rights, rights-of-way, and other interests in land, in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, fiscal year 1940, to be immediately available, $5,000,000, to be allocated by the President in such amounts as he deems necessary, to such Federal departments, establishments, and other agencies as he may designate, and to be reimbursed to the United States by the water users on such projects in not to exceed 40 annual installments: Provided, That expenditures from Works Progress Administration funds shall be subject to such provisions with respect to reimbursability as the President may determine."

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION RELATING TO ORGANIZATION OF THE COURTS, ETC.

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 164, agreed to August 6, 1937, authorizing a special committee of the Committee on the Judiciary, during the Seventy-fifth Congress, to make an investigation of all matters relating to the reorganization of the courts of the United States, the appointment of additional judges, and the reform of judicial procedure, hereby is continued in full force and effect for the same purposes during the Seventy-sixth Congress.

INVESTIGATION OF FRAUDULENT TIMBER LAND PATENTS IN WASHINGTON

Mr. GURNEY (by request) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 76), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the fraudulent issuance of patents to timber lands in the western part of the State of Washington and the legality of the Hyde-Benson lien land scrip issued in connection therewith. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

CONNECTICUT RIVER AS EAST HARTFORD, CONN. (S. DOC. NO. 32)

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated January 11, 1939, from the Chief of Engineers of the Army, on a reexamination of the Connecticut River at East Hartford, Conn., together with the accompanying papers and illustrations, may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE ACT

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, a few days ago the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] introduced, by request, Senate bill 1028 to amend the Philippine Independence Act of March 24, 1934, and various other acts of Congress.

The avowed purposes of the amendments are:

(a) To correct the "imperfections or inequalities" in the Independence Act; and

(b) To formulate a program of economic relations between the United States and the Philippines to function from 1946 through to the end of 1960.

In fact, I fear, if passed, it may multiply and aggravate the imperfections and the inequalities of the Independence Act, thus leaving Congress to grapple in the future with greater problems and more complexities.

Therefore I am proposing for consideration a substitute program which is much simpler and more equitable to all concerned. This program is: Repeal in this Congress the export-tax provision of the independence act, which, if not repealed, will go into effect next year, and let the rest of the act stand as it is.

The proponents of the bill, especially those whose knowledge of its contents is based mostly on abbreviated press reports, will allege in its defense that it generously gives the Philippines a period of about 14 years from 1946, the year of political independence, to prepare for the transitional adjustment of the Philippine national economy from the tariff-protected status to the position independent of trade preferences in the United States.

My criticism—and I want to make it as clear and emphatic as possible—is that the bill does not legally commit the United States to conclude an agreement but only sets forth a plan of economic relations for the period 1946–60. Under the wording of the provision it cannot bind the President or the Government of the United States to put the plan actually into execution.

I desire to focus attention upon that provision, for it is the very heart of the new Philippine program. It gives the President of the United States only permissive, not mandatory, authority to enter into an "executive agreement" with the President of the Philippines, incorporating that program therein, and such agreement if entered into, is revocable on only 6 months' notice.

It is obvious, therefore, that under the bill there is no certainty that an agreement will be negotiated at all in 1946. Everything would depend on who at that time might be President, and on his policies, the policies of his political party and the conditions then prevailing. Thus the provision would give the Philippines no stability whatsoever. It would defeat the avowed purposes of the amendments.

A treaty, as the Joint Preparatory Committee on Insular Affairs has so wisely recommended, though the recommendation has not been adopted by the person who drafted the bill, would be reassuring and binding if the negotiation of such treaty were legally possible.

I consider the point concerning the instability and unreliability of the executive agreement so far-reaching in significance and so fundamentally harmful to the Philippines as to constitute full justification for those who favor the bill before knowing of that provision to reverse themselves and be opponents of the measure.

Whatever may be the action of Congress on the pending bill—S. 1028—I wish to express my appreciation of the able report which the Joint Preparatory Committee has rendered.

This report and the able and comprehensive study of the United States Tariff Commission a year before constitute the best source today of Philippine information. I urge every Member of Congress to read these valuable documents at their earliest opportunity. They are models of clarity, completeness, and attractive exposition.

I must stress the fact that, if I differ with the committee, it is due to the firm opinion that its treatment of the Philippines is not sufficiently liberal.

Having dealt with the Philippine question for over 25 years, I am pleased to note that our Government is now better acquainted factually with Philippine conditions and the treatment of that question is now less inconsistent, less emotional, and less partisan.

I am also pleased to observe that our international position in the western Pacific is being strengthened and better defined. We are a Pacific power with pacific intentions.

President Roosevelt is displaying a sustained and sympathetic interest in the Philippines and a broad-minded appreciation of our international position in the Far East. Our High Commissioner at Manila, Mr. McNutt, is a great force for good in Philippine-American affairs. President Quezon is showing a cooperative spirit with our Government and is tackling his job with ability and high-mindedness. And Vice President Sergio Osmena and Resident Commissioner JOAQUIN M. ELIZALDE are working hard for their country in Washington.

There is no country on earth today that has a better reason to be happy and contented than the Philippines. Let us make haste slowly in legislating for them lest we disturb their peace and curtail their prosperity.

My sole purpose in these explanatory remarks is to be helpful to both the American and the Filipino people. I will support any measure that gives the Filipinos a square deal and which has their approval, as well as the approval of our people.

SILVER PROGRAM

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would like to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point, and appropriately referred, some information bearing on my position with regard to my Senate Joint Resolution 1, which calls for a public investigation by Congress of the silver program as well as in connection with my bill (S. 785) to repeal the Silver Purchase Act. On February 7, at a meeting of the Senate Special Silver Committee, which, unavoidably, I was unable to attend, the chairman of that committee very graciously undertook to interrogate the Secretary of the Treasury on my behalf. To make my position perfectly clear, however, I desire the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to carry the text of my letter of February 7 to the chairman of the committee just mentioned.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1939.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Chairman, Senate Special Silver Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Unfortunately, important business prevented my attending this morning's meeting of the Senate Special Silver Committee, at which the Secretary of the Treasury testified.

I understand that in that meeting you made reference to my silver resolution—Senate Joint Resolution 1—and stated that you thought that when I introduced the resolution last month I was not aware of the existence of the Senate Special Silver Committee. It happens that I was aware of that committee's existence at the time I introduced the resolution, and I would very much appreciate your inserting as an appendix to the record of this morning's hearing the text of Senate Joint Resolution 1, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, as well as the text of this letter.

I have also been informed that in this morning's hearing you made reference to a release of mine dated January 20, 1939, and made public for use in the newspapers of January 23, 1939. The title of this release, as I understand was this morning correctly stated by you, was "Reply to Inquiries of Correspondents Regarding Silver Purchase Repeal (S. 785)." I am told that when you interrogated the Secretary of the Treasury today you read to him various questions which appear in the release just mentioned, but that you did not read to him my answers to those questions, which answers were given in the same release. For the fuller information of those who may read the record of this morning's hearing I would appreciate that your making sure there is included in that record the full text of my January 23 release, and for that purpose I enclose a copy with this letter.

At the same time I would like to have inserted in the published hearings for the information of your committee and any other interested parties the following items, a copy of each of which is herewith enclosed:

1. A press release dated January 4, 1939, and entitled "Investigation of Silver Program."
2. A press release dated January 17, 1939, and entitled "Bill for Sale of Silver."
3. An extension of my remarks on the floor of the Senate January 19, 1939, and entitled "Investigation of the Silver Program, Excerpts From Letters."
4. An extension of my remarks on the floor of the Senate January 23, 1939, entitled "Silver Purchases, Excerpts From Additional Letters Concerning Senate Joint Resolution 1, for Suspension of Silver Purchases Pending Inquiry by Congress."
5. An extension of my remarks on the floor of the Senate February 1, 1939, and entitled "Silver Purchases, Statement by Hon. JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., of Delaware."
6. An extension of my remarks on the floor of the Senate February 2, 1939, entitled "Editorial Opinion on Silver."
7. A release published by me today entitled "Analysis of Arguments for Silver Subsidy Is Made by Senator TOWNSEND."

Very truly yours,

JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.

ANALYSIS OF ARGUMENTS FOR SILVER SUBSIDY IS MADE BY SENATOR TOWNSEND

FEBRUARY 7, 1939.

Senator JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr., of Delaware, today released the text of a letter on silver which was written to him by a Nevada mine superintendent, and his reply thereto. In his reply the Senator again calls attention to his Senate Joint Resolution 1, introduced to secure a public congressional investigation of silver, and his bill (S. 785) for repeal of silver-purchase legislation and authority.

In his letter to the Nevada mining superintendent, Senator TOWNSEND states that he is opposed to all Government silver purchases so long as the Treasury holds stocks of unused and unneeded metal. He defends his proposal to vest in the Treasury the discretionary power to sell silver as opportunity presents, and adverts to the highly fictitious value placed by law and Treasury policy on the present vast silver holdings of the Government.

Both the Senator and his Nevada correspondent agree that the purchase of any foreign silver by the Treasury is indefensible.

The Senator points out in his letter that a subsidy to the Delaware rayon industry to supply a substitute for the silk threads which now distinguish American paper currency would be just as logical as continuing the subsidy to the domestic-mining industry, both on monetary and on nonmonetary work-relief grounds. But, Senator TOWNSEND adds, he makes no demand for any such subsidy.

The text of the correspondence follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 6, 1939.

Mr. JOHN L. DYNAN,
Superintendent, Tonopah Belmont Development Co.,
Tonopah, Nev.

DEAR Mr. DYNAN: I thank you sincerely for your thoughtful letter of February 2, setting forth your ideas as to what our future national policy toward silver should be. Your letter was especially interesting to me because of its factual nature and temperate tone. So many public discussions of silver are on an emotional rather than a rational basis. I shall discuss the various points in your letter in the order in which you state them.

(1) I am gratified that you and I are in agreement as to the waste involved to this Nation in the purchase of foreign silver.

(2) With reference to the sale of some of our surplus silver by the Treasury, as opportunity presents, this feature of my bill (S. 785) vests complete discretion with the Treasury to so conduct its sales as not to wreck any American industry.

(3) You think that Treasury sales of silver bullion would "practically destroy the value of the silver stock which it is sought to get rid of." While I will agree that reversal of our silver policy will be reflected in a decline in the open-market price of silver, I think you and I differ in our concept of the "value" of our present silver stock.

Our present monetary stock of silver consists of portions differently valued, as follows:

(a) A portion in use as backing for silver certificates or circulating in the form of standard silver dollars. This portion is officially valued at the statutory monetary value of silver, approximately $1.29 per ounce. I am sure you will admit that the true economic value of said portion of our silver stocks is very much less than its monetary value of $1.29 per ounce.

(b) A portion in use as subsidiary coin, or held in the form of worn subsidiary silver coin. This silver has a monetary value of about $1.38 per ounce, and is so carried on the Treasury books. This silver, like portion (a), is greatly overvalued.

(c) A portion described in the daily statement of the Treasury as "silver bullion at cost value." Some of this portion is valued at considerably above the present world market price of silver bullion, and some at the existing world market price of approximately 43 cents per ounce. As to the former, it is clearly overvalued on the Treasury books. As to the latter, that subportion valued at 43 cents per ounce, I know that, as the fair-minded person your letter reveals you to be, you will admit that it is worth less than 43 cents.

I think you would also admit, what many persons familiar with silver have admitted, that even mere cessation of United States Government purchases of silver would be followed by a decline in the open-market price of the metal to considerably below 43 cents per ounce. See, for example, the article of a well-known mining engineer, Mr. Percy E. Barbour, in the New York Sun of January 7, 1939.

It follows that our silver stock has a real value of only a fraction of its commonly supposed value.

But, quite apart from its market value now or in the future, this silver—now owned by all the people of the United States—is for the most part entirely unneeded and much of it is also actually sterile and unused. From this particular standpoint, that silver has no value to the American people, and will not have until it is sold by the Government. To the extent that some of it can be sold by the Government, gradually, for industrial use or for exportation, the proceeds of the sales can be applied to reduce the public debt and thus be of some specific service to the American people. You are of course aware that no less than 40 percent of our national stock of silver bullion, by weight, has been resting idle in the Treasury and has not been employed by it as backing for silver certificates. Over 1,000,000,000 ounces of silver is held thus sterile, because it is not needed for monetary use, and is unwanted for public circulation.

(4) You state that "silver miners are not numerous . . . so their voices may not be heard." While I have no doubt at all that some silver miners really believe that to be the situation, it seems to me incredible that any intelligent person could hold that view after examining the facts. The number of pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of recent years filled by representatives in Congress of the silver-producing States certainly is clear proof that silver miners can and do make their voices heard among their Senators and Congressmen. Seven States produce more than nine-tenths of this country's mine output of silver. These 7 States are represented in Washington by 14 Senators, or about one-seventh of the membership of that body. Among these Senators, many of whom are exceedingly able and experienced in making themselves heard in national affairs, are some who occupy high positions in the Senate and its various influential committees. If the silver miners were really weak of voice, would this country ever have enacted the present silver program? And if the relatively few persons interested in silver mining in 1932 and 1933 were able to make their voices heard so clearly in that period, how much more so must that be true today, when the payment to the domestic industry of a bonus of 50 percent above the already artificial world price of silver has swelled the number of American miners profiting from silver?

(5) Your point about tariffs is valid only on the assumption that the silver subsidy, like import duties on goods, is needed to protect a necessary home industry. On this point in your letter I cannot go with you. I do not think of silver as a commodity the production of which, in view of our colossal national hoard of it, is necessary. Silver was a worth-while American product in the days when we could export it to China and receive more useful products in exchange. But our present silver program has killed off the Chinese demand, and hence the exportation of silver is practically impossible for us. But if there be any export possibility for the metal, surely the present publicly owned surplus stocks should have precedence over silver still in underground ore.

(6) You make the point that silver is produced with other non-ferrous metals and that the silver subsidy often means the difference between operating a mine or shutting it down. While admitting this, I would also point out two things:

(a) Often, also, the condition you describe is not the case.

(b) A subsidy to silver does not seem to be a desirable way for the Nation to determine its output of copper, lead, zinc, gold, etc. The argument you make would be equally efficacious if applied to lead or zinc. Moreover, when business is bad and demand for lead, copper, or zinc is reduced, the prices of such metals tend to decline. If at such times a silver subsidy makes it possible to keep in operation mines producing lead, copper, or zinc, the market for those metals will tend to be only still further depressed, due to the silver subsidy. Such an argument as you present for a continued silver subsidy, therefore, seems to me unscientific and unconvincing.

(7) You state that the benefits of a silver subsidy are not "very local," but, through the purchases of machinery and supplies, are spread over the land. Not only have I admitted publicly that the silver subsidy to the American domestic mining industry is not local in its benefits; I have made a point of it. This argument which you advance for a domestic silver subsidy would be just as logical applied to any other American commodity. For example, a product in which my State is interested is rayon. If the Government bought rayon and so subsidized the chemical industry, the benefits would not be confined to Delaware, but, through purchases of the industries and the people of Delaware, they would be spread over the whole country. The Government might then store its stocks of rayon, not depress the market by selling them, and put some of it to monetary use in place of the real silk threads which now characterize our paper currency. This sort of subsidy would be just as logical as a subsidy to the production of more silver, but I do not advocate it.

For these reasons I do not concede this point and therefore do not agree that "the question then is how far the Government is justified in going to hold up the price of silver."

(8) Your next point is that hundreds of millions of dollars of American wealth are not being spent solely as a subsidy to a few silver miners. Since I have not so stated, I am sure your point has no reference to me. Since we are both agreed as to the wisdom of not buying any more foreign silver, our only point of disagreement on this seems to be on the matter of the portion of the subsidy now going to American miners and mine owners, and on this point I have just given you my views above.

(9) You state that in the West people like to hear the jingle of silver dollars. I agree with you, but your point seems to me really inconsequential for two reasons:

(a) The number of standard silver dollars outstanding has been declining in recent years and paper money increasing, even in the West. In 1913 there were 72,000,000 standard silver dollars in circulation. In 1929 there were about 44,000,000, and in 1938, only 39,000,000 in circulation or lost.

(b) Only an inconsequential portion of our national silver hoard is so used by people who like the heavy coins. The 39,000,000 standard silver dollars represent only about 30,000,000 ounces of silver. Our national stock of silver, including inactive bullion and metal in use, totals about 2,500,000,000 ounces. If all the standard silver dollars in circulation wore out within a year, our silver hoard is now sufficient to replace them in equal amount every year until the year 2022 A. D.

(10) I am glad to note that you favor an embargo on imports of foreign silver. This is another provision of my bill S. 785.

(11) You state there is no alternative to the destruction of a large part of the mining industry, except for the Government to continue taking the output of the American mines at a price not below the present figure of 64.64 cents per ounce. You offer no evidence at all to support your phrase, "a large part of the mining industry." I can supply you with very impressive evidence to the contrary.

In view of what I have stated above, you will realize that I disagree not only with your premise, but also with your conclusion. Why do you make this statement contingent upon a price of just 64.64 cents? Why not 50 cents, $1.29, or any other subsidy level? And why 5 years, not 10 or 25? This point in your letter is quite unsupported by any facts you have supplied or any facts which my own study of silver has uncovered.

(12) Your suggested program contains three features. From what has been stated above I have made clear that I am in complete accord with the provision which you have numbered "1", in complete disaccord with that numbered "2", and in agreement with the principle of Treasury sales of silver now held by it, but without the restriction on the price thereof which you would make in your provision "3."

(13) I share with you the "hope that Congress will give serious study to this matter," and to this end I have introduced my Senate Joint Resolution 1, a copy of which I enclose.

Very truly yours,

JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.

TONOPAH BELMONT DEVELOPMENT CO.,
Tonopah, Nev., February 2, 1939.

HON. JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I notice that you have introduced a bill directing the Treasury to sell silver stocks, and regulating other phases of the silver problem.

I am writing to give you some of the viewpoints of a silver producer. I know of no American silver producer who is an advocate of the huge expenditures which have been made to purchase silver from foreign countries. I am in complete agreement with you that this has been a waste of public money. I cannot imagine any American producer of anything viewing with favor the building up by purchases from foreign countries of a huge stock of his product to be used perhaps some day to utterly destroy his market. This is what will now happen to American silver producers if the Treasury starts selling silver. It seems to me this policy will not only ruin an American industry but will also practically destroy the value of the silver stock which it is sought to get rid of. Silver miners are not numerous by comparison with many other occupations, so their voices may not be heard, but you can imagine the howl that would go up if the Government were to start throwing its cotton stocks on the market.

We are not monetary experts out here, but can see nothing wrong in the principle of the American silver producer getting a better price than the world price, which is determined by production in foreign countries employing peon labor. The same principle has been in effect for years, through tariff protection, on most of the products of the East and the Middle West. We cheerfully pay more for tariff-protected machinery, steel rails and pipe, drill steel, mine timbers, chemicals, explosives, foodstuffs, and living necessities for the mine workers, and many other things used in the mining districts. We believe we are likewise entitled to a price for our product better than that for which it can be bought in foreign cheap-labor countries.

The relatively small number of silver mines is often used as an argument against any Government aid to silver. It is true there are not many mines which are strictly silver mines producing that metal alone. Most mines producing gold, lead, copper, zinc, and other metals have a small silver content in their ores. The price received for this silver often means the difference between operating a mine or shutting it down and throwing its employees out of work. This is especially true since other metal prices have been reduced by importations from abroad under reciprocal-trade treaties. Modern-day mining is usually conducted on a very small per-ton margin of profit and requires large capital investment. The days of rich bonanzas easily found and worked by a few individuals, are over.

It is often argued also that the benefits from silver purchases are very local. This will not hold up under analysis. The mines are almost always in desert or mountain country. They and their workers produce nothing that they consume. All foodstuffs and living necessities are brought in, providing work for producers of those commodities. Ores, concentrates, and bullion are shipped to distant smelters and refineries. The mines use large quantities of supplies, such as lumber from Oregon, steel rails, pipe, drill steel, and hardware from Pennsylvania, cyanide and carbide from Niagara Falls, chemicals and explosives, fuel and lubricating oils and gasoline, rubber hoses and belts, all brought in from distant points. The machinery used in mining is nearly all of eastern make. There are motors and electrical goods, compressors and rock drills, hoists, crushing and grinding machinery and their steel wearing parts, and many others. The moving of all these articles makes business for railroads, truck lines, and steamship companies.

I have tried to present facts showing that the benefits of a fair price for silver are not merely local and confined to a few mine owners, but are widespread and extend to almost all parts of this country. If you are willing to concede this then the question is how far the Government is justified in going to hold up the price of silver.

There has been much loose talk about hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars being spent as a subsidy to a few silver miners. It is true that an enormous sum has been spent for foreign silver. I do not see how any of this is properly chargeable as a subsidy to the American miner. Much of it came out of hoards in the Orient, from sources that normally buy American silver, rather than throw their own hoarded silver into competition with it. According to the Bureau of Mines, the United States produced in 1937 about 70,000,000 ounces of silver. The price then was 77.57 cents per ounce. For 1938 the United States production is estimated at 61,000,000 ounces, at the price of 64.64 cents per ounce. During the same period, more than 6 ounces of foreign silver were bought by the Treasury for each ounce bought from American mines.

It is also argued that people do not like to use and will not have silver dollars. I know that this is true in the East. In the West the reverse is true, as people dislike dollar bills as much as easterners do the silver dollars. We like to hear the jingle of the dollars, as we used to like that of 10- and 20-dollar gold pieces before it was a crime to have one.

I do not wish to have all this construed as an argument for the present silver situation. As I said before, no American silver producers that I know of favor the huge purchases from foreign sources. However, the deed has been done, and our former best customers for silver, India and China, have been changed to sellers. The United States Government has become practically the only purchaser. I do not think it is fair now to ruin an American industry because of this situation that has been created by buying foreign silver and destroying what was our best market.

The question now is what to do about it. For one thing, I think purchases from foreign sources should stop at once, and an embargo be placed on further imports. To start selling the huge stock on hand would, I think, be futile. There is no purchaser for it, and such attempted selling would destroy the value of the Treasury's stock, as well as ruin a large part of the mining industry. I am not an inflationist, and do not favor schemes for declaring this huge stock of silver as money at a value far above the price paid for it. However, in view of the situation that has already been created there is no alternative to the destruction of a large part of the mining industry, except for the Government to continue taking the output of the American mines, at a price not below the present figure of 64.64 cents per ounce. I would suggest that some such price be stabilized for a period of not less than 5 years. No industry can continue when it is faced every year or every 6 months with the threat of total destruction of its market.

I suggest for your consideration therefore the following program:

1. Complete stoppage of all silver purchases from foreign countries and an embargo on silver imports.
2. Purchase by the Treasury for the next 5 years of all newly-mined silver from American mines, at a price not less than 64.64 cents per ounce. The silver so purchased to be coined into dollars and subsidiary coins and put in circulation. It is admitted this is mildly inflationary, but is strictly limited since production will probably not much exceed 60,000,000 ounces per year. It surely compares favorably with the present method of inflation by creating bank deposits against Government bonds, with no metallic or tangible reserve of any sort behind them.
3. Use of the present silver stocks of the Treasury to supply silver required in the arts. This use is mostly for luxury purposes. The Treasury could set a price on this silver high enough to give it a good profit over the purchase price. I see no other way for the Treasury to realize anything on this silver. Ultimately when China and India see they can no longer unload their silver on this country they may return to their ages-old custom of using it for money and for hoarding. This might reverse the present flow and finally enable our Treasury to profitably dispose of its enormous stock.

A great many people in all the western mining States are dependent for their living, directly or indirectly, on the price of silver, mined either from ores that are valuable chiefly for their silver content, or from ores in which the silver is a byproduct.

One who does not see the situation at first hand cannot realize the conditions of chaos and distress that will exist if legislation on the silver problem is not enacted before June 30 next, when the present price of 64.64 cents per ounce will expire if not renewed by congressional action. I hope that Congress will give serious study to this matter and enact silver legislation that will benefit the American miner rather than foreign hoarders and speculators.

Yours very truly,

JOHN L. DYNAN,
Superintendent, Tonopah Belmont Development Co.

PREROGATIVES OF THE APPOINTING POWER

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, there are times when real harm may be done to our constitutional scheme by thoughtless personal or loose reactions to a given constitutional practice.

When, for example, a Member of this great body during an impeachment debate implied that the phrase "during good behavior" referred only to a judge's life tenure, and not his acts, basing his argument upon a legal definition, it seemed unwise to allow that opinion to remain in our records without being questioned.

When, as another example, the President of the United States vetoed the same bill a second time after it had been reviewed and repassed by unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress, he marred the spirit of the veto theory. This I protested, because if it became a practice the right of review would be denied Congress.

When executive departments recommended general legislation to modify our extraterritorial rights in certain countries in order to accomplish a special objective and bring back to our land for trial a man who had assumed the position of a fugitive, I knew that action was wrong, and that it should not have been completed. My protest availed little; but it was at least uttered.

When the Supreme Court of the United States encroached on the jurisdiction of the other branches of government by laying down a rule of law contrary to economic fact, history, and social truth, it was proper to speak out in order that our constitutional scheme might not be marred by untrue deduction.

The President of the United States has written a letter to Judge Roberts which contains this paragraph:

To this I replied on March 13, explaining to the Senator the difference between the appointive power, which is in the President, and the power of confirmation, which is in the Senate. I pointed out to the Senator that time-hallowed courtesy permits Senators and others to make recommendations for nomination, and at the same time that every President has sought information from any other source deemed advisable.

There is much confusion of thought, such poor description of constitutional practice, and such a mixture of the official with the unofficial, that these words ought not to be left without comment.

The constitutional point turns on the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." The President says the appointive power is in the President and the power of confirmation is in the Senate.

In appointments that require confirmation by the Senate there can be no appointment without Senate action. Therefore, the appointive power cannot be in the President.

I know "advice and consent" had a simple legal definition for many years before our Constitution came into being. It was used in England as a simple "affirmative vote," and this practice had been brought over to the Colonies and followed for many years here. But since its use in our Constitution, our American practice has been different, some text writers' and some executives' opinions to the contrary notwithstanding.

The constitutional "advice" has little to do with recommendation, and has nothing to do with "a time-hallowed courtesy" which "permits Senators and others to make recommendations for nomination." Recommendation is related to the right of petition, which is open to all, and distinct from the senatorial right of advice and consent.

Senatorial courtesy, like all things related to any courtesy, will remain indefinable. Since Woodrow Wilson's time the extra-constitutional aspects of the Presidency have been emphasized. Wilson considered himself the leader of his political party, and most Presidents since his time have affirmed that privilege. Such, of course, is an extra-constitutional assumption. Senatorial courtesy is a necessary development in the perfecting of an extra-constitutional party practice in our Federal system. It is as essential to the proper functioning of party government under our Federal plan as any other extra-constitutional function, such as, for example, our national-convention system.

No one cares how a President of the United States interprets his courtesy rights. No one cares whether or not he seats a Governor ahead of a Senator at a banquet, whether when he goes into one of the States he invites only the Governor to come and call on him and completely ignores all the national officers of government. No one cares very much if the Executive has a kitchen cabinet, a cuff-link club, medicine-ball advisers. A President has a right to talk with whom he wishes, in the way he wishes, and to run his job in a manner in keeping with his own individual interpretation of his job, just so long as he does not mar the constitutional scheme by definitely interfering with a right or a privilege of another in the Government whose rights, if not equal in power, yet are rights equal in dignity in their proper sphere.

The fathers built something more important than they foresaw when they created the Senate of the United States. It came into being as a result of compromise. It has been, and will probably ever remain, a chronic irritant to most Executives. Few have been able to get along with it. None have been able to get along without it. Those Executives who know how to work with it most advantageously will find it the greatest support for the accomplishment of Executive processes, for the Senate does have executive and judicial characteristics in addition to legislative.

Since the establishment of our Government under the Constitution, the Senate of the United States is the only creature of government which has remained continuously in existence. It has been and it will remain, therefore, the body around which government will revolve. Presidents will continue to be made and unmade in the actions of the Senate of the United States. To attempt to coerce is fatal; to attempt to outwit is disastrous; to attempt to stand upon a right which is not based upon fact or history results only in introducing into government the confusion of an otherwise harmonious relationship especially essential to a democracy, wherein the rights of all must of necessity be recognized, even if they are only in the sphere of courtesy.

"By and with the advice and consent" expression appears in our Constitution both in relation to appointments and in relation to the treaty-making power. We are told by the text writers that its execution is a single action. It has been interpreted, especially in regard to our foreign relations and in our treaty ratifications, as being a single action. This is a strictly legalistic interpretation. In regard to appointments, it has generally been interpreted as a dual action, and the Executive has taken advice. He, of course, cannot take the advice of 96 Senators about appointments to office in 48 States; therefore, he must of necessity take the advice of those who are close to the problem. It is as much a constitutional right that this advice be sought and where possible followed, if the aims of the fathers are to be carried out, as it is a duty for the President to name on his own responsibility a person when agreement cannot be reached, and leave action to the judgment of that body which under our government has the right to pass the final judgment. If our Presidents had followed this rule both in regard to treaties and in regard to appointments, our constitutional development would not have suffered many of the set-backs it has suffered as a result of misunderstanding.

We know the origin of the words "advice and consent" so far as our Constitution is concerned. We know from the practice of our Executive in the very first administration that Washington assumed that advice meant advice, both in regard to appointments and in regard to the ratification of treaties. Since his time so much has it been assumed that this is correct that in some appointments the action of the Executive is merely a perfunctory one. But never has the action of the Senate, while it becomes perfunctory in executive sessions during confirmations, been assumed to be a perfunctory one; for even when a resignation takes place in the Army the vacancy is never filled without Senate action, and Army promotion is probably as routine a matter as any in our Government. The right of appointment is both senatorial and Presidential.

Washington came and actually met with the Senate in regard to treaties. The old general was not used to the equality necessary in open deliberation, took offense at some of the questions asked by Senators, and, on a personal basis, refused to come before the Senate again; but in the matter of appointments he never assumed that the appointive power vested solely in him. I have read at least one message of President George Washington to the Senate wherein he presented a second name even before the Senate had taken action on the first, and wherein he stated that in case the advice and consent be not given to the first, he offered the second. Where alternate names were presented the presenter could never have assumed a sole appointive power. The meaning of "by and with the advice and consent" has better authority in the practice of our first President than in the legal definition brought from England or taken from the colonists.

It would be dangerous, as it has been dangerous, both to the constitutional and the extra-constitutional position of the Presidency, for the President to act without the advice of Senators. This, I know, has been done; and great offense has been given. It has always brought party dissension, and it will always destroy party unity. A Senator of the United States has as much right to expect respect for his position as a representative of a sovereign State as has a President to expect respect for his.

Finally, American democracy rests upon the thin thread of common consent. Our country is great not because the majority or the powerful rule. It is great because the minority is protected and the less influential respected.

The question decided by the action of the Senate on Monday was not decided on a personal basis. It was not a contest between our Executive and the Senators concerned. The Virginia Senators know that if it were such a contest I would be on the side of our President. It was decided not on the basis of an interpretation of senatorial courtesy, whatever that may mean, but on the basis of a constitutional right and a constitutional duty.

How else can the Federal system be preserved if it is not respected in all its aspects? America's only contribution to the theory of political science is our Federal system; making that Federal system work is America's greatest contribution to the art of government. In the light of history, American democracy is important to the people of the whole world. That it has been able to function for 150 years may be deemed a miracle; that it should continue to function is a necessity. By a proper interpretation of "by and with the advice and consent" we may have a key to its continuance on the basis of free association, exchange of opinion, deliberation, and action only after a meeting of minds at the end of free discussion. I repeat, this holds both as to appointments and as to foreign relations. It is an exaggerated flight of the imagination to assume that the authority of our Chief Executive acting alone in treaty negotiations is regarded as plenary, when the whole world knows the last word about treaties vests in the Senate. The President's letter to Judge Roberts should not become the text writers' key to the interpretation of "by and with the advice and consent." It suggests a spirit that is contrary to much that is good in our American constitutional theory and practice.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR THE W. P. A. (H. DOC. NO. 152)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

On Saturday, February 4, I approved House Joint Resolution No. 83, which appropriates $725,000,000 to continue the operations of the Works Progress Administration for the remaining 5 months of the current fiscal year.

I would have withheld my approval of this legislation on the ground of its inadequacy to meet human need and I would have immediately asked for a larger sum if it had not been for the provision that there shall not be a reduction of more than 5 percent of the number of employees on Works Progress projects prior to April 1, 1939.

This proviso leads to the conclusion that the Congress stands ready during the balance of February and the month of March to reconsider actual needs in time to increase before April 1 the appropriation for the last 3 months of the fiscal year.

In my message to the Congress on January 5, 1939, I recommended a supplementary appropriation of $875,000,000. This was based on a program to give employment to 3,000,000 workers during February and March and to reduce this employment to an average of 2,700,000 workers in June. This estimated reduction of 300,000 workers by June took full cognizance of the economic recovery which might reasonably be anticipated.

Because it has been necessary during the first week of February to utilize all working capital and pay-roll reserves normally maintained to protect the funds of the United States against overobligation, it will also be necessary immediately to reestablish these reserves from the supplementary appropriation.

The net amount available to finance the Works Progress Administration from February 1 to June 30 is therefore $725,000,000.

In discussing the employment that can be provided for 5 months with $725,000,000 first consideration is given to the winter months of February and March. The joint resolution requires that reduction in employment in those months shall not exceed 5 percent, which reduction, if carried out, would mean the discharge of 150,000 employees.

However, I call your attention to the fact that the rolls have already been reduced by 350,000 since the last week of last October. As no new assignments have been made during this period, there has been a large accumulation of able-bodied people certified to us as in need of relief—people, however, who have not been able to secure places on the work program.

The need of these people is so apparent and so deserving that the rolls, in human decency, ought not to be reduced during February and March by even 5 percent. After conferences with the Works Progress Administration it has been determined for the above reason to hold the rolls at the present figure of 3,000,000 persons during these 2 months.

To employ these 3,000,000 people at the prevailing average monthly cost of $61 will require an expenditure of $366,000,000.

This will leave $359,000,000 for the months of April, May, and June.

Under the terms of the joint resolution this sum must be apportioned over the entire period to June 30. The Administrator will have at his disposal an average of approximately $120,000,000 per month for these 3 months—providing an average employment of slightly less than 2,000,000 persons.

Two alternatives under the joint resolution are open to the Administrator. The first is to reduce the rolls abruptly by 1,000,000 persons on the first of April and provide an average employment of 2,000,000 persons during the ensuing 3 months. This would result in throwing this very large number of persons out of employment suddenly. Such a number cannot possibly be absorbed by private industry in time to prevent extreme distress.

And I call your attention to the fact that on the average every person discharged from the rolls has dependent on him or her three other persons. In other words, the greater part of 4,000,000 Americans will be stranded.

The second alternative is to commence a week-by-week reduction on April 1 and to carry this reduction through to June 30. Even on the assumption that all reserves which under proper governmental procedure should be maintained, were completely expended by June 30, such reduction would require that employment by the end of June will be reduced to a figure well below 1,500,000 persons.

In other words, the program of present employment would be slashed considerably more than one-half within a period of 3 months.

If, however, proper reserves were maintained at the end of the fiscal year, employment at the end of June would drop still further—to a figure of only slightly more than 1,000,000 persons.

Therefore, on a program of gradual reduction from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 persons would be thrown out of Works Progress Administration employment—or, with the addition of those dependent on them, from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 Americans would no longer receive Federal Government aid.

I ask that the Congress commence immediate consideration of these simple and alarming facts. The operations of the Works Progress Administration are of such magnitude that if a reduction such as I have above described has to be carried out, orderly and efficient planning requires that this be known definitely by the first week in March. It is equally important that the executive branch of the Government be informed at the earliest possible moment what additional funds, if any, will be available on and after April 1.

I invite the attention of the Congress to the fact that my recommendation for the larger amount was made to the Congress on January 5 and the joint resolution providing for a much-reduced appropriation was presented for my consideration more than 4 weeks later.

In view of the foregoing considerations, I report to the Congress that in my opinion an emergency now exists, and that the facts constituting such emergency are as follows:

(a) That the rolls of the Works Progress Administration should be held at the present figure of 3,000,000 through the winter months of February and March to prevent undue suffering and to care in part for those persons who have been certified as in need, but have not been given employment.

(b) That the funds which have been provided by the Congress, if not supplemented, will require a very drastic reduction in the Works Progress Administration rolls commencing April 1, 1939, which would result in removing people from the work program in numbers far beyond those that could be absorbed by industry with any conceivable degree of recovery. Widespread want or distress would inevitably follow.

(c) That the need for orderly planning of the Works Progress Administration program requires that the Administrator should know by the early part of March what funds will be at his disposal after April 1, and that, due to the time required for congressional action, this can be brought about only by my reporting to the Congress on the situation at this time.

I therefore recommend to the Congress immediate consideration of legislation providing an additional sum of $150,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration to be available in the balance of the current fiscal year.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Edwin Holt Hughes, D. D., LL. D., senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father: When long ago Thou didst reveal Thy will to Thy people through the greatest of human lawgivers, we were told of "the land which the Lord, our God," gave to us. We are glad to believe that this ancient word is true for our country. We would more and more treat it as Thy divine gift. Thou didst lift its mountains. Thou didst extend its prairies. Its surrounding seas are Thine, for Thou hast made them; "and Thy hands formed the dry land." When we think of the wonder of the territory which Thou hast made for us and given to us, we are disposed to praise Thee and to cry out, "For ourselves, and our country, O gracious God, we thank Thee."

In due season of Thy providence Thou didst give us a separate place among the nations. Thou dost now command us to give back to Thee the land of Thine own giving, consecrated to Thine own holy purposes. Grant Thy mercy and grace to all our citizens. Give Thy benediction and guidance to all our lawmakers that they may fulfill Thy law. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

KATHRYN T. MAIER

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 87

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Kathryn T. Maier, widow of John G. Maier, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said John G. Maier.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN PROPAGANDA IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 81

"Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 26, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate un-American propaganda in the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $150,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts; that the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise officially engaged."

The Committee on Accounts having given consideration to the above resolution recommends that the original do not pass, but that the substitute, as follows, do pass:

"Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 26, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate un-American propaganda in the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $100,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, and the amount herein appropriated is to cover all expenditures of said committee of every nature in completion of its investigation and filing its report not later than January 3, 1940.

"Sec. 2. That the official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia if not otherwise officially engaged.

"Sec. 3. The head of each executive department is hereby requested to detail to said special committee such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as said committee may from time to time deem necessary."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, after I conclude my brief statement about this matter I propose to yield 2 or 3 minutes to the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. After this I propose to move the previous question.

We have a very important bill, the consideration of which must be completed today, brought out by the Ways and Means Committee, and in order to aid the minority in their out-of-town engagements over the week end, this bill has been brought in today. For this reason we are greatly pressed for time.

Mr. Speaker, now that we are in a calmer moment, it is not amiss for me to discuss some phases of this special committee, both pro and con. The resolution carries the largest single amount that has ever been brought out by me during the last 8 years to be paid from the contingent fund of the House. Frankness compels me to say that had not the original resolution been amended to terminate this investigation within the period of a year I would not have supported it, and I believe this view is concurred in by many others in this body. I have always opposed, and consistently so, the setting up of these perpetual investigations by the House of Representatives. We report out here today a substitute which has the unanimous approval of every member of the Committee on Accounts, all members being present at the meeting except one. It also has the approval of the three members of the special committee who appeared before the Accounts Committee, to wit, Mr. DIES, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, and Mr. DEMPSEY.

We have reiterated in section 1 of the resolution what the House has already expressed by a very large vote, and that is that the amount herein appropriated is to cover all expenditures of said committee of every nature in completion of its investigation and filing its report not later than January 3, 1940.

The Committee on Accounts has seen fit to add another section which was contained in the resolution passed last year, and that is we again call upon the head of each executive department to detail to the special committee such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as said committee may from time to time deem necessary.

There is no use for us to quibble over this. The chairman of this select committee respectfully and in accordance with the terms of the former resolution requested aid from department heads. For some reason that aid was declined and was not given, although it is a well-known fact that various departments of the Government have assigned from time to time such assistance and one instance of it is on record in the hearings on the independent offices bill, the consideration of which was just completed last night. The departments have assigned special counsel or special investigators to various select committees set up by either body.

Now, I have some pride in the authority and the greatness of the House of Representatives, and I want to serve notice, and I believe this is in accord with the feeling of the House of Representatives, that when we pass a resolution, although it does not have the binding effect of law, when we call upon a department to lend aid to any committee that we set up, we expect the request to be observed and obeyed as far as possible or good reason to be ascribed why it is not obeyed. [Applause.]

This is the third investigation of this nature that has been authorized by the House of Representatives during my service here. Shortly after I came here we had the committee headed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. What was accomplished? Absolutely nothing. Then followed the committee headed by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. That committee almost got somewhere. They did what the House instructed them to do. They made a final report and recommended legislation.

They recommended the passage of five bills to cure the evils that they had investigated. Those bills were duly considered by the appropriate committees of the House and were reported favorably to the House. One of those bills was enacted into law, and the other four measures, by obstruction, by dilatory tactics, and by refusal to have them considered, are now embalmed in the archives of useless papers. How surprised we would be, how astounded we would be, if somehow, somewhere, sometime, some of these investigating committees that are set up would come back here with a report and have their recommendations enacted into the law of the land. That just does not happen. In only the most isolated cases has it ever happened.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might also say that the bill the gentleman refers to is the Registration Act, that became a law last year, compelling all persons in the employ, directly or indirectly, of any foreign government, any foreign political body, any foreign agency of any kind, corporate, partnership, individual, set up for propaganda purposes in the United States, to register with the Secretary of State. It is the first bill that any Congress has enacted, which enables the Department of Justice to make any investigation, and as a result of the passage of that law, the Department of Justice is now investigating the important evidence referred to by the Dies committee, and it took 4 years for that bill to pass.

Mr. WARREN. And the gentleman will, of course, admit that he was blocked in getting up the other four bills.

Mr. McCORMACK. The fact is that the other four bills are not still up. I shall not use the word "blocked." The fact is those bills are not here; they have not passed. One of them was a bill making it a crime for anyone knowingly or willfully to advocate the overthrow of our Government by force and violence, and I can never see why anyone could oppose the passage of that bill.

Mr. WARREN. Nor could I. This committee is in a little more fortunate position. The chairman of this special committee is a member of the Committee on Rules. Another member, my friend the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], is likewise a member of the Committee on Rules, and I beg this special committee now not to let a whole year go by. They have the power. Certainly they have found something from their investigations of 7 months to bring in here to this House. But I beg them not to let a year go by without the House at least having an opportunity to consider some corrective legislation that they might suggest.

I know that perhaps any advice from me to this committee might be considered gratuitous and not wanted. I entertain for the membership of the special committee both high regard and personal friendship. I quote from a letter written by the chairman of the committee:

Of course, some of the testimony must be discounted, due to bias, the natural tendency to exaggerate when dealing with this subject, and other factors; but after making due allowance for all these factors, the fact remains that the situation is sufficiently serious to justify a thorough and fearless investigation which will accord to all sides a full opportunity to be heard, to the end that the truth with regard to all un-American activities and propaganda may be ascertained once and for all.

The special committee has an opportunity to render a distinct and outstanding public service. If it will hew to the line; if it will march straight ahead; if it will turn neither to the right nor to the left; if it will not listen to the blandishments of any group or succumb to the itch of publicity, and will go forward and ferret out the facts and recommend legislation that will be effective, then they will receive the thanks and plaudits of the American people.

But, on the other hand, if this committee is to ride over the land looking under every pillar and post for those with whose views they might not agree, if constitutional rights of citizens are to be trampled or invaded, if they have any idea of conducting an inquisition, then they will probably be condemned and their works and labors will prove ineffectual. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. For a question.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield me 3 minutes? I am not opposed to the resolution. All I desire is 3 minutes, in view of the fact that the action of the committee has been called to the attention of the House. As chairman of the Committee on Rules, I desire to make a brief statement, and also due to the fact that I supported the resolution.

Mr. WARREN. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not much. First, I wish to ask a question before I take the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I notice in the first paragraph that the amount to be given to the committee is $100,000. Does the gentleman consider that adequate for a real investigation?

Mr. WARREN. I certainly do. Frankly, it is a somewhat higher amount than I personally favored. I want to say that Mr. DIES, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, and Mr. DEMPSEY stated that in their opinion it would be adequate. Therefore we have given them that amount so that there will be no future alibis. That is the reason I am supporting an amount that large.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As to section 3, it was in the last resolution which was passed last year; but, as I understand it, the departments did not comply, as the gentleman from North Carolina has well stated and did not provide any assistance to the committee.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The chairman of the committee in introducing this resolution this year left out that proviso, and the Committee on Accounts have seen fit to reinsert it. Can that be taken to mean that that is any effort to sabotage this committee in its work? As I understand the evidence that has been presented before the committee, it is to the effect that there is more or less communism in some of the departments of Government. If that be true, should those departments of Government be asked to provide assistants for an investigation which might go into their own department?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts even thinks there is any attempt to sabotage this committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not think so, but I want to give the gentleman from North Carolina an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. WARREN. I will tell the gentleman. I suggested that that be put in there. I assure the gentleman I have not been in communication with nor consulted any department. It is simply permissive for the special committee to call upon them. But I say this, and I know the gentleman will agree with this, as I have just said, that if this committee does call on them, that department ought to respond, because the request comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree thoroughly with the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina. I also appreciate that if there had been more cooperation in the past it would have saved a great deal of money for the people of the country. But, as it now reads, the chairman is not compelled to ask for assistance from a department that he may want to investigate.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and then I shall yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. After that I shall move the previous question. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, first I must remind the House if no legislation has emanated from previous committees, certainly it cannot be charged to the Republican membership of either branch of the Congress. For the last 5 years, the Congress has been overwhelmingly Democratic, and if proper legislation has not been brought to the floor, that responsibility, of course, rests upon those who control the House or the Senate.

The Republican membership of the House is 100 percent back of this resolution to provide adequate funds for the Dies investigation. We showed that in our vote the other day when we expressed ourselves unanimously that this investigation should go on. We may say no legislation has emanated from past committees, but I honestly believe every one of those committees has accomplished some good. It is not always necessary to have legislation for a committee to justify itself. If we can arouse the conscience of the American people to the abuses that are going on in the country, then that money is well spent. [Applause.] We are spending billions of dollars in this country for defense against any foreign government which might attack America. If we can spend billions for armament it is not unwise to give $100,000 to protect the American people from forces that are trying to undermine America at home. America, if it is ever destroyed will be from forces undermining it at home rather than from an attack from abroad. [Applause.]

The Republican membership of this House is for this investigation. Our hope is the committee will continue, as I believe it has in the past, for a fearless, honest, and impartial investigation. If there is communism in any of the departments, that fact should be revealed. If there are groups of people trying to destroy the America of today they should be exposed. The American people are demanding the real facts and the gentleman from Texas and his committee have been given an opportunity, rare indeed, to render great service to this country. I sincerely hope they will not fail.

I am glad to here record the support of the Republican membership of the House and I trust this resolution will be unanimously adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Lest there be any misunderstanding, let me make it clear that I supported and voted for resolutions creating the McCormack committee and the original resolution setting up the Dies committee. However, thousands of individuals, organizations, patriotic and other groups feel, and I concur in that feeling, that the Dies committee has permitted itself to become an instrument of those who fight the administration, and of Fascist and Nazi groups which seek to divert attention from their own subversive activities.

Mr. DIES has admitted that mistakes were made in the past and now assures the Rules Committee, the Accounts Committee, and the House that he will avoid such mistakes in the future. Therefore I support this resolution authorizing $100,000 to renew the committee's work. In fact, I would gladly say that $500,000, if need be, should be given a committee to really inquire into subversive activities.

I know that it costs money to carry on Nation-wide investigations, and I know that support cannot be had from governmental agencies. To correct a mistaken impression given the general public that the departments refused to help the Dies committee, I want it known that the House during the last Congress passed an amendment prohibiting the departments from loaning employees to congressional committees. Older members, some of whom now criticize the departments for not giving assistance, should remember that I was one of the very few who fought in the Well of this House to defeat the amendment prohibiting departments from giving help to our select committee.

Let the House be sure of one thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is that there will be no delay by the Rules Committee in reporting out any proposed legislation to deal with un-American activities. I have been personally disposed toward legislation proposed by Mr. McCormack and regret that no favorable action has been taken to date. Unfortunately, the other side objected to consideration of these bills.

I hope that the Dies committee, with the renewed life and additional funds granted it, will go out and do a real job in exposing un-American activities. And by un-American activities I mean the acts of the Nazis, the Fascists, the Silver Shirts, and all the other subversive groups, and not only the Communists. I despise them all with equal intensity.

Another thing I hope is that the committee will not permit irresponsible and designing individuals to brand all liberals and progressives as Communists. There are those who for political or other reasons have assailed members of the Cabinet and even the President of the United States and by implication branded them as un-American. I resent this and will fight such tactics with every resource at my command.

With the naming of the capable and conscientious gentleman from California as the new member of the committee I know that the committee is strengthened materially, and I trust that the criticism voiced by thousands of Americans during the past year will have no reason to be heard in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the substitute amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have a very important bill coming up today. I do not know how much time is going to be allotted for its consideration.

Mr. RAYBURN. We have already agreed on 3 hours' general debate, I may say to the gentleman, by unanimous consent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Although I will not object to adjourning over until Monday, I call attention to the fact that as discussion on this bill proceeds today I am not so sure that this Congress will not be subjected to severe criticism in not taking up not only all of today, but all of tomorrow and all of Saturday in the consideration of this very fundamental question, one which has been before the country for 150 years.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that I very reluctantly agreed to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and many Members on that side of the aisle, not to have a session tomorrow and Saturday. But because I wanted to accommodate Members on that side of the House, about 35 of whom said they desire to get away for the celebration of Lincoln's Birthday, I have, at the instance of the gentleman from Massachusetts, submitted the request.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is my opinion that we can better revere the memory of the second greatest American by staying on this floor and discussing this fundamental question of States' rights than we can by making speeches elsewhere in his memory.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is a foregone conclusion that Members cannot stay on the floor and at the same time make Lincoln Day speeches elsewhere.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe the gentlemen should stay here and make Lincoln Day speeches in defense of our dual democracy.

Mr. RAYBURN. We have plenty of time, and it is our intention to take plenty of time for debate today, to stay in session until this bill is passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say in behalf of the majority leader that having the bill called up and passed today, was at the request of a good many Members of the minority side of the House. The committee had thought that 3 hours' debate would be ample; and I believe before we get through it will be seen that 3 hours is sufficient for everybody who so wishes to express himself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that if debate is limited to 3 hours, the opponents of this measure will not have more than an hour and a half. I happen to know that there are at least two of us who expect to speak in opposition to this bill. In studying this question I can see where I, with my limited knowledge of these matters, might easily take 40 or 45 minutes to clarify the position which I take. I do not see how Members such as the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] and others who want to talk on this matter can begin to discuss the subject in the limited time which will be allotted to them.

I shall not be averse to adjourning over until Monday, because I do not think anything would be accomplished by it. If I objected to the request of the gentleman from Texas, I know that probably I would be a very unpopular Member of Congress for the next 48 hours, and that a rule, a resolution, or a motion would be made to adjourn over; so nothing would be accomplished by it and I would be charged with demagoguery in this respect. I do not want to demagogue in this respect, because it is a question which must be devoid of demagoguery. I do want, however, to call attention to the fact that it is impossible even to read the pertinent paragraphs from the three leading decisions of the Supreme Court in an hour and a half of time, to say nothing of discussing it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman, or the acting chairman, of the Ways and Means Committee be liberal with time when it comes to amendments, or will they invoke the cloture rule? Our Committee on the Judiciary has considered this matter for 15 years. It is a matter of the greatest importance, and we should have sufficient time in which to discuss it. I do not object to the request, but I do hope that when it comes time to offer amendments that there will be no invoking of the cloture rule so as to stop debate on the subject.

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly there is no desire on the part of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee to do anything like that; and, frankly, I think much light will be shed on the subject between now and 3:30.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, may I say to the majority leader and to the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee that there is no immediate necessity for the passage of this bill. Why can we not let this matter go over until the fore part of next week? Surely this is much more important than any appropriation bill which we may have up for consideration at that time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that I very much desired a session tomorrow and Saturday to consider the May bill and get it out of the way this week. As the gentleman from Massachusetts has just stated, I agreed to take this bill up and dispose of it today in order that the Members could get away until Monday. We must consider the May bill on Monday. We have an appropriation bill ready for consideration, and if we get through with that, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] will probably bring in a bill for consideration. So next week will be a rather heavy week.

So far as having a session tomorrow and next day is concerned, if objection is made to my request, I would simply announce that everyone could go home or wherever they pleased, I would be here tomorrow and the Speaker would be here, and I would move to adjourn on the reading of the Journal tomorrow, so that the House would be back here Saturday. If there was nothing to do on that day, I would move to adjourn until Monday.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is why I am not objecting. It is utterly futile and I am not going to object, but I may say that I have turned down urgent requests to speak in honor of Abraham Lincoln, but I believe we should stay here and honor him more by being on the floor to consider this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

THE EVIL THAT MEN DO—THE UTILITY FASCISTI—KENTUCKY, ILLINOIS, PENNSYLVANIA, MISSOURI—THE OKLAHOMA CONTROVERSY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, owing to a misunderstanding that seems to have arisen, especially in the State of Oklahoma, relative to the application of the Flood Control Act passed during the last session of Congress, particularly with reference to the construction of the Dennison Dam, I desire to discuss that measure briefly, to answer some of the criticisms, and to point out the benefits this project would bring to the people of Oklahoma.

I have no quarrel, personally, with the Governor of Oklahoma; but I do not propose to sit idly by and see him, or any other man, or set of men, wreck this great program of flood control, navigation improvements, and power development on our navigable streams and their tributaries, or allow them to prevent the use of the power generated for the benefit of the masses of the American people, if I can help it.

I realize that the Power Trust lobbyists are swarming around the Capitol of Oklahoma just as they do around all State legislatures and just as they have been swarming around this Capitol lining up opposition to the T. V. A., and lately fighting the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam.

No doubt they are bringing every possible pressure to bear on the Legislature of Oklahoma, as well as on the Governor of that State, to try to sabotage the Flood Control Act of 1938—the greatest measure of its kind ever passed by the American Congress. I say it is the greatest measure of its kind, because of the fact that it contains provisions, to which I shall refer later, that really enable us to control the floods, improve navigation, and develop power on these streams for the benefit of the people in the surrounding area.

As I explained to the House the other day, I was largely responsible for these provisions, to save the waterpower of this country for the American people, being inserted in the Flood Control Act of 1938. Wherever one of these projects is developed, we hope to establish the yardstick for the proper measurement of electric lights and power. In my opinion, this is our only chance to bring justice to the electric consumers of this Nation, who are now bearing an annual overcharge of more than $1,000,000,000 a year for electric lights and power.

We must wrest all the American people from the bondage of the Power Trust. This Nation cannot remain "half slave and half free."

The power business in America, as now conducted by the Power Trust, is the greatest racket of modern times. No other civilized, self-respecting nation on earth would have stood for it as long as we have.

Let me give you a typical example: On page 60 of this week's issue of Time magazine it is stated that one of these holding utility magnates "left a bicycle shop" 35 years ago and went into the power business, not as a producer, but as a stock manipulator. He got control of a holding company whose total assets, according to this magazine, today amount to $900,000,000. By 1924 this man owned 96 percent of its stock, and by 1929 its shares had been split 60 to 1, and, listen to this: "The value of a single share had risen from $10.50 to $5,600." And this man owned 7,500,000 shares of this watered stock worth $612,000,000, and this magazine goes on to say that "His yacht was the largest in the world."

The helpless consumers of electric energy supplied by the small companies controlled by this gigantic, blood-sucking holding company, were compelled to pay rates that would insure dividends on shares of stock valued at $5,600 which, in truth, had cost only $10.50.

I repeat it is the greatest racket of modern times, and 25,000,000 electric consumers throughout the Nation are its victims.

What we members of the public power bloc are trying to do is to rescue the power consumers from the clutches of this gigantic octopus, and to see that they are supplied with electric energy at the T. V. A. yardstick rates—or at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution.

THE EVIL THAT MEN DO

On yesterday we witnessed a pathetic spectacle in this House, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] joined forces in their efforts to destroy the Gilbertsville Dam and to paralyze and wreck the administration's flood control, navigation improvement, and power program.

Shakespeare said—

The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones.

KENTUCKY

Unless we are able to get the appropriation for the Gilbertsville Dam restored in the Senate and held in by the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] will have helped to render an injury to the people of his State that will live long after he has passed away, and will forever overshadow any good he could ever hope to accomplish throughout his future public career, when he helped to destroy the greatest development ever undertaken in the State of Kentucky.

In addition to being harrassed with disastrous floods, in addition to the need for the development of navigation on the Tennessee River, the people of Kentucky are suffering under the additional burden of being overcharged more than $9,000,000 a year for electric lights and power—although we have reduced light and power rates to the people of that State more than $6,800,000 a year since the T. V. A. was created and its yardstick rates put into effect.

We have forced down rates in every community in America, and the people of Kentucky are now enjoying savings amounting to $6,800,000 every year that rolls around. They are still overcharged, however, more than $9,000,000 a year; and if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the Power Trust, and the coal barons, who seem to be backing him in this fight, have their way, the people of that great State will continue to struggle under this burden for all time to come. They would even sabotage and destroy the T. V. A. and take away from the people of that State the $6,800,000 of annual savings they now enjoy as a result of the creation of the T. V. A. and the promulgation of its yardstick rates and pile that burden back on to the light and power consumers of Kentucky.

PENNSYLVANIA

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] may think that he is helping the coal miners by fighting the T. V. A. In truth he is only helping the coal barons and the Power Trust which is interlocked with the National Coal Association—that aggregation of coal operators who reap the benefits from coal legislation while the poor miner who does the work is denied the use of cheap electricity and therefore denied the very comforts and conveniences which the products of his toil would produce.

I pointed out on this floor some days ago that one of the leading expert witnesses, representing the power interests, in the T. V. A. investigation, stated that power could be produced with coal—with $3 per ton coal—at 4.18 mills a kilowatt-hour. That is cheaper than any municipality buys power from the T. V. A. They could generate power with Pennsylvania coal and distribute it to every consumer in the State of Pennsylvania at the T. V. A. yardstick rates. That would increase the consumption of coal, and the employment of coal miners, and at the same time it would benefit every human being who turns an electric switch in Pennsylvania, and add immeasurably to the comforts and conveniences of every home.

The same thing could be done in Ohio, Illinois, West Virginia, Oklahoma, Kentucky, and every other coal-producing State. But they won't do that; they won't even produce cheap power for the miners with the coal they dig from the ground, but invariably overcharge them for their electric lights, and what little power they use, on an average of more than 100 percent; while the Pennsylvania Railroad that runs through the coal mining districts of that State, and reaps the profits for hauling this coal, is now running some of its trains with hydroelectric power produced at Conowingo Dam.

The people of Pennsylvania are today overcharged for electric light and power from $85,000,000 a year, according to the T. V. A. rates, to $104,000,000 a year, according to the Ontario rates—although we have forced reductions of $70,600,000 a year in electric light and power rates in the State of Pennsylvania since the creation of the T. V. A.

They can produce electricity from coal mined in Pennsylvania and distribute it to the ultimate consumers throughout the entire State at the T. V. A. yardstick rates without loss. That would put more miners to work, stimulate industry in Pennsylvania, reduce the light and power rates to the people of that State $85,000,000 a year, add to the comforts and conveniences of their homes by enabling them to employ more electrical appliances, and at the same time supply electricity to every farm home in the State.

ILLINOIS

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] did everything he could to cripple the Tennessee Valley Authority. Probably he would like to call back the days of Samuel Insull, the power king, who reigned supreme in Illinois, only a few years ago. About the time Insull fell the T. V. A. was created. What a glorious exchange!

Since the T. V. A. was created, and its yardstick rates promulgated, we have forced light and power reductions to the people of Illinois amounting to $65,600,000 a year. Every human being who turns an electric switch gets the benefit of these reductions every month. Yet the gentleman from Illinois would wipe them out, destroy the T. V. A. and its yardstick, and go back to the glorious days of the Insull empire.

We have just started to reduce rates in Illinois. The people of that State are still overcharged from $66,000,000 a year according to the T. V. A. rates, to $81,000,000 a year according to the Ontario rates.

How much greater injury could the gentleman from Illinois bring to the people of that State than to destroy the T. V. A., that great symbol of justice for light and power consumers, and turn them back to Insullism, depriving them of further reductions of light and power rates, and piling back upon their shoulders this extra burden of $66,000,000 a year!

Illinois is another great coal-producing State. Yet the people of that proud Commonwealth, even in the coal producing area—even the very miners who dig the coal—are charged such exorbitant rates for electric lights and power that it is almost like paying rent to the power companies to live in their own homes or to do business in their own establishments.

As I said with reference to the State of Pennsylvania, they can produce electricity from coal mined in Illinois and distribute it to the ultimate consumers throughout the entire State at the T. V. A. yardstick rates without loss. That would put more miners to work, stimulate industry in Illinois, reduce light and power rates to the people of that State $66,000,000 a year, add to the comforts and conveniences of their homes by enabling them to employ more electric appliances, and at the same time supply electricity to every farm home in Illinois at the T. V. A. yardstick rates.

MISSOURI

But "The most unkindest cut of all" came from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT]. His clowning speech on yesterday, together with his repetition, of the stereotyped propaganda of the Power Trust helped to line up the Republican Members of the House to defeat the Gilbertsville appropriation; which defeat was the greatest blow that could have been delivered against our attempts to develop the White River in Arkansas and Missouri, including Table Rock and the James River projects, to control floods, improve navigation and generate enough electricity to supply the States of Missouri and Arkansas and a large portion of Oklahoma.

The coal barons, the Power Trust, and other enemies of the Tennessee Valley Authority with which he has aligned himself in this fight are against any development of the White River and will be found lined up solidly against the Table Rock and James River projects, through the development of which we hope to control floods, improve navigation, and bring justice to the power consumers of that section of the Southwest.

How much greater injury could he have done to the people he represents? The people of the State of Missouri are now overcharged for electric light and power from $23,000,000 a year according to the T. V. A. rates, to $28,000,000 a year according to the Ontario rates—although, as I pointed out yesterday, we have forced reductions of light and power rates in the State of Missouri by more than $12,000,000 a year since the T. V. A. was created and its yardstick rates established.

In addition to these overcharges in Missouri, the people of Arkansas are overcharged more than $5,000,000 a year and the people of Oklahoma are overcharged more than $11,000,000 a year for electric lights and power—making a total of approximately $40,000,000 a year the people of those three States are overcharged for electric energy; and more than half of them are denied the use of any electricity at all.

I have searched the record of power rates in Missouri and I find that in every town and in every community in the district represented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], the average residential and commercial consumer of electric energy is overcharged more than 100 percent on his light and power bill every month—and that considerably more than half the people in the district are denied the use of any electricity at all—especially in the rural sections.

Of all men who should support the Tennessee Valley Authority as well as our efforts to develop the White River and its tributaries—including Table Rock and the James River project, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] should be among the most enthusiastic.

In his speech on yesterday he repeated almost verbatim the old stock arguments of the Power Trust to the effect that 4,000,000 people own stock in private power companies and that their investments amounts to $12,000,000,000.

As a matter of fact, this legislation will not affect legitimate investments. If the gentleman from Missouri will turn to the RECORD of January 12 and read my statement before the T. V. A. Investigating Committee he will see that I showed by the RECORD that of this $12,000,000,000 investment claimed by the Power Trust, and its friends in the House, at least $5,000,000,000 is water, or inflated values. I showed that under the Ontario system the investments for the generation, transmission, and distribution of the 90,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity produced and distributed in the United States last year, it would, at the very outside have required an investment of only $4,778,680,000 instead of the $12,000,000,000 quoted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] on yesterday.

But I will go into the Missouri rates more fully at another time. I want to go into a thorough analysis of the light and power rates in his district and show how this unholy combination of the coal barons and the Power Trust is grinding the people of Missouri into the dust.

This is a national policy with me, and the gentleman's deflection will not cause me to cease my efforts to develop the White River and its tributaries, including Table Rock and the James River project, for the benefit of the people of that section of the country now and for generations to come.

In addition to controlling the floods and improving navigation on those streams, I want to give the people of that area an effective yardstick for the measurement of electric light and power rates. The rates they are now paying for electricity in every county, every city, every town, and every community represented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] are so high, so exorbitant, and so unreasonable that, as I said, it is like paying rent to the Power Trust to live in their own homes or to do business in their own establishments.

THE OKLAHOMA SITUATION

Whenever the spokesmen for the Power Trust make a protest against legislation they invariably give a different reason for their objections from the one by which they are motivated.

Probably that is the reason they have misled the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

The Oklahoma controversy is merely an echo of the same fight now going on in New England, in which the Utilities are trying to prevent the development of any hydroelectric power to be distributed for the benefit of the people in the surrounding area. They would prefer to see us seal up those streams by building solid dams that would deprive the people of New England of the use of their hydroelectric power for at least another hundred years than to see these dams built, and penstocks installed for the generation of electric power, as the law provides—unless they could "reach an agreement" to have this power turned over to them so that they could rob the people with exorbitant rates on the power generated from their own natural resources. New England has no coal mines or oil fields. Therefore this is their only hope to secure cheap electricity.

They are giving "States' rights" as their reasons for protesting. States' rights!—which no utility has ever respected and which they have spent hundreds of millions of dollars to destroy whenever it suited their convenience in their grasping drive for wealth and power.

Under the proposed act, as it stood before these amendments were inserted, the Federal Government was to put up 70 percent of the funds for the construction of these dams and reservoirs, and the States and local communities 30 percent; and there was to be a divided responsibility. That would have been "duck soup" for the Power Trust. If the utilities could have influenced the Governor of a State involved, or even one branch of the legislature of any State involved, they could have prevented any development on any navigable stream from Maine to Mexico until the Government came to an "agreement" with them, or with the Governor who spoke their language. In that way they could have prevented the people from getting any benefits from the power generated.

Before the bill finally became a law we succeeded in having that provision eliminated, and the following provision substituted:

That in case of any dam and reservoir project, or channel improvement or channel rectification project for flood control, herein authorized or heretofore authorized by the act of June 22, 1936 (Public, No. 736, 74th Cong.), as amended, and by the act of May 15, 1928 (Public, No. 391, 70th Cong.), as amended by the act of June 15, 1936 (Public, No. 678, 74th Cong.), as amended, title to all lands, easements, and rights-of-way for such project shall be acquired by the United States or by States, political subdivisions thereof or other responsible local agencies and conveyed to the United States, and provisions (a), (b), and (c) of section 3 of said act of June 22, 1936, shall not apply thereto. Notwithstanding any restrictions, limitations, or requirement of prior consent provided by any other act, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to acquire in the name of the United States title to all lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for any dam and reservoir project or channel improvement or channel rectification project for flood control, with funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated or made available for such projects, and States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies, shall be granted and reimbursed from such funds, sums equivalent to actual expenditures deemed reasonable by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers and made by them in acquiring lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any dam and reservoir project, or any channel improvement or channel rectification project for flood control heretofore or herein authorized: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made for any indirect or speculative damages: Provided further, That lands, easements, and rights-of-way shall include lands on which dams, reservoirs, channel improvements, and channel rectifications are located; lands or flowage rights in reservoirs and highway, railway, and utility relocation.

SEC. 3. That in any case where the construction cost of levees or flood walls included in any authorized project can be substantially reduced by the evacuation of a portion or all of the area proposed to be protected and by the elimination of that portion or all of the area from the protection to be afforded by the project, the Chief of Engineers may modify the plan of said project so as to eliminate said portion or all of the area: Provided, That a sum not substantially exceeding the amount thus saved in construction cost may be expended by the Chief of Engineers, or in his discretion may be transferred to any other appropriate Federal agency for expenditure, toward the evacuation of the locality eliminated from protection and the rehabilitation of the persons so evacuated: And provided further, That the Chief of Engineers may, if he so desires, enter into agreement with States, local agencies, or the individuals concerned for the accomplishment by them, of such evacuation and rehabilitation and for their reimbursement from said sum for expenditures actually incurred by them for this purpose.

SEC. 4. That the following works of improvement for the benefit of navigation and the control of destructive floodwaters and other purposes are hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers in accordance with the plans in the respective reports hereinafter designated: Provided, That penstocks or other similar facilities adapted to possible future use in the development of hydroelectric power shall be installed in any dam herein authorized when approved by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and of the Federal Power Commission.

You will note that under the provisions of section 4 it is provided that penstocks, to be used for the generation of hydroelectric power, may be installed in these dams when approved by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Army Engineers and the Federal Power Commission.

The purpose of that is to generate the power in these streams that is now going to waste, and distribute it to the people in the surrounding territory at reasonable rates. That is what is causing the protest. The utilities do not want this power developed unless it is turned over to them to be resold to the ultimate consumers at exorbitant rates.

They do not want any yardstick for the proper measurement of light and power rates in the various areas affected if they can help it. We are determined to have these penstocks inserted, generators installed where necessary, and the power distributed at the yardstick rates.

Having failed in their attempts in New England to force the Federal Government to compromise with them, the power interests seem to have transferred the fight to Oklahoma. They want to prevent the generation and distribution of hydroelectric power at yardstick rates to the people of that State.

Oklahoma is intrinsically one of the richest States in this Union. She has a gentle climate, a fertile soil, and an abundant rainfall. She has mountains stored with coal and iron, and her plains and valleys are underlaid with gas and oil. The State is traversed by streams that contain enough hydroelectric power to supply the needs of all her people. Yet special interests are draining off her gas and oil, slowly and gradually exhausting her supply of coal, and preventing the development of her hydroelectric power—permitting it to run waste and wanton to the sea—while the people of Oklahoma are overcharged more than $11,000,000 a year for electric lights and power, and a large percentage of the people of the State are denied the use of any electricity at all.

While the domestic consumers in my home town of Tupelo, Miss., where the T. V. A. rates are in effect, now use on an average of 180 kilowatt-hours a month, the average domestic consumption in Oklahoma is less than 60 kilowatt-hours a month—because of the exorbitant rates the people of that State have to pay.

If this Denison Dam, which has been so strenuously advocated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT], is constructed, and the power generated and distributed to the people of Oklahoma at the yardstick rates, it will result in the reduction of light and power rates throughout the State, probably amounting to the present entire overcharge of $11,000,000 a year. The consumption of electricity will grow by leaps and bounds, the number of electric appliances employed will multiply as if by magic, and electricity will be distributed to the farm homes of the State to relieve the farmer of many of the burdens he now has to bear, add to the comforts and conveniences of his home, and lift from the shoulders of the housewife the burdens of drudgery under which she has struggled throughout the centuries. It is the greatest opportunity ever offered to the people of Oklahoma.

In order that every one who reads this record may make his own comparisons and realize the enormous overcharges for electric lights and power the people of Oklahoma have to pay, I am inserting at this point a schedule showing the residential rates in the Province of Ontario, Canada, and in Tacoma, Wash., in the far West, as well as the T. V. A. rates in the South. I am following that with a statement showing the residential rates in every city and town in Oklahoma of more than 250 population. Since the average consumption in the State of Oklahoma is only about 50 kilowatt-hours a month, I will not run this table above 100 kilowatt-hours in order to save space in the RECORD.

Table of comparative monthly rates—Residential service
MONTHLY CONSUMPTION

Rates	Kilowatt-hours
	25	40	100
Ontario.....	$0.75	$1.02	$1.74
Tacoma.....	1.13	1.52	2.12
T. V. A.....	.75	1.20	2.50

Now compare the above rates with the rates charged in the State of Oklahoma as shown by the following table, and you will see what enormous overcharges the domestic consumers of electricity in Oklahoma have to pay:

Now let us examine the rates the commercial consumers of electricity in Oklahoma have to pay—that is the merchants, hotel, restaurant, and filling-station operators, and all others who have to pay commercial rates.

I am inserting, first, a table of rates for commercial consumers in Ontario, Canada; Tacoma, Wash.; and the Tennessee Valley; and following it with a table showing the commercial rates paid in every town in Oklahoma of over 250 population. I do this in order that you may make your own

You will see from these tables that commercial consumers in Oklahoma are practically paying rent to the power companies to get to do business in their own houses.

How can any one who is in the remotest degree interested in the welfare of the people of Oklahoma read these rates and make these comparisons, and oppose the construction of the projects on these streams that would not only control floods and improve navigation, but would furnish hydro-electric power to be distributed to the ultimate consumers in such a way as to force these rates down to reasonable levels, relieve the consumers of that State of an overcharge of $11,000,000 a year, and bring about the electrification of every farm home in Oklahoma!

THE UTILITY FASCIST

But we might as well face the real issue. This is the battle of the century. This country is now in the grip of a utility Fascist that sprawls like a huge octopus over the entire Nation, usurping the powers of government by controlling governors, intimidating courts, browbeating commissions, and corrupting legislatures.

It has about destroyed what free press we had through the great financial influences it controls, and its venal voice is now heard, in a thousand radio broadcasts, skillfully camouflaged to deceive the public.

Already I think I can begin to read the signs of its campaign contributions in the last congressional election. Whenever a selfish interest primes a political pump it always expects what it pours in to be the first to come out—and that doubled many times.

Let me warn the Republicans in the House, as well as the recalcitrant Democrats, that if they become subservient to the utilities, and especially to the Power Trust, and let this octopus wrap its tentacles around their necks, it will be as fatal to them as was the dead albatross that was swung to the neck of the Ancient Mariner.

There are 25,000,000 power consumers throughout the United States who are now paying overcharges for electric lights and power of more than $1,000,000,000 a year. To them the T. V. A. is a symbol of protection and its yardstick is a golden wand, the sesame of their liberation from the bondage of the Power Trust.

This is a fight to the finish! There will be no compromise! He that is not with us is against us! Men who believe in common justice for the masses of the American people will not fail them in this cause!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of the migration of the Negro from the farms of the South, the cause and the remedy, and to include a letter which I received from Dr. Kelly Miller, former dean of Howard University, together with my answer to that letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL]?

There was no objection.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 35), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 88

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 3791, a bill to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 2868) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE PUBLIC SALARY TAX ACT OF 1939

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3790, with Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 1½ hours.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there are two titles to this bill. The first title follows out one of the recommendations recently made by the President when he recommended to the Congress that legislation be enacted which would subject all public employees, Federal, State, county, and municipal, to the income-tax laws of the Federal Government in the case of State employees, and the employees of political subdivisions of States, and to the State income-tax laws in the case of Federal employees.

Title II relates to the application of title I, providing that with the exception of certain employees of State and local functions which have always been subjected to the income-tax law, such as employees of a State liquor-store system, for example, or of a municipally owned street railway or a municipally owned gas or electric company, that all other employees shall not be subject retroactively to 1939 to a Federal income-tax law or, on the other hand, Federal employees shall not be subject to a State income-tax law for the year 1938 and prior thereto.

It is not my purpose to discuss title I of this bill at any length. Outside of a legal question involved, it seems to me that the objective of this bill is meritorious. I noticed in the press only a day or two ago the Gallup poll on this question showed, as I remember, either 83 or 87 percent of those contacted felt that public employees, like all other taxpayers, should be subjected to the income-tax laws of the several States and of the Federal Government.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. The Gallup polls shows 87 percent for and 13 percent against.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman. I was not sure whether it was 83 or 87 percent.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will yield further, I may also say I have had the opportunity recently to examine a pretty large number of clippings and editorials from newspapers throughout the entire Nation, and I believe it is fair to say that the comment of these editorials and newspaper clippings runs about 80 percent in favor of this proposed legislation and only about 20 percent against it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I should like to know if the committee gave consideration to the question of whether or not legislation of this character could be enacted without amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was going to discuss that point. The gentleman will note I said that it seemed to me that, outside of the legal question involved, public employees should be subject to the income-tax laws of the Federal Government and of the several States the same as any other taxpayers.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman also indicate whether or not he believes the law as now written by virtue of the Revenue Act of 1938 does not now tax those very salaries?

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall have that point in mind.

I am particularly concerned with title II, which prevents taxes being applied retroactively to the years prior to 1939 with the exception, as I have pointed out, of that class of State or city or county employees, whoever they may be, who have been engaged in activities such as the liquor business or a municipally owned street railway, and who have always been subject to the Federal income-tax laws. There has never been any dispute about that or any question, as far as I know. All other State and municipal employees are protected against the retroactive application of the Federal income-tax laws, and naturally when we waive the immunity of the Federal Government as far as its employees are concerned we also provide that there shall be no retroactive taxes applied prior to the current year.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Briefly.

Mr. MOTT. Is the gentleman aware that if title II alone were involved here there would be no objection to the bill from anyone on either side of the House? There is no objection to title II. The objection is to the first part of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Title II came about as a result of the Gerhardt decision, and I believe there was a decision by the Supreme Court made just prior to that one—I make this statement with reservations—in which the Supreme Court stated that State employees of an insurance department concerned with the receivership of insurance companies, but whose salaries were paid out of the funds of the companies in receivership, were subject to the Federal income-tax laws. Until that decision it was generally felt that such employees were not subject to the Federal income-tax laws.

Then along came the Gerhardt decision, wherein the Supreme Court held that employees of the Port of New York Authority were subject to the Federal income-tax laws. Of course, this decision affected employees of other States of the Union and of their political subdivisions who were engaged in similar activities. For example, in my own city, the employees of the Boston Transit Commission would undoubtedly be affected and covered by the Gerhardt decision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly; I am always pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to the Gerhardt decision. Does not that decision contain an observation to the effect that the employees of the Port of New York Authority are not employees of the State of New York?

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe the Supreme Court, as I recall it, proceeded upon the reasoning that those employees were not engaged in an essential governmental function and, therefore, that was the main question in that case. The Court determined that the employees were not engaged in an essential governmental function and, therefore, were subject to the Federal income-tax laws.

I know of no one who is opposed to title II. Title II protects all State and municipal employees from the retroactive application of the Federal income-tax laws, with the exception of the limited group to which I have referred on two occasions—employees of a State-owned liquor system and employees of a municipally owned street railway.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Coming to title I, it is my opinion, for whatever it may be worth, that if it can be done, such employees should be subject to the income-tax laws of the Nation and of the State. Certainly I can see no reason why I as a Congressman should not pay an income tax in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts on the compensation I receive from the Federal Government, the same as a businessman or a professional man or any other person in Massachusetts with an income is subject to the income-tax laws of my Commonwealth.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Just briefly; I do not want to take too much time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman as a Member of Congress, having taken an oath without mental reservation to support the Constitution, believes reasonably and logically, according to his own deductions, that there is a constitutional question involved and that the Congress of the United States does not have the constitutional authority to do what we seek to do under title I, does the gentleman believe he would still be justified in voting for title I?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; and I will give my reasons. I thoroughly respect the views of any gentleman who disagrees with me and respect his right of disagreement.

We are living, fortunately, under a government which is a constitutional democracy. Under the Constitution there are three separate and coordinate branches of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. Legislation is not complete under our form of government simply with the passage of a bill by the legislative branch and its approval by the executive.

Every individual has the right to raise the question of the constitutionality of any act passed by the Congress or any legislative body, and then it goes before the courts for interpretation as to whether or not Congress or a State legislature has exceeded its constitutional authority; and I believe, if there is a reasonable doubt or if there is a fair doubt in my mind as to the constitutionality of legislation, in whole or in part, and I also feel the legislation should become law, then I believe it is my duty as a Member of this body to vote for such legislation, because the courts could not pass upon it unless the Congress had first acted.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mark you, I respect the views of any man who may entertain a contrary opinion, but we are not living under a parliamentary government like in England, where an act of Parliament is final and supreme and where the courts cannot pass upon it, and the only controlling influence is public opinion. Under our form of government legislation is never complete until it has been finally acted upon by the Supreme Court. I recall a bill where a distinguished President vetoed it because of his opinion that it was unconstitutional, and honestly so, but the Congress passed it over his veto, and the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of that act.

Mr. DUNCAN and Mr. CELLER rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee.

Mr. DUNCAN. Is it not a fact that there is no specific provision of the Constitution prohibiting the Federal taxing of State employees or the reverse, and that the Supreme Court decisions are based upon an inference of sovereignty?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; the gentleman's understanding and mine are the same.

Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am extremely anxious to answer all questions but I want to at least briefly give my views to the membership.

On title I, one might honestly entertain some question about whether Congress can tax employees of a State or city engaged in essentially governmental functions, but we can never have the question passed upon unless we pass this law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 more minute.

The Constitution uses the expression "income derived from any source," but there is no Supreme Court decision saying that any particular group of employees of a State or city are not subject to Federal income-tax laws, except inferentially. This bill, in a sense, is nothing but a reiteration of a law that has existed since 1926.

If you believe that all employees should be subject to an income-tax law, then title I should be voted for. The question of constitutionality you and I can never determine in our own minds unless we first pass a bill and then let the Supreme Court pass upon the question of whether or not the Congress had the power to enact such legislation into law. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE].

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall decline to yield until I have concluded my statement.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BOEHNE. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I want to inquire if the gentleman is declining to yield just for the moment or whether he declined to yield at any time?

Mr. BOEHNE. I think I shall use up my entire 15 minutes, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, on April 25 of last year, and again on January 19 of this year, the President of the United States urged the Congress to correct what he termed were obvious injustices in personal income taxation. His last message included the possibility of enacting legislation, which had for its purpose three things:

First, to remove the exemption either from Federal or State income tax, such income as interest from Federal, State, or municipal obligations;

Second, to remove similarly the exemption of income, whether it is received as compensation for services rendered to the Federal, State, or municipal Governments; and Third, to prevent recent judicial decisions "from operating in such a retroactive fashion as to impose tax liabilities on innocent employees and investors for salaries heretofore earned, or on income derived from securities heretofore issued."

The Committee on Ways and Means, after due deliberation, recommended to the House that the second and third of these three propositions be taken up immediately, and that the other, namely, the removal of the exemption from income tax of interest from Federal, State, and municipal obligations be afforded a more detailed study. It is quite possible that this latter study and enactment will evoke considerable objection from many fronts, and it was felt that it was important enough to be treated separately.

I shall address myself only to title I of the bill under consideration, which deals with reciprocal taxation between the United States Government and the several States as regards the salaries of the employees of these governments. I shall not discuss title II, but will leave that to those members of the committee and others who may be better equipped to explain the questions involved, as well as the legal questions involved in both titles.

In plain, ordinary language, title I simply says that the Government of the United States proposes to exercise its constitutional power as given to it under the sixteenth amendment "to tax income from whatever source derived," which means that the income-tax laws of the Federal Government will, after the effective date stated in the bill under consideration, be applicable to all employees of States, counties, and municipalities. In exchange, the Federal Government under section 3 of title I gives its consent to the taxation by the various States who have income-tax laws for personal services as an officer or employee of the United States. To put it very specifically and even more bluntly, title I will levy an income tax on all employees of the State of Indiana, and all of its governmental subdivisions, and then gives to the State of Indiana the right to levy a gross income tax on all employees of the Federal Government, whose residence is in the State of Indiana.

I doubt if there is a Member of Congress who has not received some time or other letters from constituents bemoaning the fact that we are rather lavish with the funds of the taxpayers of the United States and at the same time have exempted ourselves from the payment of any income tax whatsoever. I hope that every Member who speaks on this legislation today, either in support of it or in opposition to it, will stress the fact that not a single Member of either branch of Congress has ever or is now exempted from the payment of income taxes. It is surprising that many well-informed editors of the daily press often deride Members of Congress on this score. They would be doing a great service if they would sublimate their own intelligence to the degree of getting correct information about what they write in connection with income taxes. If they would do this, then we, as Members of Congress, would not be required to correct them either through our own correspondence or here on the floor of Congress.

It is true that Federal employees now do not and are not required to pay income taxes to the States in which they reside, and it is likewise true that State, county, and city employees, which include every person from the Governor to the lowest-paid appointive officer in a city, do not and are not required to pay a Federal income tax. It is this inequality that title I proposes to correct. It is an inequality because every other citizen of States where a State income tax is in effect is required to pay both Federal and State income taxes.

Thirty-one of the forty-eight States of the Union impose State income taxes on their citizens, which leaves 17 States imposing no income tax on wages and salaries. As the Under Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Haines, testified before the committee, any State or local employee chancing to live in any one of the 17 States is entirely tax free as far as their salaries are concerned.

We will no doubt be advised that this additional tax burden will work hardships on the small-salaried groups within States. Already letters have been received from minor employees that to subject them to additional tax would be a burden which they had neither anticipated nor as a matter of fact could afford to pay. To these and to the country at large I would like to give some figures which are very interesting, indeed.

It may not be entirely germane to this discussion to give to you the number of all employees of all governmental units in the United States. These figures are not only interesting but they also show the tremendous increase during the past few years. Naturally, the thought comes to many of us that this appalling figure should begin to show a gradual reduction. For example, in 1929, the total number of employees of all governmental units was 3,123,000; in 1930 it increased to 3,229,000; in 1931 it increased to 3,265,000; in 1934 the number was 3,337,000; and in 1937 it was 3,764,000. Thus, in this 9-year period the number has increased 641,000, or almost 21 percent. During the same period the total compensation increased from $5,386,000,000 to $5,669,000,000, or an increase of approximately 5 percent. The next interesting figure shows that the average wage has decreased during the same period from $1,725 to $1,503, or approximately 13 percent.

To break down the average wage, permit me to give you the figures for the year 1936, compiled by the National Income Section of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, by citing to you the number of employees in State and local governments. Take only the largest item, namely, that of public education. In the year 1936, under public education, there were 1,187,576 employees whose average wage was $1,244 per year. With an exemption of $1,000 for unmarried persons and with an exemption of $2,500 for married persons, it does not take a certified public accountant to recognize that the imposition of a Federal income tax on those salaries will amount to very much.

It is my understanding that by the passage of this bill only about 6 percent of all State and local employees will fall into the category of Federal income-tax payers. The committee was also advised that the best estimate that the Federal Treasury could give as to the probable revenue to be derived in this manner would not exceed $16,000,000 per year.

Therefore, you can readily see that this bill is not one to radically increase the revenues of the United States, nor that it is increasing the tax burden of those who are now paying into the Federal Treasury. Rather it is taking away the preferred status which governmental employees outside of the Federal Government have enjoyed ever since the adoption of the sixteenth amendment. Because a person has been appointed or elected to a public office is no reason why he should be placed in a preferred class. It may not be too much to hope that when all public employees will be obliged to pay their just share of the cost of government, that they then will also see the justice in the argument of the great majority of American people that the cost of government is entirely too high and that a curtailment is necessary now.

I think it can be generally agreed that even though governments have a distinct responsibility to the people, whom they serve, they cannot long endure when outgo exceeds income year after year. If we can bring every public officeholder to realize this by taxing his own salary to the limit of the law, such employees will insist that a proper balance between income and expenditure be maintained at all costs.

Of course, there will be opposition to this legislation, and it will be based upon constitutional grounds. There will be further opposition from those, who will fear the wrath of the few people who will be added as taxpayers of the Federal Government. In spite of this, however, it seems to me that no reasonable objection can be raised against any legislation that is designed to correct an inequity. Certainly the inequity is present today, and this legislation will correct it. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I realize that there is marked opposition to this measure on the Republican side. I have advocated the principles of this bill for a long time, and while the form in which it comes before the House does not please me, because I believe a constitutional amendment is the proper manner in which to deal with this subject, nevertheless I expect to support the bill. However, in view of my associates requiring more time than can be allotted them, I feel that I should yield to them rather than consume any time in favor of the measure myself. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record at this point, and I shall yield my time to various Members.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, my views upon the matter before the House are of long standing. I am not a recent convert to the proposition of eliminating tax-exempt bonds and tax-exempt salaries.

For many years I have had pending in Congress a constitutional amendment for this purpose, but, unfortunately, I have not been able to secure consideration of the subject matter. Now it is proposed to deal with the matter of eliminating tax-exempt salaries by direct legislation, without resorting to the amendment method.

On December 18, 1937, some months before the President's first message on the subject before us was sent up here, I stated:

The time has arrived when some action should be taken to remedy the situation not only with respect to tax-exempt securities but also with respect to tax-exempt salaries.

At that time the indication was that the amendment method was the only means by which this could be done.

Since that time the Supreme Court has decided the Gerhardt case, involving the employees of the New York Port Authority.

In that decision the Court adopted certain reasoning in holding the port authorities taxable that could be applied generally to all public employees, namely, that the effect of subjecting them to nondiscriminatory taxation did not impose a burden on the State itself.

Inasmuch as the immunity of public employees from taxation does not rest upon any express constitutional provision, but from an implied immunity supplied by the Court, it is quite probable that if the question is squarely presented to the Court it would reexamine the whole immunity doctrine and reverse its previous decisions in the matter, at least insofar as they relate to taxation of a nondiscriminatory character.

I have never felt that by subjecting State employees to the same taxes that other citizens of the United States must bear there is any danger to the continued existence of the sovereign States. Likewise, the taxation of Federal employees by the States, at the same rates paid by other citizens, in no way threatens the existence of the Federal Government. This is substantially the view now taken by the Supreme Court in the Gerhardt case.

So far as the effect of the bill on State and municipal employees themselves is concerned, I may say that, because of the existing exemptions under Federal income tax laws, only about 6 percent of the total number will have to pay Federal income tax, and the total amount of revenue involved is only $16,000,000.

Last year, after the President submitted his first message on the question of tax-exempt bonds and salaries, I stated to the House that if the problem of tax exemption could be dealt with by legislation alone I would be glad to support the President's proposal. I further stated that I nevertheless believed that the best and most certain way to handle it would be by the submission of a constitutional amendment to the States. While, as I have said, I shall support the pending bill, I still feel that the amendment method is the better of the two methods of dealing with the question.

It has been held out that there is an emergency requiring the early passage of the pending bill, and that has been the excuse for haste. However, the only real emergency is with respect to title II, relating to the possibility of retroactive taxation of certain State and municipal employees under the Gerhardt decision. It is necessary to have the situation clarified before March 15 as to just what State and municipal employees are affected by the Gerhardt decision. It is also necessary to take steps to prevent the retroactive collection of taxes from any State employees who heretofore have been considered exempt from Federal income tax, but who might come within the purview of the Gerhardt decision.

I would strongly favor the separation of the two titles, with a view to passing the retroactive feature at this time and deferring consideration of title I until further study has been given to the matter.

I shall vote for an amendment to strike title I from the bill, but if it is retained I nevertheless expect to support the bill on final passage.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time at my disposal I shall address myself to only one reason why this measure should not pass. In the consideration of this bill we are considering principles we will be called upon to apply very soon to other legislation which will come before us. Emphasis will be laid upon the fact that this is only to tax employees of the States and the Federal Government, but the principle involved extends much further than that. When the income-tax amendment was proposed in 1910, there existed the immunity rule governing taxation of the States by the Federal Government, and of the Federal Government by the States. It may be found in the report of the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113). It is this:

It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the General Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the State from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication, and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation, as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government.

That, gentlemen, is what is known as the immunity rule. It prevents a State government from taxing the instrumentalities of the Federal Government and prevents the Federal Government from taxing the instrumentalities of a State government. And it has been the law of this land and it has been a part of our constitutional system ever since the decision of the great Chief Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch against Maryland, one of the classics in American constitutional law. It was in that case that Daniel Webster, as one of counsel, created the phrase that "An unlimited power to tax involves necessarily a power to destroy." That language was adopted by Chief Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch against Maryland, and that case illustrates how the power to tax can be used by any government to destroy the instrumentalities of another.

The enactment of this measure will violate a compact between the Government of the United States and many of the States. You will not find such a compact in any written instrument. You will not find any convention that created it, but you will find it in the correspondence between Elihu Root and the president of the Senate of the State of New York, published in volume 45, part 3, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 2539, and you will find it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 45, part 2, page 1694, in the observations of the great Senator from Idaho, WILLIAM E. BORAH. Both were United States Senators at the time and were urging the adoption of the income-tax amendment.

Senator BORAH addressed the Senate for an hour or more for the purpose of assuring the Governors of the States that the sixteenth amendment would not change the immunity which essential State agencies had from Federal taxation. At that time it was proposed by the Congress, in order to provide additional revenue, that the machinery of taxation should be facilitated by the removal of the limitation that taxes should be apportioned among the States. In other words, the income-tax amendment was proposed to facilitate the collection of taxes by the Federal Government. The Governor of New York, now the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, expressed the opinion that the use of the words "from whatever source derived" might give the Federal Government the right to trespass upon the immunity law and that under it instrumentalities of the States might be taxed by the Federal Government and their existence threatened. Mr. Root explained that the immunity law had always been the law of the land, and always would be, and would not be affected by the proposed amendment, and on the assurances given at that time by these two great Senators, the State of New York, and perhaps other States, adopted the amendment giving the Federal Government the power to tax incomes. And we have lived under that understanding and agreement ever since. Today, if we pass this law, we violate that assurance and that understanding. I am not saying that I do not favor the taxing of State employees in the manner proposed, but what I do say is that when the Congress of the United States obtains the approval of a constitutional amendment by a sovereign State with an understanding such as existed when the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, then the only way to change the resulting situation is by the same solemn method, and what the Congress of the United States should do, if it keeps faith with its sisterhood of States, is to present this proposition through a constitutional amendment, and allow the States to determine if that situation should be altered. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, we are asked today to discuss in 3 hours a matter on which days and weeks and months have been consumed throughout the history of this Nation. At least one of the two major political parties of this Nation was founded upon the doctrine of State sovereignty and State independence. That question is immediately before us in this particular bill. I presume, because of my defense of the sovereignty and independence of the States of this Union, I may be known as a State rights Republican; but to my knowledge the Republican Party has never advocated the destruction of the sovereignty of the States by force of the Federal power to tax, or otherwise.

This bill, according to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], presents solely a legal question. I think that Members on both sides probably sense that there are certain inequities and that they can be removed. Government functions are becoming more complex every day, and there should be some general rule laid down for reciprocal taxation if it can be done within the Constitution; but it is not the province of this Congress to violate its collective oath of office, taken on the first day of the convening of this Congress, to do that. The courts have already laid down certain rules and applied them. I am firm in my conviction that in none of the decisions which has been handed down—and I refer especially to the case of Helvering against Gerhardt—do I find any recent change in the long line of opinions by the Supreme Court that where an officer or employee of a State is engaged in a function which is indispensable to the maintenance of the sovereignty and independence of that State, the Federal Government has no constitutional right to tax that individual. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I cannot.

If the Congress of the United States, under those decisions, McCulloch, Day, Gerhardt, and as late as the Stillwell case handed down by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, in which it says that the Gerhardt case does not change or amend or modify in any respect these earlier decisions, should pass this bill, it would violate its oath of office.

The only point I can make in these 7 minutes allotted to me is this: That if there is a constitutional prohibition against the levying of taxes against a State official it can only be changed by a constitutional amendment. I will take as an outstanding example a secretary of state. There should be no question but that he is involved in an indispensable State function. We by this act seek to tax the salary of a secretary of state. The United States Supreme Court in all the decisions say that we cannot do it under the Constitution. Therefore, you ask us to do something in this bill in direct violation of the oath of office which we took on the first day of this session, without any mental reservation whatsoever to uphold that Constitution. We have an obligation. We have responsibilities when questions like these come up, and it is our duty to submit those questions to the people for amendment to that Constitution.

When there is reasonable doubt as to the constitutionality of any bill which we may pass here, it is our constitutional duty to uphold the Constitution and to vote against that bill. I refer to a very recent occasion when we were asked to pass a certain bill, regardless of the reasonableness on any doubt as to its constitutionality. Immediately there was a surge of popular resentment against the action of Congress in passing an act which it reasonably concluded to be unconstitutional. You gentlemen today who denounced that action in respect to the Guffey coal bill are putting yourselves in a very incongruous position by voting for this bill. [Applause.] How can you denounce the one and justify the other? You just cannot do it, and if there is any question about whether the Supreme Court stands today where it always has stood with respect to taxation by the Federal Government of the salaries of State officers and employees, I want you to read those cases as I have read them, and as others who have read them who are interested in this fundamental question. There is a fundamental question involved in this bill. It is a question as to whether the dual system of democratic government under which we have lived for 150 years will be preserved. I for one will not vote to let the camel, who in this case is the Federal Government, get his head under the tent, which in this case is the State government. Once you let him get his head under there he may destroy the whole system. Now,

I do not say there is any danger of the destruction of this dual system of democratic government by this act standing alone; but we do know that we will be establishing a precedent whereby, because the power to tax involves the power to destroy, regulate, or coerce, future Congresses may think they have a constitutional prerogative to pass bills which may be destructive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I am not here to express doubt as to the constitutionality of this measure; I am here to express the views of those in my district who believe that this measure is so important, so fundamental, that it should be placed before the people by constitutional amendment. I am not here to express myself provincially, but there is in the legislature of my fair State a member of French-Canadian descent who on numerous occasions rises on the floor and says in loud tones, his arms far-spread out to the side: "There is too golden many lawyers in this assembly; there should be more of the common people."

I am one of the common people, and I highly respect the views of the lawyers in this gathering here, especially those who have studied the subject, as has my predecessor in this Well.

The committee report states that this bill provides in a clear and unequivocal manner for such taxation. I am speaking of title I. If there are any possible doubts as to the validity of this taxation, the bill thus enables the issue to be squarely presented to the Supreme Court. In this connection I shall read to you a portion of a resolution adopted by the city council, known as the city board of directors of the city of Pasadena, Calif., my home town. Remember as you hear this that these gentlemen are paid the munificent salary of $50 per month. They are not themselves, therefore, involved in this legislation to any considerable extent. They speak on behalf of the people and of the city employees. They say in these resolutions:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Board of Directors of the City of Pasadena:

(1) Condemn as unfair, oppressive, and un-American the imposition of retroactive taxes upon the income from municipal bonds and municipal salaries;

(2) Condemn the unwarranted extension of Federal power and the weakening of local government through the taxation of income from municipal bonds to be issued in the future;

(3) Urge that if equitable and nonretroactive taxation of the income from municipal salaries hereafter be contemplated, such taxation be authorized only on the condition that the State be afforded the reciprocal right to tax income from the Federal salaries and from Federal securities;

(4) Are convinced that the radical change in relationship between local and Federal Government that is inherent in current efforts to tax municipal securities and salaries should be accomplished only by sanction of the people as a whole, expressed through well-considered amendment of the Constitution and not by judicial lawmaking.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hands a sheaf of resolutions substantially the same in purport and intent as that which I have just read. Among these are resolutions of the City Council of Glendale, Calif., City Council of the City of Los Angeles, a resolution of the Municipal Fiscal Officers of Southern California, a resolution of the League of California Municipalities, Los Angeles Fire and Police Protective League, the Civil Service Protective League, Los Angeles Water and Power Employees Association of the City of Los Angeles, and I also have letters and resolutions of similar import from many other individuals and associations, including associations and groups of school teachers and municipal employees in my district.

To the best of my knowledge none of these oppose the proposition of reciprocal taxation of salaries by Federal and State Governments, but almost without exception these resolutions and letters oppose such taxation by judicial legislation and favor the orderly process of submission of the question to the States through a suitable amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

It may be that this bill shall pass. If it does not, there have been introduced in this House many bills to prevent the retroactive application of any Federal tax upon the salaries of employees of the States and their instrumentalities. There have been introduced joint resolutions for submission of a suitable amendment to the Constitution, giving full authority to accomplish in a constitutional manner the present purposes of title I of this act—H. R. 3790.

I shall vote to defeat this bill, not because I am opposed to the reciprocal taxation of governmental employees by Federal and State Governments. On the contrary, I am in favor of the proposition, but I will so vote because I believe that this bill goes about the matter in the wrong way, and because, if it is defeated, there can then come upon the floor H. R. 1791, or another suitable resolution, to prevent the retroactive-taxation feature, and a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment, such as House Joint Resolution 106, which, upon being suitably prepared, should, in my judgment, be submitted to the States. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] made the opening argument, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] interpolated the statement that most of the editorial opinion and comment was in favor of this bill. There may be small comfort for those who read the Gallup poll in that it shows that 80 percent of the people interviewed stated they were in favor of this tax. If the Gallup poll question had been fairly phrased as to whether or not this tax should be imposed by methods that are of doubtful constitutionality, the answer would have been an overwhelming "no." [Applause.] That is what it would have been. The reason the Republican side of the House is filled up in the Seventy-sixth Congress in large part is because the people of this country are still mindful of the Constitution and the constitutional responsibilities of Members of Congress. You whose hearts are filled with a species of political trepidation today just bear that in mind and you can make your people understand it. There is probably no Member of this House who does not believe that there should be absolute equity and impartiality of taxation as between those in public office and those in private pursuits, but in this case, the question is whether it shall be done in conformity with the Constitution or by doubtful methods.

There are three reasons why I am against this bill in its present form. The first reason is that I do not believe the Congress has the power, and I am not going to vote for a bill to prohibit the Treasury from imposing a retroactive tax when I have not even admitted in the first place that they had that authority. [Applause.] That is what you are going to do. It seems quite elementary to me that one is not constrained to deny that which he does not admit. On the basis of present decisions, I do not believe the Treasury has authority to tax State salaries. Why should one vote to prohibit it from so doing?

They predicate this action on the case of Helvering against Gerhardt. I am not going into it at great length, but will just make this observation on the feature of constitutionality. That observation springs from the very recent case of Commissioner of Internal Revenue against Stillwell, decided by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting in the city of Chicago. That decision was handed down in the January 1939 session. It deals directly with the authority of the Federal Government to tax a statutory State officer. In that case, the court carefully analyzed all Supreme Court decisions bearing on this matter and carefully pointed out in what respect such cases as Helvering against Gerhardt and Helvering against Threll were decided.

The justice who wrote that opinion was a respected Member of this Congress and sat on the Democratic side of the aisle. He was a very devoted servant of the administration when he was here, and you will remember him as J. Earl Major, of Illinois. Notwithstanding the Helvering against Gerhardt and other decisions, I shall content myself by reading just a portion of this decision handed down in the seventh Federal circuit dealing with the effort of the Treasury to tax the fees of a master in chancery who was a statutory State officer who got his fees not from the State but from the litigants. There was not even a burden upon the State, let alone a substantial burden on which to determine the case. In commenting upon the decision in Helvering against Gerhardt, the court said:

We are unable to find any language in this (Helvering v. Gerhardt) opinion which appears to us as persuasive, and certainly there is none which is conclusive that a court officer, such as a master in chancery, should be denied immunity, and we think the source of the official compensation is immaterial. * * * It is worthy of notice that the court referred to and commented upon the case of Collector v. Day in as many as four instances. It would seem that if the court intended to place any limitation upon the doctrine as promulgated in that case it had every opportunity to so do. In place of doing so, we think it is a fair inference, even if not expressly stated, that the doctrine was reaffirmed.

That decision was rendered in the January term, 1939, by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, sitting in Chicago, Ill. That decision is a reaffirmation of the doctrine laid down in Collector against Day in 1870, and I cannot ignore that opinion, because it is well reasoned and logical.

Mr. Chairman, that is enough for me, coming from my own State, to vote against this bill. To ignore such a recent and forceful decision from my own State would be to ignore the whole question of constitutionality, and I would be derelict to my oath of office and remiss in my duty if I did so.

Secondly, so far as my State is concerned, and the other 17 that have no personal income-tax laws, there is nothing reciprocal about this measure. Within the State of Illinois, according to Treasury figures for 1937, there are 143,517 State, county, and municipal officers. Within the State of Illinois are 47,345 Federal employees who get their pay checks from the Federal Government. These Federal pay checks will aggregate about $93,000,000 per year. Now, then, the latter will not have to pay a State income tax in Illinois because we do not have a State income-tax law and we cannot get one, due to the fact that, according to the best tax opinion, our constitution does not permit a classified income tax. However, the 143,000 State, county, and municipal employees will be taxed under the pending bill if they are within the taxable brackets, so that there is a unilateral rather than a reciprocal tax, with all the benefits accruing to the Federal Government and none to the State government. Certainly there is nothing reciprocal about that.

Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of making one of the nurses in a State hospital pay a tax to the Federal Government and allowing a nurse in the veterans' hospital in Illinois to escape State taxation. I am not in favor of making a district attorney pay a tax to Uncle Sam and letting the Federal district attorney escape a State tax because we cannot put it on the books. I am opposed to making a chemist in the State water board pay a tax to Uncle Sam when we cannot tax a chemist who will be working in the United States research laboratory when it is built.

I am opposed to having Uncle Sam tax an employee of the State forestry service without a reciprocal right of the State to tax an employee of the Federal Forestry Service. A sheriff would pay a Federal tax under this bill but a G-man would pay no State tax. A doctor in the State health department would pay a tax under this bill, but a doctor in the United States Health Service would pay no tax to the State on his salary. Manifestly, that would be unfair and inequitable, and, for the moment, we are powerless to alter that situation by virtue of a constitutional inhibition.

Finally, and the third reason, I am not going to put myself on the spot when the sister bill comes in to tax State and local securities. Vote for this and you will have no logical reason not to vote for a bill to tax the revenue received from State and municipal securities. The long term bonded indebtedness in Illinois, State, local, and municipal, is about $1,045,000,000 today. I have figured, and I think Professor Lutz, who is professor of public finances, of Princeton, has figured that ultimately if we seek to carry an equivalent debt, which is taxable, it will cost the taxpayers of the State of Illinois $11,000,000 a year more than it does at the present time. I am not going to saddle that kind of a burden upon the cities, counties, the State, school districts, sanitary districts, and the other taxing bodies of Illinois, because it is going to come out of the jeans of the taxpayer. Make no mistake about that. If you approve this bill today, how are you going to justify voting against a bill to put that kind of a burden upon State securities when that bill ultimately comes before this Congress? I believe the pending measure is just a forerunner to that bill. There is only $16,000,000 involved in this one, but there is in it the principle, and forget not that the people of the country are still conscious of their Constitution. [Applause.]

Let me reaffirm that no Member of this House is averse to having county clerks, policemen, firemen, school teachers, mail carriers, Congressmen, and all other elective and appointive officials bear their same proportionate burden of taxation as every other citizen in the land. In fact, therein lies the appeal for the pending measure.

But until the separate States have assented to the imposition of taxes by the Federal Government through the medium of a constitutional amendment, it should not be done. The bill before us today carries in it a precedent which if followed to its logical conclusion may not destroy the States but may cripple and restrict them in the exercise of State and local functions to the point where the name of a State will be little more than a convenient way of designating a geographical area of this country. If you are ready for such an extreme departure in government, then support this bill. I shall oppose it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the opponents of this measure have apparently forgotten that the purpose of the proposed legislation is to clear up confusion as to the liability of State, Federal, and local employees with reference to taxation reciprocally by the States and the Federal Government. The gentleman from Illinois, who just preceded me, read at some length from a decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. I call his attention and the attention of the minority and all of you, in fact, to a decision on exactly the same subject rendered last year in the case of Saxe v. Shea by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (98 F. (2d) 83). One case dealt with the fees of a master in chancery; the other with similar fees paid to a referee or special guardian. Appointments were made by the court in each instance, and appellants were paid by court order out of the estate or fund under the court's control. Each case referred to both Collector against Day and Helvering against Gerhardt and the conclusions reached were directly opposite.

Justice Swan, speaking for the court in the second circuit case—Saxe against Shea—stated that:

In that opinion (Helvering v. Gerhardt) Mr. Justice Stone noted particularly that the immunity is narrowly restricted in cases where the burden of a tax, collected not from a State treasury but from individual taxpayers, is said to be passed on to the State. His language is as follows:

"In these cases the function has been either held or assumed to be of such a character that its performance by the State is immune from direct Federal interference; yet the individuals who personally derived profit or compensation from their employment in carrying out the function were deemed to be subject to Federal income tax."

He then proceeds to discuss two guiding principles of limitation for holding the tax immunity of State instrumentalities to its proper function, the second of which, exemplified by those cases where the tax laid upon individuals affects the State only as the burden is passed on to it by the taxpayer, "forbids recognition of the immunity when the burden on the State is so speculative and uncertain that if allowed it would restrict the Federal taxing power without affording any corresponding tangible protection to the State government."

Justice Swan further stated:

This limiting principle we believe to be controlling of the case at bar. None of the appellant's compensation came from the State treasury; it was paid by the parties litigant or out of an estate under the court's control. By no possibility can the imposition of the tax increase to the State the cost of administering justice; conceivably an income tax upon the salary of a judge paid from the State treasury may require the official's salary to be correspondingly raised in order to obtain his consent to serve and thereby increase the cost to the State of its judicial department. But this cannot happen in the case of a referee or special guardian whose compensation is paid by the litigants.

Mr. Chairman, when we have two decisions as conflicting as these are with reference to special officers appointed by a court, it seems to me it is clearly within the province of this body to lay down what it considers should be the rule. This is only one example of conflict in our jurisprudence and I cite it solely to answer the argument of the gentleman from Illinois. But it does indicate that we should pass legislation to permit the Supreme Court to definitively rule on the general subject.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman realizes that the decisions of a particular circuit court of appeals control the courts within that circuit. If there is a decision in the second district and another decision in the seventh district, the Government has the right to appeal either one of those decisions and bring the matter to the Supreme Court to be settled, just exactly as it is claimed the Government is doing in the Bridges case. The gentleman's statement is on all fours, so far as procedure is concerned, with the Bridges and the Strecker case.

Mr. BUCK. Just a minute. I yielded for a question. The gentleman can get time of his own.

Mr. MICHENER. It seems to me that is very important. The gentleman takes the position that Congress should act rather than let the Court act on the facts.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman realizes and knows as well as I do that if either of these decisions goes up to the Supreme Court a decision will be rendered only on the particular facts involved.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman said the cases were on all fours.

Mr. BUCK. They are. The cases involved fees of court appointees in litigation before the respective courts. If either of the cases goes up to the Supreme Court, that is all that will be decided. Those of us who have presented this bill believe it is important that a decision be reached on the general, fundamental, underlying principle. Those who have opposed this bill, as the gentleman from Michigan may, quite conscientiously, no doubt—

Mr. MICHENER. No; I am very much in favor of the purpose of the bill. The only thing that stands in the way at all is the constitutional part. I do not know yet just how I am going to vote.

Mr. BUCK. I am sure I should like to illuminate the gentleman's mind on that.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. BUCK. The value of an affirmative decision by Congress on the question of Federal taxation of officers of States and their subdivisions lies in the fact that the tax would be supported by the presumption of constitutionality attaching to a law passed by Congress and passed by its deliberate judgment after debate. Passing this bill will remove any argument that Congress intended the revenue act as it now exists to be construed in the light of past judicial precedents or Treasury regulations of the past.

The decision on which those who argued against this bill in committee rested most conclusively was the old case of Collector against Day, decided in 1870. Since that time we not only have ratified the sixteenth amendment, which provides that Congress may levy taxes on incomes from whatever source derived but in the income-tax law of 1926 we forgave all past assessments against State, city, and municipal employees, thereby implying that they should have been levied against them—they had been so levied against some. Congress put broad language into that act under which, undoubtedly, except for the Treasury regulations which have been adopted since and the judicial precedents heretofore created, the Bureau of Internal Revenue could go out and levy, assess, and collect Federal income taxes against these State employees.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. I sympathize with the gentleman's point of view, but does the gentleman believe it is fair just to lift out of the text of the sixteenth amendment the words "from whatever source derived" and say the sixteenth amendment means you can tax any kind of income or any kind of instrumentality? Does not the gentleman believe it is fair to take into consideration all the circumstances out of which the sixteenth amendment sprang? Was not the primary purpose of the sixteenth amendment to take out the so-called apportionment, which was unworkable? Was not the Governor of the State of New York, Governor Hughes, assured that it did not mean what the Governor is saying now? The Governor was so assured solemnly by Senator BORAH and by Senator ROOT, of my State.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman has asked about six questions there, and I know he will have time of his own later to discuss them. I have not time enough now to cover them.

Mr. CELLER. I am going to vote for the bill. I sympathize with the gentleman.

Mr. BUCK. Whatever was the interpretation of the sixteenth amendment and whatever were the circumstances under which it was adopted, the language is there, "from whatever source derived," and as to this particular situation taxation of State employees engaged in essential governmental functions; it has never received a final judicial interpretation. In other words, a case arising under this bill, if it becomes law, will go to the Supreme Court under entirely different circumstances, and I know the gentleman will agree with me on that—

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BUCK. It will go to the Supreme Court under different conditions than any other case that has been before the Court for an interpretation of the meaning of the sixteenth amendment.

May I say that beyond that, the retroactive features we have put in the bill avoid any appeal based upon the due-process clause, and when we add the provision found in section 3 waiving immunity of Federal employees from State income taxation we have eliminated any question of a discriminatory tax being placed upon State and municipal employees.

Mr. CELLER. If the gentleman will yield further, does the gentleman believe that Collector against Day is still the law or has it been reversed in any particular? I am curious about this because so much depends on it.

Mr. BUCK. Collector against Day has never been expressly overruled. It must be remembered it arose under a Civil War tax law, however, not the sixteenth amendment, and was decided in 1870. There are intimations in the Helvering against Gerhardt decision and the decision immediately preceding it, that the Court would be glad to reexamine under new circumstances the principles laid down in Collector against Day.

Mr. CELLER. As I recall the Gerhardt case, Judge Stone seemed to imply beyond peradventure of a doubt that Collector against Day was still the law of the land, and that he would not depart from it. In many instances they mention in that very case the case of Collector against Day, and under no circumstances do they seek to whittle away the import of Collector against Day. This is what troubles me, and I should like to get some enlightenment on the point.

Mr. BUCK. In the Gerhardt case the Court went to great lengths to distinguish between an officer and an employee. Was not this due to a desire to refrain at that time from examining Collector against Day? Every reason advanced by the Court in that case to refuse immunity to the State employees may well apply to a State officer.

Since the Court obviously refrained from approving Collector against Day, it is at least reasonable to believe that the Court may well consider that the Federal taxing power can reach officers as well as employees of a State. It is begging the question to ask if Collector against Day has been overruled. There has been no opportunity to overrule it, or reconsider it so far, and there will be none unless this legislation is passed. We should allow the Supreme Court to review the case and refresh its consideration of the fundamental principles involved by enacting this law.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am not competent to discuss and to analyze the judicial opinions relating to the constitutionality of this proposal or similar proposals, and therefore I shall not attempt to do so. I wish to approach the question more from the standpoint of the soundness of the governmental structure. I believe laymen can understand a question of that kind, and that it should be made clear.

The gentleman from Indiana has stated, as I recollect, that if the Federal Government were to impose income taxes upon the employees of States and their subordinate divisions only about 6 percent of those State and municipal employees would be actually affected and a total of only $16,000,000 of revenue would accrue to the Federal Government as a result of this.

So, Mr. Chairman, for an objective which is pitifully trivial, we are asked to change our form of government. A pitifully trivial objective is to tempt us to accomplish, in effect, a revolution in the relationship which has existed between the Federal Government upon one side and the States upon the other for over 150 years. [Applause.]

Now, let us look into this for a moment. Our Federal Union of States, I think, is the only one of its kind in the world. We have been careful during all these generations to preserve this system of dual sovereignty. The Federal Government possesses sovereignty granted to it originally by the sovereign States, and in the exercise of that sovereignty, which is high and important, it performs its functions and its services. Each State in the Union possesses sovereignty, and in the exercise of it performs functions and services which the Federal Government cannot perform and which each State by right performs.

The Governor of the State of New York, an officer of the State, performs certain services imposed upon him by the constitution of the State and by the laws of the State. When he does so he is not acting and living as an individual, he is acting and living as an officer of a sovereign State and every act of his is the act of the agent of the sovereign. You propose, under title I of this bill, to tax the agent of the sovereignty of New York. You propose to tax the governorship of New York and in the same breath, you propose in this bill to permit the State of New York to tax the Presidency of the United States, for you provide that the State of New York shall have permission to turn around and tax any Federal employee residing in her borders. It so happens, and I merely use this as illustrative, that the present occupant of the White House resides in the State of New York.

Have we reached the point in our governmental evolution, if I can use that phrase, where the Congress of the United States declare the doctrine that the State of New York, as such, can tax the Presidency of the United States? If so, we have accomplished a revolution in the relationship between two sovereignties.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? How does that attack the sovereignty of either the State of New York or the United States? The tax would have to be equally apportioned and would have to be equal under all similar circumstances. If the President of the United States gets $75,000 a year, everybody else getting that same amount would be taxed in the same way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It makes no difference what the rate of the tax is. It may be only a penny out of a thousand dollars; it is the principle involved.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield; I only have a few moments.

You will have set up an amazing state of affairs, and you are doing it to achieve an objective of trifling proportions.

Now, the thing does not stop here with salaries, as other men have said upon this floor. If the House of Representatives is to give its support to this measure, as a matter of consistency and logic, the House of Representatives must give its support to the measure still to follow which would impose a Federal tax upon the income from State and municipal bonds. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I welcome an opportunity to support this legislation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] said a few moments ago that the Judiciary Committee of this House has had this matter under consideration for approximately 15 years. I did not know it was that long, but I do know that I introduced what I thought was the first resolution 8 or 9 years ago to bring about what this bill seeks to accomplish. I never was able to get the action from the Judiciary Committee that I desired.

This bill results from recent decisions of the Supreme Court which indicate that the Congress has the right under the sixteenth amendment to do what the Court had said in the past it could not do. Now, there is more involved in this resolution than simply State and Federal employees, and I am going to cite two outstanding examples.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a second.

In my own State we had an insurance case which involved millions and millions of dollars. The insurance commissioner employed several attorneys and assigned them as his legal representatives in connection with the case. None was employed by the State. I do not know the exact amount, but I do know that fees involving almost $500,000 were paid to four or five men as the result of this employment and only 2 weeks ago they were here in Washington before the Board of Tax Appeals contending that as they were employed by an instrumentality of the State of Missouri they were, in effect, State employees and the fees they received in connection with that case were not subject to the Federal income tax law. Now another matter. I do not know whether anyone has discussed what happened in reference to the decision with respect to an engineer, I think it was, who had received fees from the Port of New York Authority. The Supreme Court rendered a decision in this case and immediately following the decision the legal adviser of a great banking association sent a letter to the officials of the banks, members of the association, in which he told them that in his opinion, after thoroughly analyzing the decision of the Supreme Court, all the officials and employees of those banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System were not subject to the State income tax, because he held that the Federal Reserve System, of which their banks were members, was an instrumentality of the Federal Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I regret I only have a few minutes. Mr. Chairman, I was never interested in a piece of legislation since I have been a Member of this House that has been more universally praised throughout the country in the news columns, and the editorials of our great metropolitan papers, than the effort to equalize the tax burdens by requiring State employees to pay a Federal income tax and the Federal employees to pay State income tax. The only complaint I ever received was an anonymous communication, and it evidently came from one who would undoubtedly be required to pay a State income tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy following the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. I understand they have an income tax in Missouri of only 1 percent. He would get by easily, would he not? One hundred dollars and the deductions might make it even less. In Massachusetts the rate is 6 percent—a tax of $600, but I do not personally worry about that, because under the New Deal treatment my losses and deductions are so heavy that I would not have to pay enough to give me concern. But we pay plenty of other kinds of taxes. What a vast difference there will be in the treatment accorded in your various States. Some of you will hear later from your several States, because this bill will prove to be anything but reciprocal. Varieties of classes of incomes may be possible, and we find that municipalities often tax salaries as well as the States themselves. I once served on a tax committee to revalue real estate, and to tax salaries on income over $2,000. Our difficulty was to find out how much the salary or the income might be when no compulsory returns were required. There is no trouble about finding about the salary of public officials. In one instance, although the town was a rather large one, we found only one Federal official of a taxable status, and guessed that a couple of doctors might be assessed, because they appeared to enjoy lucrative practices. We dared not guess further. Federal salaries will be a good thing to have in some local municipalities in States that have no income tax. I invite you new Members to read the debate of January in 1923, when we were placed on record regarding a constitutional amendment for reciprocal taxes after long debate; it will be very illuminating.

Read that record and note that only 13 Democrats voted for it. It will present a very different picture. You would not recognize the Democratic Party of today. They suggest that reciprocal taxation of tax exempts may follow, but if we read that debate we suspect that they might fall in line and follow their former leaders, like Garrett of Tennessee and others who strenuously opposed the idea. There is much in this debate today that might be regarded as demagoguery. The proposition is now before us because of the feeling that the Supreme Court is now so constituted that former decisions may be overruled. Apparently it was not presented before because of the belief that it would certainly be declared unconstitutional. Let me close by repeating that I do not worry about my own tax, for so long as the New Deal is in power I shall be unable to prevent losses and shall not be subject myself to any great amount of tax. [Laughter and applause.]

MR. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

MR. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the enactment of this legislation. In my judgment it is just as futile for Congress to enact this type of revenue-producing legislation prior to the adoption of a permissive constitutional amendment as it was for Congress to enact the original Federal income-tax law, prior to the adoption of the sixteenth amendment.

I am convinced that the Federal Government can neither impose nor collect such a tax as is proposed, lawfully, without a constitutional amendment.

I recall, as do some of you, the historic debates incident to the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, in which the distinguished Senators Root and Borah and Brown and Bailey and others were participants. What was said then with respect to that amendment is applicable to the present situation, and it may well be repeated that such legislation as is presented to us for consideration does "violence to the rules laid down by the Supreme Court for a hundred years," and if enacted would "wrench the whole Constitution from its harmonious proportions and destroy the object and purpose for which the whole instrument was formed."

In a long line of judicial decisions it has been held over and over again, either specifically or impliedly, that Congress possesses no constitutional power or authority to levy such taxes as are contemplated by this act.

The first 10 amendments to the Constitution, commonly known as the Bill of Rights, were adopted in order to quiet the apprehension that, without some such declaration, the Government would assume, and might be held to possess, the power to trespass upon those rights of persons and property, which by the Declaration of Independence were affirmed to be unalienable rights (Monongahela Nav. Co. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 312, 324 (1893)).

They were not intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply to embody certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had from time immemorial been subject to certain well-recognized exceptions arising from the necessities of the case. In incorporating these principles into the fundamental law there was no intention of disregarding the exceptions, which continued to be recognized as if they had been formally expressed (Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281 (1897)).

The tenth amendment to the Constitution states:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

The scope and purpose of this tenth amendment is cogently set forth by the Supreme Court when it says:

The reservation to the States, respectively, can only mean the reservation of the rights of sovereignty which they respectively possessed before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and which they had not parted from by that instrument (Gordon v. U. S., 117 U. S. 697, 705 (1884); see also United States ex rel. Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 295 (1904); United States v. Butler, 297 U. S. 1 (1936)).

The men who drew and adopted this amendment had experienced the embarrassments resulting from the insertion of the word "expressly" in the Articles of Confederation, and probably omitted it to avoid those embarrassments. (See McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 404 (1819).)

This amendment * * * disclosed the widespread fear that the National Government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act. * * * Its principle purpose was not the distribution of power between the United States and the States, but a reservation to the people of all powers not granted (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 90 (1907)).

And, while it is confessedly difficult to mark the precise boundaries of that power, or to indicate, by any general rule the exact limitations which the States must observe in its exercise, the existence of such a power in the States has been uniformly recognized by the Supreme Court. (See Keller v. United States, 213 U. S. 138 (1909), citing Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501 (1879); Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1 (1824); Thurlow v. Massachusetts (license cases), 5 Howard, 504 (1847); Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713 (1866); Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259 (1876); Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465 (1878); Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25 (1878).)

It is a familiar rule of construction of the Constitution of the United States that the sovereign powers vested in the State governments by their respective constitutions remained unaltered and unimpaired, except so far as they were granted to the Government of the United States. That the intention of the framers of the Constitution in this respect might not be misunderstood this rule of interpretation is expressly declared in the tenth article of the amendments (Buffington (Collector) v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 114 (1871)).

And such article added nothing to the instrument as originally ratified and has no limited and special operation upon the people's delegation by article V of certain functions to the Congress (United States v. Sprague, 282 U. S. 716, 733 (1931)).

A State has the same undeniable and unlimited jurisdiction over all persons and things, within its territorial limits, as any foreign nation; where that jurisdiction is not surrendered or restrained by the Constitution of the United States. That, by virtue of this, it is not only the right but the bounden and solemn duty of a State to advance the safety, happiness, and prosperity of its people, and to provide for its general welfare by any and every act of legislation which it may deem to be conducive to these ends; where the power over the particular subject or the manner of its exercise is not surrendered or restrained in the manner just stated. That all those powers which relate to merely municipal legislation, or what may, perhaps, more properly be called internal police, are not thus surrendered or restrained; and that consequently, in relation to these, the authority of a State is complete, unqualified, and exclusive (New York v. Miln, 11 Pct. 102, 138 (1837)).

The tenth amendment may be effective either to condemn a particular exercise of Federal authority, as without constitutional basis, or to uphold an exercise of State authority as against the challenge of conflict with the Federal Constitution. The primary question in either case is the constitutional existence or scope of the Federal power exercised or challenged.

The Supreme Court in Buffington (Collector) v. Day (11 Wall. 113 (1871)) specifically held that a Federal law imposing an "income tax" on the salary of a State judge was invalid as in effect an invasion of the State reserved powers.

In this Buffington case the Court cited the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533) with approval insofar as the Court therein had stated that—

The reserved rights of the States, such as the right to pass laws; to give effect to laws through executive action; to administer justice through the courts, and to employ all necessary agencies for legitimate purposes of State government, are not proper subjects of the taxing power of Congress.

One quotation from the opinion of the Court in the Buffington case is particularly applicable to the question under discussion today, it being the following:

It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the General Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation; as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?

I repeat what I have said in days gone by with respect to the undeniable fact that never were those in favor of centralization of power in the Federal Government more active than in these very days. The lifeblood of the States is being insidiously sapped by leechlike governmental agencies whose number is legion. The eventual disintegration of the body politic and the loss of the identity of the several States is most seriously threatened. But the States will not submit if they be but aroused to a realizing sense of what confronts them. They cannot be bought for sixteen millions. They can see the forests, despite the trees.

The sixteenth amendment, which states that—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Has been held by the Supreme Court not to extend the power of Congress to tax income which, prior to 1913, it had no power to tax (Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U. S. 1 (1916); Stanton v. Baltic Min. Co., 240 U. S. 103 (1916); Tyee Realty Co. v. Anderson, 240 U. S. 115 (1916); Peck (Wm. E.) & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165 (1918); Evans v. Gore, 253 U. S. 245 (1920); Edwards v. Cuba R. Co., 268 U. S. 628 (1925); Bowers v. Kerbaugh-Empire Co., 271 U. S. 170 (1926)).

Confidence in the Constitution requires that it should be submitted to the people for change whenever changes in the form of our government are proposed. Other countries may, if they choose, repose their faith in individuals. In a democracy we prefer to put our faith in laws.

So radical a change in our constitutional system as is contemplated and proposed by this act can and should only be made after and by the submission and adoption of a constitutional amendment, which will so extend the power of the Federal Government as to permit it to impose such a tax. So, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of justice or injustice, of reciprocity in taxation or revenue to be derived, of equity or inequity as between groups, or concerning retroactive legislation or tax exemptions which confronts us today; the question which I have to decide is, Am I for or against the continuance of our Government under the Constitution, such as is therein prescribed, circumscribed, and established thereby, or do I propose to go outside the Constitution and vote for the enactment of legislation of a similar character and almost identical with that which has since the beginning of our Government been held by the greatest tribunal in the world, and so held repeatedly, to be contrary to the spirit and intent of the Constitution itself?

I am going to answer that question in the exercise of my own judgment, and as my conscience dictates, by continuing to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, and by voting against this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], I state this: If this particular tax in this instant bill is objectionable because, in his opinion, it seeks to infringe upon the sovereignty of the States, what about the inheritance taxes? They can be made as high or as low as the State or the Federal Government wishes. What about State income taxes and Federal income taxes? The President of the United States, for example, pays New York State income taxes, not on his salary but he pays taxes on his income derived from sources other than his salary as President of the United States. I pay an income tax to the State of New York on income derived from other source than my salary as a Member of the House. What about real-estate taxes and sales taxes and a host of other taxes? All such taxes could be made so high and confiscatory by any State as to ruin and destroy. If his argument were sound with reference to the tax involved in this instant bill, it would be just as sound with reference to these other taxes.

I am going to vote for this bill, but I do so somewhat with my tongue in my cheek. I am worried about this Gerhardt decision. My own dean of Columbia University, Judge Stone, for whom I have an affectionate regard, wrote the prevailing opinion. It is a splendid opinion, well conceived and well written. Neither he nor his colleagues of the Court in any degree overruled the old case of Collector against Day. It is still the law of the land. It is still, as that case stated, not competent for Congress to impose a tax upon any State judicial officer.

It is highly important to keep that in mind. It is also important to know that Judge Stone was most careful to delimit the decision to the immediate facts in the Gerhardt case. Among other things, Judge Stone said:

In tacit recognition of the limitation which the very nature of our Federal system imposes on State immunity from taxation in order to avoid an ever-expanding encroachment upon the Federal taxing power, this Court has refused to enlarge the immunity substantially beyond those limits marked out in Collector v. Day.

PRESIDENT'S VIEWPOINT

The President urges us to "exercise our constitutional powers to tax incomes from whatever source derived," but refers particularly to the taxing of compensation or salary for services rendered to Federal, State, and municipal governments and to the interest derived from Federal, State, or municipal obligations. He apparently is encouraged by the so-called decision of the Supreme Court, Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405), already adverted to, decided last year. The President expressed the pious hope that a decision will soon come from the Supreme Court permitting the elimination of these so-called immunities.

CHANGES IN INCOME-TAX LAWS HAVE BEEN WROUGHT WITHOUT CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

For many years it was ruled that the Treasury could not tax stock dividends. The termination was by virtue of the Supreme Court case of Eisner against Macomber. Twenty years after that decision it was discovered that the Court's ruling had been misinterpreted. The law was amended to provide that such stock distribution—

Shall not be treated as a dividend to the extent that it does not constitute income to the shareholder within the meaning of the sixteenth amendment of the Constitution. Thus without a constitutional amendment such stock dividends as were income under the constitutional amendment became taxable by statute.

In other words, now stock dividends may be taxed by the Federal Government. The Supreme Court may change its opinion as to taxing salaries. But I doubt it.

TAXATION OF SALARY AND INTEREST ON STATE BONDS

The rule of immunity from taxation of State agencies by the United States, or vice versa, goes back to John Marshall's time. That immunity is not expressed in any language in the Constitution. It is, I think, amplified by reason of the separation by spheres of sovereignty of the Federal and State Governments. There have been numerous cases where the Supreme Court held that taxing by the Federal Government of compensation from instrumentalities of the State has been upheld, and the President relies specifically on the case of Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405), decided May 23, 1938.

In the Port Authority case, a construction engineer and two assistant managers employed by the Port of New York Authority asked for relief from Federal taxation. The authority was created by the joint legislative enactment of the States of New York and New Jersey with the approval of Congress. The Supreme Court held that their salaries were taxable and thereby reversed the circuit court and the Board of Tax Appeals. The authority is engaged in the operation of transportation facilities. It operates bridges, tunnels, busses, freight yards, terminals, and charges tolls for all services. The positions held by its employees were not statutory positions. No oaths were required of them. Their duties were not defined. Judge Stone, in writing the opinion, stressed the fact that the activities of said authority are gradually extending into new fields. They have practically entered business and manage enterprises formerly exclusively operated by private individuals who are subject to the national taxing power.

There is a hint in Judge Stone's opinion that the line must be drawn somewhere. The State cannot encroach upon all private business operations and thus lessen the taxing power over individuals and instrumentalities thus employed by the State.

In the Helvering v. Gerhardt case (304 U. S. 405) only four judges joined in the majority opinion—Stone, Roberts, Hughes, and Brandeis. Two judges dissented—McReynolds and Butler. One judge wrote a concurring opinion—Black. It is highly dangerous to place reliance on a majority opinion under such circumstances.

In the case of Commissioner v. Stilwell (394 C. C. A. 9542), decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit only a few weeks ago, the court, after careful study of the Gerhardt Port of New York Authority case, held in its majority opinion that the compensation received by a master in chancery in Chicago was immune from income tax. This case was decided January 12, 1939, and falls within the rule set up by Collector against Day. Thus an important circuit court disagrees with what we may do today in passing this bill.

The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, after reviewing the Port Authority case, says:

Unable to find any language in this opinion which appears to us as persuasive, and certainly there is none which is conclusive that a court officer, such as a master in chancery, should be denied immunity, and we think the source of the official's compensation is immaterial. Certainly there is nothing in the opinion which holds to the contrary, and we find nothing which indicates to the contrary.

In the case of Collector v. Day (78 U. S. (Wall.) 113), the court held that it is not competent for Congress under the Constitution of the United States to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a State. This principle has stood for decades and has repeatedly been referred to with approval by the Supreme Court. The instant bill flies in the face of this case, which, in part, states as follows:

* * * If the means and instrumentalities employed by that government to carry into operation the powers granted to it are, necessarily, and, for the sake of self-preservation, exempt from taxation by the States, why are not those of the States depending upon their reserved powers, for like reasons, equally exempt from Federal taxation? Their unimpaired existence in the one case is as essential as in the other. It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the General Government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that Government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation, as any government whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?

It seems to be the contention of the Government that the case of Helvering against Gerhardt overruled Collector against Day as far as employees of the State and municipalities are concerned. This view has not been accepted by the Board of Tax Appeals. In the first case that has come to the Board of Tax Appeals since the Government made that contention, Sydney R. Wrightington (38 B. T. A. 1, 2), decided in January of this year, the Board refused to accept that contention. On the contrary, the doctrine of Collector against Day is reaffirmed, because the Board said:

It is said, however, that the petitioner has not met the second test of immunity, in that he has not shown that the imposition of the Federal tax upon him operates to burden the State. If this means that he has not introduced primary evidence of an actual burden during the particular years in question, the statement is correct. It is difficult to believe, however, that the Gerhardt opinion must be read as requiring such a showing to support every claim of immunity which is made under the established doctrine that the Federal Government may not by taxation interfere with the free operation of the governmental functions of the States (Collector v. Day, 78 U. S. 113). To read it as meaning this would logically lead to the conclusion that even the statutory compensation of the Governor of the State may be taxed by the Federal Government unless evidence is introduced the preponderance of which shows that such tax operates in fact as an interference with the carrying on of the State's essential governmental functions or those which are indispensable to its existence as a State. Such a burden of proof would practically nullify the constitutional doctrine itself, for it is hard to conceive how the burden could be discharged by any individual officer or employee of a State. We are unable to conclude that the decision in the Gerhardt case may be carried so far.

In Commissioner against Stilwell, decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, January 12, 1939, the circuit court of appeals refused to accept the contentions made here by the Government and definitely held that Collector against Day had not been reversed by the Gerhardt case, but that, on the contrary, "the doctrine was reaffirmed," saying:

It is worthy of notice that the Court (United States Supreme Court) referred to and commented upon the case of Collector v. Day in as many as four instances (pp. 414-417 and 424). It would seem that if the Court intended to place any limitation upon the doctrine as promulgated in that case it had every opportunity to do so. In place of doing so, we think it is fair inference, even if not expressly stated, that the doctrine was reaffirmed (p. 9545).

Again:

A study of the cases, however, convinces us that the rule as announced in Collector v. Day, supra, has neither been modified nor changed and is yet the law (p. 9543).

The circuit court of appeals, construing the Gerhardt case, held in that case:

We are unable to find any language in this opinion which appears to us as persuasive, and certainly there is none which is conclusive that a court officer, such as a master in chancery, should be denied immunity, and we think the source of the official's compensation is immaterial. Certainly there is nothing in the opinion which holds to the contrary, and we find nothing which indicates to the contrary (p. 9544).

In short, Congress is now asked to accept in toto the pure, argumentative prophecy of the study as to what the Court will do and to assume that if Congress accepts and acts upon this argument, the Court will sustain it. This surely furnishes no basis for the assumption of a constitutional power.

THE SIXTEENTH AMENDMENT

The sixteenth amendment cannot help us. When the sixteenth amendment was before my State for ratification the present Chief Justice, Charles Evans Hughes, was New York's Governor. He hesitated to recommend ratification because the wording "from whatever source derived," would, in his opinion, allow the Federal Government to tax the income on New York State bonds. This was overcome by the assurances of the then Senators Root, Borah, and others to the effect that that was not the case. That contention was never questioned or contravened on the floor of the House or the Senate at that time or anytime since.

The sixteenth amendment was intended only to overcome the unworkable rule that a tax on certain incomes had to be apportioned. The phrase "from whatever source derived" found its way into the joint resolution without any explanation and is consistent only with the fact that it was not intended to change so vital a doctrine as the one that the sovereign States are immune from Federal tax.

THE PASSAGE OF THIS BILL WILL PROVIDE A BETTER TEST CASE TO THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

You might ask me why, under such circumstances, I vote for the bill. I do so because I believe it well to put the question again squarely before the Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court says the bill is unconstitutional, the question will be dumped right back in our lap and we will then have to make a decision as to whether a constitutional amendment is or is not necessary. No great harm can result from the passage of this bill. Certainly title II of the bill ought to be passed without question. Title II prevents the payment of retroactive taxes. It would be cruel not to pass title II. Let us also pass title I and take our chances.

Furthermore, I like the point of view of James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General, as presented by him before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. He was questioned by our colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. Incidentally Mr. Morris is a very painstaking, efficient, and erudite Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Morris, the 1926 act provided that income taxes could not be levied on State employees for 1925, the prior year?

Mr. MORRIS. I assume you are correct, sir, about the provision as to its retroactivity. I haven't before me the language of that statute.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have it here. It provides: "Gross income" includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal services, of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from possessions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever."

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCORMACK. The prohibition against the retroactive taxing of salaries of State or municipal employees that existed in the prior act was not included in that act and is not the law now.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean an express exemption?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why couldn't you go ahead and test the case out without legislation?

Mr. MORRIS. I don't think there is any doubt about it that Collector v. Day until and unless expressly rejected by the Court, stands in the way of that being done. The question could, it seems most likely, be considered afresh with more force if there was an express intention on the part of Congress to tax those salaries.

Mr. McCORMACK. Section 1211 states:

"Any taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1924 or prior revenue act upon any individual in respect of amounts received by him as compensation for personal services as an officer or employee of any State or political subdivision thereof (except to the extent that such compensation is paid by the United States Government directly or indirectly) shall, subject to the statutory period of limitations properly applicable thereto, be abated, credited, or refunded."

Doesn't that give the Federal Government the authority?

Mr. MORRIS. I think it does, Mr. McCORMACK, but I repeat that I think if the matter is to be considered afresh by the Supreme Court that it stands on stronger footing if Congress has explicitly dealt with that proposition and at the same time eliminated from it whatever of unfairness there might be by having it to operate prospectively, and at the same time emphasizing the nondiscriminatory character of it by extending to the States the right to tax incomes derived from similar Federal sources.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the latter statement—that there is action necessary to give the States the right to reciprocal power, but so far as the State and political subdivision employees are concerned the power has existed since 1926.

Mr. MORRIS. I shall not dispute the Congressman on that point, and I may even go one step further and say this: That in the Sax case, from the second circuit, which was decided, by the way, in exactly the opposite way to the case in the seventh circuit that was referred to here earlier, the tax on a court functionary was upheld, and the Government had intended to make the argument that has been made here, and to assert before the Supreme Court the various contentions that should be considered in that light even though there be no such statute such as has been proposed. It so happens that the taxpayer in that case who had secured a writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court, dismissed the case, so that these arguments were not made.

If certiorari is applied for and granted in the case that has been alluded to, which arose from the seventh circuit, I certainly do not want to be understood as saying that the Government could not make these arguments there.

I do say that if we pitch our argument on the ground of non-discrimination, which I think is the heart of the justification for it, if it be sustained, then that has a stronger appeal and a more convincing approach if all discrimination be eliminated by giving to the States the right to tax this kind of income from Federal sources. It negatives the idea of discrimination.

Mr. McCORMACK. What you are saying is that if Congress would act affirmatively, it would reinforce your argument.

Mr. MORRIS. I don't think there is any doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, to be given 5 minutes to discuss so complicated and so comprehensive a matter as the bill before this Congress today is just ridiculous. I need at least 2 months to prepare a 5-minute speech upon a question so involved as this; whereas I would need very little time to prepare a 1-hour speech upon this subject.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has stated he is going to vote for this measure with his tongue in his cheek, because he is worried. Well, I am worried. [Laughter.] I am going to vote against this bill because I am worried, and my tongue will not be in my cheek when I vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I do not have time.

I am voting "no" on this bill for the four reasons that were cited so eloquently, so logically, and so convincingly by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. In brief, those reasons which he advanced were these: First, the constitutional doubt that goes with this measure, and there is grave constitutional doubt. Because of the doubt as to its constitutionality we should be very careful when we vote.

The second reason that I am opposed to the passage of this bill is because there is a better way to accomplish the desired end. That, of course, is by a constitutional amendment. We have no excuse for approaching this question in this manner. No Member of this House, I feel sure, will question the equity, the desirability, the fairness of taxing the salaries of all Government employees, both Federal and State employees. But that is not the important question involved in this bill. The important question involved is the method we adopt to accomplish a desired objective.

The third reason which the gentleman advanced was the reciprocal principle involved. I am more inclined to call it a horse trade, with the advantages all in the Federal Government, particularly in the 17 States that have no income-tax law. They get nothing, and the Federal Government gets the privilege of taxing all State and municipal salaries in those 17 States.

I want you to understand that insofar as taxing salaries is concerned, there is one Federal employee to every three State and municipal employees. That is the ratio of the employees between Federal and State Governments. That is a horse trade with the advantages all upon one side, as I see it. But the main reason I am opposing this bill and the reason I am going to vote "no" upon the bill is the principle that is involved in the bill and the far-reaching ramifications of that principle. These have been indicated by previous speakers. If we approve the principle contained in this bill of mutual taxation of salaries between the Federal Government and the State governments, we cannot logically refuse to approve another bill that is now in committee and that will be brought in here soon that is based upon this same mutual taxation basis, and that is the bill that gives the Federal Government the power to tax State and municipal obligations and gives the States the privilege to tax Federal obligations. This is the serious part of this whole tax picture.

I say there is a better way to do it. I say if the Gallup poll were applied to the Members of Congress on the equity and the fairness of taxing Government employees on their salaries it would show a higher percentage than 87 percent. But that is not the question we are facing today. It is not the equity and fairness of taxing salaries. It is the principle that is involved, as one gentleman has stated, "which permits the camel's head to enter the tent." That is the grave danger in this whole matter.

I can oppose this bill because I come from one of those States that has no income-tax law, and therefore no one can accuse me of saving my salary from State income tax. I led the battle in the State Senate of Illinois for a State income tax 6 years ago and we put it on the books, but our supreme court said it was unconstitutional. That State income tax would have taxed my salary which at that time was not taxable. In my humble opinion, the members of our Illinois Supreme Court went out of their way to find a basis for their decision in that case. They ignored the decisions of the supreme courts of eight States, North Carolina, Maryland, New Hampshire, Idaho, Missouri, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Georgia, that have identically the same constitutional provisions requiring uniform taxation that the constitution of Illinois has; they passed by recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court; and they based their decisions upon an out-moded, antiquated decision of the United States Supreme Court that has since been repudiated or nullified by later decisions. Every Member of Congress pays a Federal income tax upon his salary, and he should do so.

This measure before us would make every Member of Congress who lives in 1 of the 31 States that have a State income-tax law, pay a State income tax upon his Federal salary. And he should do so, I believe. It would, however, if passed, have no effect upon those of us who live in any 1 of the 17 States that have no income-tax law. We cannot be accused of selfish motives, personal motives, if we oppose this bill. I consider the four reasons heretofore given as justification for my opposition. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE.]

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, the arguments that have been already advanced by those in opposition to this measure seem to me to offer ample grounds on which to base a negative vote. Having sworn to uphold, protect, and defend the Constitution, I cannot bring myself to support a measure which is of such questionable constitutionality as this, irrespective of how meritorious the legislation may be. It may well be that the incomes of salaries of State and municipal officers and employees should be taxable the same as salaries of persons, but we should not lose sight of the fact that this is more than a tax on an individual officer or employee—it is a tax upon the sovereignty of the State and its subdivisions without their consent. If we are to do this at all, it should be done in the regular and legal way, by submission of a constitutional amendment by which the people of the States can express their willingness that their sovereignty should be made taxable by another sovereignty.

There is, however, a further reason which, although it is far more superficial than those already advanced, is sufficiently persuasive to justify a negative vote. During the short time that I have been a Member of this body I have never witnessed a more inconsistent and illogical proposal than the one which now confronts us. The bill is divided into two titles. Under title I we seek to impose a tax upon the salaries of all State and municipal employees. By inference this title implies that the salaries of these persons are not now taxable but will henceforth be taxable. On the other hand, title II would relieve from liability the payment of taxes on salaries of this same group of persons for the past 3 years. By inference title II implies that the salaries of these persons are already taxable and have been taxable for years past.

Obviously, if title I is necessary—if, in order to make the salaries of State employees subject to the income-tax laws, it is necessary to pass new legislation—then title II is not necessary, because if there is no such law now on the statute books, then there is no liability to be waived. Conversely, if title II is necessary and it is essential that we should waive the liability that this class of persons now have for taxes under existing laws, then title I is not necessary.

For this reason, superficial though it is, I feel justified in casting my negative vote, because, Mr. Chairman, my egotism has not yet brought me to the point where I have thought that I could blow both hot and cold in the same breath. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the measure before us (H. R. 3790) provides for a Federal income tax on the salaries and wages of all State, district, county, city, and town officials and employees. It also includes public health officials and nurses, the officers and teachers of all the State universities and colleges, all superintendents and principals, teachers and employees of public schools and public educational institutions of the State, county, and cities, and includes police and fire department officials and employees. In fact, it includes every person employed either as an official or employee of every State, county, and city government whose salary or wages are paid by State, county, or city taxes.

It is estimated that there are about 2,600,000 of these officers and employees. On the other hand, it gives the States the right to levy and collect taxes on all Federal officials and employees. It is estimated that there are 1,200,000 of these. Contrary to public belief, Members of the House and Senate and other Federal officials have for years and do now pay a Federal income tax, but they do not pay a State income tax on their salaries and wages. In 31 States, State officials and employees now under the laws of those 31 States pay a State income tax but they do not pay a Federal income tax. In other words, if this measure goes through, every Federal official and employee and every State official and employee except the 17 States that do not have a State income tax may be required to pay two income taxes—one to the Federal Government and one to the State.

I AM OPPOSED

For what I consider several good and sufficient reasons I am opposed to this bill. In the first place I believe it is clearly unconstitutional. Congress has no right to impose an income tax on the salaries and wages of State, district, county, and city officials and employees, and the States have no right to impose an income tax on Federal officials and employees. The uniform decisions of the Supreme Court, beginning with the famous case of McCulloch against Maryland, decided in 1819 by the greatest of all American jurists, Chief Justice John Marshall, held that Congress had no such power. That decision was reaffirmed in the case of Collector against Day, decided in 1868. There has been numerous cases since that time before the Supreme Court and they have uniformly upheld the decision of the Supreme Court in McCulloch against Maryland and Collector against Day. This same question was brought directly before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago when the case of United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue against Stillwell was decided there in January 1939. This decision reaffirms the uniform holdings of the Supreme Court for 120 years on this same question.

In order for the bill before us to be held constitutional the Supreme Court must overturn this long line of decisions of the Supreme Court and of the United States circuit courts of appeals during a period of 120 years. These decisions are bottomed on solid ground.

POWER TO TAX IS POWER TO DESTROY

The Supreme Court has held that the power to tax carries the power to destroy. If it should be allowed for the Federal Government to tax State, district, county, and city officials and employees and the officials and employees of the agencies of the State government and its branches, it would place in the hands of the Federal Government the power to oppress and destroy the State and the governmental agencies. In other words, it could by threats and oppression take away the freedom of action of the States, their officials, and employees, and destroy the liberty and independence of the States. There has never been any measure introduced in Congress that offered a greater threat to States' rights than the bill now before us. Believing it to be unconstitutional, I am constrained to vote against it.

The Republican Members of the House in 1923 proposed a constitutional amendment to submit this question to the people of the States themselves and let them decide whether or not they desired to so amend the Constitution as to give the Federal Government this power. Strange to say, the Democrats in the House at that time all but a very few voted against that proposed constitutional amendment. They then were urging State rights.

May I urge another objection? If this should become a law it would create, no doubt, a lot of discord and bitterness as between the States and the Federal Government. Congress might undertake to impose a heavier income tax on State officials and employees than they would think just, and in order to retaliate the State legislatures might impose a heavy income tax on the President, members of the Cabinet, and all other Federal officials and employees. For the proper carrying on of the Federal and State Governments there should exist a friendly cooperation between the Federal and State Governments. The Federal Government must not be in the attitude of fighting the States, neither must the States carry on a warfare against the Federal Government, and the power should not be given to the sovereignty of the State nor to the sovereignty of the Federal Government to antagonize, harass, or oppress the other. The present plan has worked splendidly for 150 years, and why should we now fly into the teeth of the highest court of the land and pass this measure of doubtful constitutional authority in order to collect some more tax money to be squandered and wasted by the present administration. [Applause.]

CUT OUT WASTE AND REDUCE TAXES

It is urged that many of these officials and employees of the State, district, county, and city governments would not be required to pay an income tax after allowing exemptions. If this policy should be once adopted, then the policy that has been urged for some time would be brought into action; that is, to greatly reduce the exemptions, so that all of our State, district, county, and city employees, including teachers, nurses, and others, might be required to pay an income tax to the Federal Government.

This administration has brought in a new tax bill at each and every session to increase old taxes and add new taxes. They must stay awake at night seeking new sources to impose new and heavier taxes on the already overburdened taxpayers of the Nation. I have consistently spoken and voted against each and every one of these tax measures. I realize that we need taxes, but I am opposed to giving this administration an increase of taxes or any taxes so long as they squander and waste the taxpayers' money and add deficit upon deficit and increase the national debt. [Applause.]

The President frankly admits it is not his purpose to limit the expenditures of the Government to its income. He proposes to continue making new and greater deficits and add to our national debt. One of these days we will need taxes to save the credit of this Nation. I am unwilling to take the last penny out of the pockets of the taxpayers and squander it before that time comes.

The President, in his campaign speech of 1932, denounced the Republican administration because he charged that the administration was taking too much of the earnings of the people for taxes. He said that it was causing unemployment and the stagnation of industry and agriculture. He promised to stop the increase of taxes and reduce the national debt. The last fiscal year of the Hoover administration the Government collected a little over $1,800,000,000 in revenue from the American people. The last few years under Roosevelt we collected $6,000,000,000, an increase of over 200 percent.

If the Congress makes the appropriations he has demanded for the year 1940, Mr. Roosevelt, notwithstanding these heavy taxes, will have added nearly $25,000,000,000 to the national debt and pushed the national debt beyond the debt limit of $45,000,000,000. The more we tax the people and the more money we give to this administration, the more they waste and squander, and this is one of the chief causes for the 13,000,000 unemployed people, the 40,000,000 needing some form of public relief, the falling prices in agriculture, and the stagnation of industry and commerce. The American people are insisting that instead of finding new taxes and increasing present taxes that the Congress and the administration find ways to cut out waste and extravagance, reduce expenses, and then we should be able to cut out many burdensome taxes and reduce other taxes. [Applause.]

The membership on the Republican side of the House increased nearly 100 percent at this Congress over the last Congress. One of the main reasons for that is the many unconstitutional bills this administration has forced through Congress, the increase of taxes, and the policy of squandering and wasting the tax money of the people of the Nation. Let our New Deal friends continue this policy and instead of having 169 Republicans in the House as we now have, after the national election in 1940 there will be well over 300 Republicans in the House and we will have a Republican in the White House.

May I urge our Republican friends to vote against this unconstitutional and oppressive tax measure. In so doing I think you will render a real service to the people and to our country. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I believe the procedure outlined in this bill to be constitutionally sound.

The doctrine of the immunity of governmental agencies from taxation was first announced by Chief Justice Marshall in the celebrated case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316). In all the years that have followed it, no one has seriously criticized the actual decision in that case. The tax levied by the State of Maryland was clearly discriminatory and would have impeded, if not destroyed, the functioning of the Federal Government through the bank which it had created. The Chief Justice did not lay down a general principle that a State could never tax an officer or instrumentality of the Federal Government. He simply decided that if the tax were designed to, and in fact did, seriously impede or prevent the operation of the Federal Government, the tax must give way to the superior power of the Federal Government. It was not the tax which Marshall condemned, but rather the attempt to destroy by means of the tax.

Unfortunately, the decision contained the famous phrase, "The power to tax involves the power to destroy." In a limited sense, this statement is of course correct. All powers of Government, in the same sense, involve the power to destroy. However, the Court has long been committed to the doctrine that the existence of a power will not be denied simply because it may at some time be abused. The Constitution has ample safeguards against the abuse of any power granted in it.

Since the decision in McCulloch against Maryland, many cases have discussed this general principle of immunity from taxation. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss them here in detail. If they can all be reconciled, it is beyond my power to do so. However, I believe they establish two general exceptions to the principle of immunity of State officers and instrumentalities from Federal taxation.

First. They exclude those activities of the State which for all practical purposes are not essential to the preservation of the sovereign State. This is the case of Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405), for example.

Second. They exclude those cases where the tax laid upon the individual State official only remotely affects the State, by theoretically requiring the taxpayers thereof to pay the amount of the tax levied on its official or instrumentality.

I believe the real question which must be answered in all these cases is, Does the imposition of the tax, in a practical sense, impede the functioning of that Government whose officer or instrumentality is taxed?

It must be remembered that the State or municipal official is, of necessity, both a citizen of the State and of the United States. He owes both sovereigns a duty of support. If the Federal Government simply calls upon him to pay the same tax as any other citizen receiving a similar income, how can such action be construed as an attack upon the sovereignty of the State?

No one believes more firmly in the maintenance of our dual system of government than I do. The preservation of the line between their powers is the primary duty of the President, the Congress, and the courts. At one time this line, in taxation matters, may be put in one place; at another time and under changing conditions it may be put in another place. The fundamental mandate of the Constitution is not "There shall be no tax," but rather "There shall be no tax that destroys." [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY].

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that this is rather a legislative attempt to straighten out a tangle created by the courts.

Answering the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] with reference to this being an illogical bill, I may say that there is a very practical reason why title II should pass. I anticipate that he is not apprised of the fact that under these recent decisions it is mandatory on the collectors to collect taxes upon all of those persons who are drawing salaries operating under nonessential State governmental operations, such as the Port of New York Authority; people who did not expect to be taxed heretofore, and had no idea that such court decisions would be forthcoming. It requires the utmost good faith that this Congress take care of the situation created, not by the Congress, but by the courts in their struggle with this problem that has constantly arisen.

My esteemed friend, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] suggests that we are struggling at a gnat and may be swallowing a camel, that for a mere bagatelle, a pitiful performance to tax 6½ percent of the State salaried people and collecting possibly $16,000,000, we are sacrificing a principle. It seems to me that the principle involved, at least one principle involved, is the equalization of taxes, so that all shall pay alike, on their ability to pay.

Let us consider the salary of the mayor of one of our towns. He escapes a Federal income tax and pays a State income tax. His neighbor, the businessman or other salaried man in business, pays both a State and Federal tax. I think there is a moral issue involved here.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. As I understand from the provisions of this bill, a State employee will pay a Federal tax and a Federal employee will pay a State tax, and these taxes will be uniform?

Mr. DISNEY. That is the attempt.

Mr. GREEN. One further question.

Mr. DISNEY. Let me answer the question. The bill provides for a direct tax upon the State employee and gives consent to the State to tax Federal employees; but it must be said in all fairness in this connection that any Congress which comes along may, of course, repeal that consent. It does not approach the dignity of a compact with the States.

Mr. GREEN. In this connection, does not the State farmer or businessman now pay a State and a Federal tax on his net income?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. It looks to me like it would be fair for the State and Federal officeholder to do the same thing.

Mr. DISNEY. The attempt is to equalize the taxes, which seems to me very highly important, and that there is an important principle involved there. There is a principle involved in the matter of the dual nature of the State and Federal Governments, of course. My distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] suggests that we are going to start a revolution here and now with this bill. The revolution happened when the States ratified the sixteenth amendment. We are now attempting to approach the sixteenth amendment with this bill. One school of thought believes that the States lost sight of States' rights when they gave the Federal Government, under the sixteenth amendment, the unlimited right to tax incomes without reserving any rights to the States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do I understand from the operation of this measure that we are going to tax the teachers of our schools throughout the United States?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes, if taking into consideration their exemptions, their net income is sufficient to require taxation. Most of their salaries are not that high.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman realize they are the most underpaid class of people we have?

Mr. DISNEY. That is true. So few of them will be in the taxpaying class. They are not in danger, except the very high-salaried ones.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does not the gentleman think they should be exempted?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes. In fairness, of course, I may say the teachers have the same right to claim exemption as any others. Only about 6½ percent of the vast army of State employees will be affected by this bill, and they have the right to claim their exemption.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They have the general exemptions under the law we now have?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes. We Congressmen pay a Federal income tax, too, on our net incomes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. But they have no greater exemption than what we have now?

Mr. DISNEY. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I said before, they are the most underpaid class of people we have.

Mr. DISNEY. The gentleman would not contend for anything under the law except that every man be treated alike, whether he is a school teacher, farmer, mayor, Congressman, or a Federal judge. Of course, we are foreclosed on the Federal judges by the courts' decisions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. My point is the school teachers are the most underpaid class of people we have and I do not think we should tax those people.

Mr. DISNEY. The low-salaried folks will not get caught for taxes under this.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma a question. In Great Britain they have an income tax which provides that everyone that earns more than $500 a year shall pay an income tax, without exemption. Why should not this country have the same kind of law, with no exemptions?

Mr. DISNEY. I respect the gentleman's views and reiterate that I stand for equality under the law for all taxpayers—including officeholders.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. For a question, speech, or observation?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. For a question, with an observation tied to it.

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I understand the object of this bill is to raise revenue.

Mr. DISNEY. No. The prime object of the bill is not to raise revenue but to equalize taxes.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I see. It will bring in $16,000,000 in new money, is that correct?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. We now spend $25,000,000 a day; so why not cut down our expenses for a half day and let these people alone?

Mr. DISNEY. I will leave that for the gentleman to answer.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman tell us how he would tax Federal salaries in Oklahoma?

Mr. DISNEY. By this bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Do you have an income tax there, or how would you reach such salaries?

Mr. DISNEY. We have a State income tax.

Mr. FERGUSON. If the gentleman will yield, I may say that the Oklahoma income tax runs up to 10 percent. It is one of the highest in the Nation.

Mr. GIFFORD. How would it apply to Federal salaries?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. May I ask if the salaries of the President and the Federal court judges are subject to taxation?

Mr. DISNEY. The salary of the President, like that of Congressmen, is taxable under the Federal tax laws. Under Federal court decisions, which involve not the sixteenth amendment but another clause of the Constitution that relates to the increase or diminishment of a judge's salary during his term of office, the Federal courts hold that a Federal judge's salary is not taxable by either Federal or State Governments.

Mr. HOUSTON. Would the States have the right to tax the salaries of Federal judges?

Mr. DISNEY. No; I do not believe so under this bill, because, as I said, the courts construe their situation under another section of the Constitution and hold them not liable for taxes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DUNCAN. Does not this provision apply to judges appointed prior to 1932? Judges appointed since that time are subject to the tax.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that, but does this bill apply to judges appointed before 1932 because of the act of Congress that year on the subject?

Mr. DISNEY. I do not believe judges appointed since 1932 are held to be exempt, but that they are all paying income taxes. I may be in error about this.

Mr. HOUSTON. Those appointed since 1932 are paying the tax now; yes.

Mr. DISNEY. The law, as I understand it, has been stated here this afternoon. The doctrine of McCulloch against Maryland does not spring from direct constitutional authority. According to Justice Marshall, it is implied from the plan of the General Government and its relation to the States. This decision has not been overruled. The Gerhardt case does not overrule Collector against Day, where an attempt was made by the Federal Government to tax the salary of a State probate judge. This is the first direct attempt by the Congress to apply by statutory action the rule in those cases to the sixteenth amendment. As far as salaries are concerned, if the language in the sixteenth amendment—"from whatever source derived"—had been construed literally, out would have gone McCulloch against Maryland, Evans against Gore, Collector against Day, and the other decisions we are trying now to clarify in order to reflect by this bill the attitude of Congress and, if you please, re-present the question to the Supreme Court, not only on the theory that this bill would raise money but on the broader theory that there is a moral obligation to equalize the taxes of all citizens in the country and let the public officer be on the same basis of tax equality as the private citizen. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on a bill, H. R. 3590, relating to taxation of public officers and employees.

It appears to me that this bill is somewhat unfairly drawn, and that for the purpose of full consideration and real freedom in voting should be properly split into two bills.

I say this for the reason that a vote for the bill makes certain the protection in exemption of public officers and employees on the so-called retroactive tax features on salaries paid in past years. This same vote for the bill as a whole ultimately taxes governmental employees in the future.

A vote against this bill will protect governmental officers and employees in the future against taxation, but leaves them in a questionable position as to the past.

Many of us—and I am one of them—would like to see this bill so placed before Congress as to give us that freedom of choice that we are eminently entitled to, namely, to vote on both these questions separately. Personally I would like to vote for that part of the bill that would protect the employees against the retroactive feature and the collection of back taxes and still be against taxation of future salaries of officers and employees.

I think that certainly by present example and the practice followed it has been clearly shown that it never was originally intended to collect the tax of officers and employees in the past years. Now to come at this late date and collect taxes on those past years is, in my opinion, not only extremely unfair, but is unconstitutional in that it is retroactive. It would financially wreck many good governmental employees. Many simply could not pay, especially those in the low-salary brackets. They have just been getting by in many instances in the past, and their money has been spent. Where could they now get the money to pay these back taxes and still have enough left upon which to live? There has been much talk of unemployment, decent standards of living, and so forth. What would be the condition of these thousands of people if this retroactive tax would be placed against them and an attempt made to collect it?

Let those who talk of unemployment and decent standards of living now square their actions by their words, not only with reference to the past but in consideration of the future.

I am against taxation of governmental securities, bonds, and so forth, and that tax on officers' and employees' salaries in the future.

This is equivalent to the Government collecting taxes and placing them in one pocket and then paying it out of the other. For, after all, some governmental unit must pay these salaries that it is now proposing to tax. This will eventually result in higher governmental costs, and this country cannot much longer stand this continued increase of governmental cost.

The wage and salary levels are either too high, proper, or too low. If it is found that the average salaries and wages are on proper levels, then in all probability this tax item will be absorbed by governmental units and thereby increase governmental cost.

Taxation of governmental securities, salaries, and wages of officers and employees is not the answer to this question. The answer is, first, the determination by each of the respective governmental bodies whether its salaries are or are not too high. After this has been determined, these same governmental units should fearlessly and fairly make the proper corrections where called for.

I have had much experience along this line, not only with salaries, salary increases, and so forth, but with the problem of the ability of the Government to pay and, most important, the ability of the taxpayer in turn to pay taxes to sustain government. In 1931-32, when the county of Los Angeles was in bad financial condition—and still is—the 14,000 employees of that county came forward voluntarily before our board to take salary and wage cuts from 10 to 25 percent, with the understanding that such cuts would be restored the next year if the county was able. The county was not able, and these cuts were not restored until 1936-37.

During these same years, and continuing until the present, the group advancements under civil service and the charters of that county were not, and are not now, operating for the reason that the county cannot pay. These employees have willingly and cheerfully under their sound leadership accepted these things. Now, to come in under these new conditions and tax them, which is equivalent to cutting their salaries and wages, appears not only to be unfair but highly impracticable, for if these salaries and wages are at the present time, let us say, proper, and this cut occurred, the same salaries and wages will finally be raised—and the burden of this raise will fall on whom? The governments first, then the taxpayer last.

Practically the same argument holds for governmental bonds and securities. As soon as you tax these, the interest rates will go up, and government in the long run will pay the bill and hold the sack.

The only final result accomplished will be that our people will be throwing more money into that bottomless abyss of expenditure, fed by the tax collector.

Again the answer is not the continual seeking of new sources of taxation but, rather, the cessation of this tremendous spending program and the lessening of the tax burden on all our people.

I am not going to vote, and hope this House will not vote, any more taxation upon any of our people; but hope they will vote to balance our Budget by the cessation of those tremendous expenditures on the debit side, and quit putting the Federal money in places and upon things that are not real functions of government and where the Federal Government has no business.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the measure we have for consideration this afternoon deals with two propositions—the first title providing that all persons employed by an instrumentality of the Government shall pay Federal income taxes the same as anyone else—provided their income warrants it.

As the situation now stands, anyone employed by the Federal Government does not pay State income taxes on his salary; and anyone who is paid by the State, county, or other municipality—no matter what salary he gets—is exempt from paying Federal income taxes.

The second title of this bill simply states that the Federal Government cannot go back of January 1, 1939, to collect income taxes from persons who received their income from municipalities. This comes about because the Treasury Department has ruled, on the basis of a recent court decision, that it has a right to go back for a period of 12 years and collect income taxes for those years from people who received their income from the various subdivisions of our Government. To do this, of course, would be unfair—because they have always believed they were exempt from such taxes.

During the few minutes allotted to me, I shall discuss the first title of the bill. Most of the objection to this title is on the ground of its constitutionality—the question involved being whether or not the Federal Government has a right to tax the State or other municipality. I do not claim to be a constitutional lawyer. The question has been well presented on both sides. In view of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, adopted by the people of this country, the Federal Government has a right to collect taxes on income from whatever sources derived. This measure is not a tax on a State or subdivision of the State. It is a tax on incomes of a group of people who have heretofore been exempted.

I believe it would be better if the question could be submitted as a constitutional amendment and let the people pass on it. Congress has had a chance for many years to do this thing and has failed to do it. It seems to me that this is only a problem of straightening out an inequity which has heretofore existed.

This measure provides that persons who are employed by the State, the county, or by any institution of the State, including your governor, your attorney general, and your State university and other State institutions, if you please, shall pay the same Federal income taxes as the farmer or the merchant or the carpenter or anyone else would pay, subject, of course, to the right of the same exemptions.

It also means that the great army of Federal employees, numbering in the hundreds of thousands, including the Members of Congress, will pay, in addition to their Federal income taxes, whatever income taxes are levied by their various States.

Certainly, in my judgment, there is nothing wrong with that principle. There can be no reason why the salary or income paid to an individual by a State should be exempted from taxation any more than the income of the railroad man or the oil-field worker or the farmer. And, as I said before, everyone is entitled to exactly the same exemptions. It is only fair that everyone should pay according to his ability to pay, and every American citizen should want to contribute to the support of the Government which protects him.

A number of Members on the floor this afternoon have used the famous quotation that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." I believe, in the light of our recent experiences, that the greater danger right now, so far as our country is concerned, and so far as this Congress is concerned, is that the power to spend is the power to destroy.

The great trouble with this Congress during the past few years, is not so much the power to tax, but the power it has used in spending the taxpayers' money. I know, as well as you do, that it has been necessary to spend vast sums of money, and we are going to continue to spend millions—even billions—before the close of this Congress, according to the program that has been set before us. Some of it, of course, will be necessary, but I wish I had time to call your attention to the millions of dollars of the peoples' money which we are about to spend for so-called objectives, that are unnecessary. For instance, the recent administration approval of the Florida ship canal project which will require an expenditure of about $200,000,000. This is only an example of the many propositions which have been and will be submitted to this Congress for its approval. If we are going to reduce taxes, we will have to quit spending so much money.

The right to levy and collect taxes still lies with the Congress. I do not think Congress, representing the people of this country, will abuse its authority in that direction. I am fearful of its authority and the pressure that is brought upon its membership, to make unwise expenditures and permit waste of the funds that must be paid out of the pockets of the people of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, we have been here now for more than 2 hours and we have listened to some very brilliant and elucidating arguments with the result that the subject matter has been very well covered. I shall not flatter myself with the hope or the thought that I can say very much that is new. Nearly every possible aspect of the case has been touched upon, but if you will bear with me, during the time I have I should like to recapitulate the salient features referred to in this discussion.

In the first place, you have heard a lot about the constitutionality of the measure. I should like at this time to lay down a challenge to those who favor the passage of this bill and are to follow me. I should like to challenge them to point to a single sentence in any decision of the Supreme Court that sustains the constitutionality of this bill. That cannot be done, because it has not been written into any law or into any decision anywhere by the Supreme Court of the United States. Let me go a little further with reference to this point, perhaps, at the expense of repetition.

The case of McCulloch against Maryland decides what? It decides that a State cannot tax an instrumentality of the Federal Government. That case has never been changed, never been repealed, altered, or challenged. It is the law today.

Let us consider the reverse of this proposition, where the Government of the United States sought to levy a tax on a State official. That case is distinctly and directly in point, and the Court held in Commissioner against Day that the United States could not levy a tax on a State official. This case is still the law there.

Let us consider the third class. There has been some comment here about the fact that there is some confusion with reference to the passage of the sixteenth amendment. What does the sixteenth amendment do? It does just the one thing that it was intended to do. We could levy an income tax before the sixteenth amendment was passed. There is no reason why the Congress of the United States could not levy a tax before the sixteenth amendment, but it was so impractical that it was not done. Why? Because the Constitution provided that the taxes thus collected had to be apportioned. What does "apportion" mean in this connection? That the tax collected would have to be apportioned in a lump sum to the various States. The sixteenth amendment did away with that apportionment and provided that a tax may be levied and collected individually by enactment of the Federal Government. There is a case that passed on the sixteenth amendment, and that is the case of Evans against Gore. That decision in that case holds that the sixteenth amendment did not provide for anything except to remove the necessity of apportionment. If the constitutionality of this bill cannot be established, then we ought to dispose of this proposition.

Let us pass to the more practical phases of this bill. Many Members have discussed them. One man says that it would not be comfortable for us if we fail to vote for this bill because someone will ask us back home why we did not vote to tax our own salaries. I have not time to discuss that, but I am perfectly willing to pay a State income tax as I am now and have ever since I have been a Member of Congress paid a Federal income tax. But I am not in favor of changing the form of our government every time a bunch of irresponsible New Dealers ask that it be done.

There are 17 States of this Union that do not have an income tax. The efficiency and beauty of any law is in the generality of its enforcement. This law would compel 17 States to do something they may not want to do. At least they have not done so yet. I do not profess to speak for all of them, and I do not profess to speak for the great Commonwealth of Ohio, except as I speak as one Congressman. We do not want this income-tax bill forced upon us. We want to pass our own income tax in our own way and in our own time. We have plenty of intelligence in our Ohio Legislature to pass an income tax when our people are ready for it. We do not want this Congress to say to us that we must pass an income tax in order to protect ourselves against the Congress. Those of you who want to find some comfort in your vote today should remember that on the stump you said that you stood for economy and against any new taxes. Here is the time to make your promise good to the people and stand against any new tax, and especially those of you who come from the States that do not have an income tax today.

I have heard some of you say that you will vote for the retroactive feature of this bill, that you are not in favor of title I, but you are in favor of title II, the retroactive feature. I shall now make a positive statement that may startle you. I say to you that title I is absolutely unnecessary if title 2 is necessary. What does title 2 do? It is retroactive. It prevents the Treasury Department from going back 2 or 3 years and levying a tax on school teachers and policemen and thousands of others in your State. If they have a right to collect that tax 2 or 3 years back without any law why have not they the right to levy it forward now without this law? [Applause.] Who can explain that to me? I repeat, if they have a right to go back and tax school teachers and the policemen and the firemen of your community, they must do it by virtue of some law, by some semblance of a law. If they can collect 1937 tax legally then they can collect 1940 tax legally. Of course, sometimes they do not pay much attention to the law down there, but they must act on some semblance of law. If they can go back and you want to prevent them from going back 2 or 3 years, why can they not go forward without this law? The honest way to go forward is not by force of numbers but the proper way is to submit this proposition to the people and let them pass on it by a constitutional amendment in an orderly way as the Constitution provides. I say to you that it is not their purpose to proceed that way. Their purpose as brought out in the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means—that purpose is to drive this bill through the Congress and depend on the newly packed Supreme Court to sustain it. This is a most dangerous step and should be resisted by all of us.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Are you impugning the Supreme Court set-up?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I say I do not yield to the gentleman now.

I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, that the smartest man on tax matters in the United States that I know, is Dr. Magill, who until recently was the able Under Secretary of the Treasury. He is a Democrat, I believe. Only last year, in public utterances in different places, and before our Ways and Means Committee, he stated that it was not the policy of the Treasury Department to proceed in the manner that we are proceeding here today. He said it was the plan of the Treasury to bring this question before the people by proposing a constitutional amendment. Why is it not being done?

I say to you there is not anybody who will follow me today on this floor who will say he has any constitutional ground whatever to support this statute, and that they confidently expect it will be challenged; that it will go to the Supreme Court; and that by that course they will thwart the people in their desire to express themselves. Now, if you support this bill you are going to abandon the path that the American Nation has followed for 120 years. Chief Justice Marshall put our Government in that path. Daniel Webster helped to put our feet in that path. We have been treading that path for 120 years; a certain, definite path; a path upon which the economic structure of this the greatest nation in the world has been built. Now, today they are asking you in a slipshod way to pass a law that they themselves, the Department, just last week, before the Ways and Means Committee, said they have no definite idea of what will happen, but they know they can get this into the Supreme Court of the United States. The question was asked them, "Do you think you can get a decision from the Supreme Court any quicker than you can get a decision from the American people by submitting a constitutional amendment?" That is the way it stands. [Applause.]

At the risk of repetition I am going to elucidate somewhat on what I have already said by referring again to the Supreme Court decisions. There is one case that stands out preeminently among the judicial decisions of the Nation as they apply to the power of the Federal Government and the power of the States to levy taxes. That case is the case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 315). The decision in that case was written by John Marshall and one of the attorneys in the case was Daniel Webster. One of the most significant sentences in American legal decision is a sentence spoken by Daniel Webster in his argument before the Court in that case and the same sentence is carried by John Marshall in his opinion. Here is the sentence: "The power to tax involves the power to destroy." The case of McCulloch against Maryland holds, first, the Government of the Union, though limited in its powers, is supreme within its sphere of action, and its laws when made in pursuance of the Constitution form the supreme law of the land; second, the State governments have no right to tax any of the constitutional means employed by the Government of the Union to execute its constitutional powers.

Probably the most significant paragraphs in this masterful opinion by Chief Justice Marshall is the paragraph where he seeks to impress the importance of the question under consideration and the paragraph where he outlines the dangerous extremes to which the States might go if permitted the unrestricted power to tax Federal activities. These paragraphs are as follows:

In the case now to be determined, the defendant, a sovereign State, denies the obligation of a law enacted by the Legislature of the Union, and the plaintiff, on his part, contests the validity of an act which has been passed by the legislature of that State. The Constitution of our country, in its most interesting and vital parts, is to be considered; the conflicting powers of the Government of the Union and of its members, as marked in that Constitution, are to be discussed, and an opinion given which may essentially influence the great operations of the Government. No tribunal can approach such a question without a deep sense of its importance and of the awful responsibility involved in its decision. But it must be decided peacefully or remain a source of hostile legislation, perhaps of hostility of a still more serious nature; and if it is to be so decided, by this tribunal alone can the decision be made. On the Supreme Court of the United States has the Constitution of our country devolved this important duty.

If the States may tax one instrument, employed by the Government in the execution of its powers, they may tax any and every other instrument. They may tax the mail; they may tax the mint; they may tax patent rights; they may tax the papers of the custom-house; they may tax judicial process; they may tax all the means employed by the Government to an excess which would defeat all of the ends of government. This was not intended by the American people. They do not design to make their Government dependent on the States.

The Supreme Court has never reversed McCulloch against Maryland. It is still the law. If the activities of the Federal Government cannot be taxed by the States, by what right or authority can any action of Congress give to the States this authority? Congress does not have such power. The language of section 3 of title I of this bill under consideration is truly appalling when we consider that the Congress of the United States assumes to speak for the United States of America in a very presumptuous manner. The language that I refer to is the following:

The United States hereby consents to the taxation of compensation—

And so forth, of officers and employees of the United States or any agency or instrumentality of the same. It strikes me that this is a most unusual situation.

Surely it was never intended that the Congress of the United States should by the wave of the hand, as it were, give away rights and privileges and liberties of the whole United States. Would it not be more sensible to assume that in such an important matter as this that the best thing Congress could do would be to prepare the way for this important matter to be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection by a referendum vote on a constitutional amendment?

Considering further the question of whether the Federal Government can tax an instrumentality or an agency of the State government. This question came up for consideration by the Supreme Court as the result of an income-tax law passed by Congress in 1864. The case I refer to is the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wallace, 113) and decided in 1867. The syllabus of this case contains but one paragraph of a few words. It is as follows:

It is not competent for Congress under the Constitution of the United States to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a State.

From this syllabus it might be argued that the Court considered only that this was a "judicial officer of a State," but the opinion of the Court went much further. It held that since the Supreme Court had held in Dobbins v. Commissioners of Erie County (16 Pet. 435) that a State cannot tax the salary of an officer of the United States and the United States cannot tax the salary of a State officer—a judge. The Court in its opinion in this case said:

It is admitted that there is no express provision in the Constitution that prohibits the general government from taxing the means and instrumentalities of the States, nor is there any prohibiting the States from taxing the means and instrumentalities of that government. In both cases the exemption rests upon necessary implication and is upheld by the great law of self-preservation; as any government, whose means employed in conducting its operations, if subject to the control of another and distinct government, can exist only at the mercy of that government. Of what avail are these means if another power may tax them at discretion?

In conclusion, let me say that this bill comes to us from the Treasury in a manner that will excite the suspicion of anyone who will take the time to investigate its genesis. It is an attempt to do in a new way what until very recently the Treasury had intended to try to do in the ordinary way as provided in the Constitution. It is a dangerous experiment by a few young "brain trusters" who now represent the depleted and unbalanced Treasury. They are seeking a new field of taxation where they can gather in additional millions that they might keep up the wild spending orgy which has now continued for about 6 years. Their purpose is to blot out State lines as much as possible. They know that then the Washington Government will transcend the States. This reciprocal program that they seek to set up in this bill is largely a myth. If this bill is passed and this program carried through it will be seen that the Federal Government will draw into the Treasury from the millions of State and municipal officials and activities much more money than the States will ever be able to draw from the Federal officials. I hope that this House today will decide to stand by John Marshall and Daniel Webster as against this coterie of unknown "brain trusters" who seem to have full sway with the treasury of the richest nation in the world.

As sure as "the power to tax is the power to destroy" so sure is this ill-begotten piece of legislation sure to be the beginning of years of strife and litigation between the sovereign States and the sovereign Government. It is unfortunate that we jeopardize the very perpetuity of the Nation in a program of destructive taxation to meet the demands of an extravagant administration when with the application of more patriotism and more thrift we could put our country on the highway of prosperity where the States would continue to carry on in the sphere which has made them a most glorious galaxy of sovereign States and where the Federal Government could continue to operate strictly within its sphere in such a way as to be the supreme power which the founders of the Republic intended it should be when the Thirteen Original Colonies set it up. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, my colleague and fellow member of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] made a certain challenge. Of course, I think it is useless to attempt to answer him on his challenge. However, I do want to point out the fact that certain Members entertain the idea that to submit a matter to the Supreme Court as at present constituted, is entirely wrong. I personally resent this slur upon the present Supreme Court. Aside from personnel it is no different today in its steadfastness and loyalty to the Constitution and the principles of this Nation than the Supreme Court of yesterday. I am perfectly willing to submit any legal question or congressional action to the Supreme Court for its review and decision.

Just from the standpoint of the plain, ordinary layman, I cannot make any distinction as to income. I do not think the sixteenth amendment makes any distinction. It states plainly and in unmistakable English that income from whatever source shall be taxable. There are no ifs, ands, or buts about it. The apportionment feature of the sixteenth amendment has nothing to do with the fact of the taxability of the income. The sixteenth amendment was specifically brought forth and ratified by three-fourths of the sovereign States in order to correct this abuse and to bring under the taxable power of the Federal Government all income. To my lay mind, there is not any question at all as to what the people intended when the Constitution was broadened by addition of the sixteenth amendment; and they are a power even above the Supreme Court.

Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this subject ever since it was brought out by the decision in the Gerhardt case.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I refuse to yield.

At the time the Gerhardt decision was handed down it was established that a definite threat of financial ruin faced our municipal, State, and county employees, and it was imperative that something be done at the earliest possible date to eliminate that threat. The action of the Court might correctly be interpreted as legislation by judicial decision. We are convinced now that the time has come when all of the taxpayers of the Nation should be treated alike and that every possible safeguard be given employees heretofore exempt; however, there is absolutely no excuse or reason why a businessman, or an employee in private industry should pay a Federal income tax while State and municipal employees are exempted. Aside from that, it might be said that there is nothing coercive about this bill, forcing the States to adopt income taxes in order to meet the action of the Federal Government. I think such arguments are entirely beside the question. It is a clean-cut issue of establishing and maintaining under judicial interpretation or otherwise, a privileged class who are freed from income taxes, while others must pay them.

So far as I am concerned, my course is clear and well defined. I am going upon the assumption that the Supreme Court will make a decision when the matter is properly presented. More than that, we know that if this House were to vote on legislation only after passing upon constitutionality, according to our individual opinions, we would never pass any legislation.

Obviously, we cannot predict what the Court might do in a given instance. I want to say right now, and I think the Record will bear out what I say, that when the Guffey coal bill was before us and the question of constitutionality was discussed on this floor, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] did not hesitate to vote for that bill. He voted for it without any mental reservation or any argument whatsoever, because in his district it was considered politically a good bill to vote for.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the Committee is made absolutely necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court in what is known as the Gerhardt case. Up to the time this decision was rendered all State, county, and city employees, by a previous decision of the Supreme Court, were made immune to Federal income tax, but through the reversal of the Court in this matter all these same employees became subject to Federal taxes and likewise became subject to back taxes for a period of, I believe, 12 years.

More than that these employees were liable, and most certainly would be called upon to pay compounded interest and penalties.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue was not only obliged to collect the taxes due but had no discretion in the matter of compromising any disputed amounts. As a consequence hundreds of thousands of municipal and State employees throughout the Nation were faced with financial ruin. The retroactive imposition of taxes under the decision would have been a merciless and destructive course to follow. The dictum of the Court was final. The Treasury Department was definitely charged with collecting these taxes, and it became necessary for the Congress to act in order to protect the homes and the meager savings of school teachers, firemen, policemen, and other non-Federal Government employees.

The Ways and Means Committee very wisely, and therefore properly, defined the powers of the Internal Revenue Division of the Treasury Department by limiting the imposition and collection of taxes insofar as non-Federal employees are concerned and confined this power to the future. Retroactivity under this bill is definitely and, insofar as I am concerned, permanently out of consideration. Of course, we do not know what the Senate might do, but, insofar as I am concerned, I shall stand opposed to the retroactivity feature to such an extent as to even vote against the final adoption of this bill should it be amended in this respect by the other body. I say this in spite of the fact it is a bill which originates in my committee and which is intended to render definite relief. The most obnoxious feature of the proposed law naturally would be the enactment of the retroactive clause.

The bill before the House parallels the decision of the Court, excepting that it does not permit collection of back taxes and of the attendant penalties and compound interest. Moreover, it provides for refunds where taxes were paid by employees who, under the law, were not heretofore taxable.

This bill through the reciprocal-taxing privilege while assuming the right to tax non-Federal employees of States, counties, and municipalities, at one and the same time grants to the States the right to impose and collect State income taxes levied upon Federal officials and employees. This, of course, applies only where States have enacted income-tax laws.

I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that hundreds of thousands of our best citizens employed by the local governments will breathe a sigh of relief when this bill passes. This class of citizen never sought to evade the payment of taxes. It was only through the action of the Supreme Court that they were made immune, and it would have been nothing short of tragic for Congress to permit this belated reversal on the part of the Court to bring about full restitution.

I personally cannot see anything partisan in the bill before the Committee. I think our Republican friends on the left-hand side of the aisle should be as much interested in eliminating this destructive threat as are the Democratic Members of the majority sitting on my right.

I trust that in the spirit of true Americanism and as good citizens and as Representatives of our respective districts that the membership of the House, generally, will vote to pass the bill by an overwhelming majority. These employees will pay their taxes to the Federal Government as the law originally intended and will do so without complaint. I do not believe they assume for themselves the status of privileged tax-free citizens. Inasmuch as the bill provides for reciprocal taxation on an equality basis, there can be no question of the fairness of the Federal Government toward the States.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I will feel a whole lot easier regarding the lot of hundreds of my constituents who through the passage of this bill will be saved from financial ruin.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, who I know is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, in whom I have the greatest of faith, whether or not we are going to get an opportunity in this Congress to write into the laws of this country a measure to tax the $50,000,000,000 or more of tax-exempt securities now outstanding and to be issued in the future.

Mr. McCORMACK. The proposal to tax exempt securities is being heard before a committee of the Senate. I do not know why the Senate committee is hearing it. The Ways and Means Committee of the House will conduct hearings on it later.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to the Members that I could not conscientiously vote to place a tax upon the income of the poorly paid public servants, including teachers, of this country, who render the highest degree of service of any public servant, yet who are paid the lowest wage. I believe in placing the tax burden upon the people best able to bear it, those who own perhaps fifty or sixty billions of dollars' worth of the wealth of this country in the form of tax-exempt securities, upon the income from which they are not paying one single dime of taxation. Such a bill should be brought before this House. Congress should be given the right to say whether we shall tax them.

I shall, however, upon the word of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the effect that the proposal to tax tax-exempt securities is now being heard before a committee of the Senate, and his further statement that the Ways and Means Committee of the House will later conduct hearings on such proposal, support and vote for the pending measure.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I said, I will vote for this bill because I am confident from the answer the gentleman gave that such a bill as I plead for is now in the making. I know my farmers in Montana pay taxes three ways. They pay an income tax to the Federal Government; they pay an income tax to the State, and also a tax on their property. Every man or woman who draws a salary should bear his or her proportionate burden of taxation, but, likewise, the people who own this tremendous amount of bonds, the income from which is tax-exempt, should be required to bear their share of the burden; in other words, place the heavy burden of taxation upon those best able to bear it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; if I have time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman understand that the President in his recommendation on that subject suggests the imposition of a tax on securities hereafter to be issued?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know what he recommends, but for 20 years I have been asking that these tax-exempt securities be taxed. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not a matter of levying new taxes; it will not impose an income tax on anybody who does not have an income large enough to come within the scope of the present tax laws; in other words, people who receive small salaries from public funds will be exempt, just as are those who receive small income from other sources, if this bill passes.

I think this is an excellent bill. I think it is a very well balanced bill. I think it makes a very much needed reform in our tax law. After all, the number of public employees is increasing. The tax burden is heavy. How, therefore, can one defend a situation where the very people who receive those tax funds as salaries are themselves exempt from taxation? The Ways and Means Committee obviously cannot levy taxes on behalf of the States against the salaries of Federal employees. I presume if they had that power they would have included it in this bill. They have gone as close to it as they could. It seems to me this is a very well balanced bill and a thing which the country will recognize as a decided improvement over existing laws fixing tax liability.

I believe very much, as I have said before on the floor, that one of the greatest needs of this country is an increasing sense of the interdependence of all groups in this country of all kinds of people; and I hope the passage of this bill will help to build up this kind of spirit and understanding among the people. I am therefore very much in favor of it. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have been, I think, one of the liberal Members on this floor, and I do not want to go reactionary on anything. I do, however, want to raise a question here as fully as I can go into it in 2 minutes. We have a theory of government in this country that sprang from something, and that something still exists if our Government exists under the theory on which it began. Now, what is sovereignty?

When you say "a sovereign State," you do not refer to the sovereignty of a subdivision of this Nation. There is no such thing as State sovereignty. This is a dual form of government it is true, but we have the central government here. The sovereignty is in the people. They reside in States, but there is actually no such thing as the sovereignty of a State.

I have every sympathy for the purposes of this bill, I have every feeling for the thing it intends to accomplish, but I cannot vote for title I on account of the way I feel about the security of Federal sovereignty, and our national form of government here, our dual form of government. In other words, here we have the central government with its activities, and then a subdivision, a State, reaching up and attaching—and I use that word only in the sense of what will result from this bill—laying hold of the central government through the medium of taxation, reaching out through its taxing power and taking hold of that which emanates from the central activity of the Nation's life. I cannot lend my vote to a measure that must encourage further encroachment upon our original plan of government, so that States, cities, and so forth, may, with the overpowering and destroying power of taxation lay upon that which emanates solely from the Government itself. To adopt this principle may lead us into future complexities and injustices that will likely cause universal regret and general trouble in the land.

So I think there is a fundamental American principle and theory of government we are here approaching. For this reason I am going to vote against title I of the measure. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Chairman, my colleagues who have spoken previously on the measure before us have informed us that this proposed legislation is before Congress because of a recent Supreme Court decision and a letter to Congress from the President of the United States. The President asks if the words written into the Constitution do not mean exactly what they say; namely, that the Government can tax "income from whatever source derived." That sounds plausible and reasonable, but upon further analysis you can readily see that it might have far-reaching consequences. If the Federal Government can tax State bonds or the income from them, or tax the salaries of State officials, as well as the income of the various taxing units of the State and their employees, then we might justly ask, could not the Federal Government, by taxation, destroy State and local sovereignty? It is truly said that the power to tax is the power to destroy. Congress should not act hastily on this matter but should consider it from every angle.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is presenting to the House a bill that deals with this subject. Hearings were held on this legislation, and the committee has reported a bill carrying two titles. Title I of this act relates to the taxing of employees of the State and the subdivisions thereof. It also grants the States the reciprocal right to tax the employees of the Federal Government who are living within the borders of that State. Title 2 of this bill deals with the retroactive taxes which are due the Federal Government as a result of the Supreme Court decision rendered in the case of Helvering against Gerhardt. This section of the law should be enacted immediately in order to clear up the confusion and afford relief to State and local employees who might be subject to retroactive taxation due to the recent Supreme Court decision.

It is my contention that there can be no justification for those on Federal or State pay rolls escaping their share of the taxes. However, in our effort to tax them we must be very careful or we may create a situation that will destroy the very democracy of our Nation. This taxing power could easily be carried so far as to completely centralize our Government. We could easily become a totalitarian state or nation. There is no question but that the citizens of the various States can adopt a constitutional amendment that would provide for this tax as well as other taxes on the States and their subdivisions. There is serious doubt as to whether Congress can by legislative enactment tax the States and their employees without the consent of the State. The testimony produced at the hearing informs us that granting the Federal Government the power to tax State employees cannot be considered as a revenue producer. Under existing tax laws it is estimated it would not produce over $16,000,000. In 1937, 2,300,000, or 90 percent of the State and local employees, received salaries of less than $2,500. Therefore, they would all come within the $2,500 Federal income-tax exemption. Should the Federal Government materially reduce the tax exemption in the future it would greatly increase the revenue. The expenditures of our National Government are increasing so rapidly that most everyone agrees it is only a matter of time until these exemptions must be materially reduced or new sources of revenue must be secured.

It is unfair and unjust to our citizens to continually add tax burdens and make no effort to reduce Federal expenditures. For the next few minutes I want to discuss our Federal indebtedness and our Federal expenditures. The Federal Government has spent $62,000,000,000 in the last 10 years. If you remove the expenditures incurred during the World War, this amount equals the total amount of money spent by the Government from the day of George Washington's inauguration until the first day of President Hoover's administration.

It is interesting to note that in 1930, before the deficit began, the Federal debt stood at $16,185,000,000. In the message as submitted to Congress by the Bureau of the Budget we find at the end of the fiscal year 1940, according to their estimates, the debt will have reached the enormous total of $44,458,000,000. In other words, we have added a debt of more than $28,273,000,000 in 10 years.

The Roosevelt administration is responsible for all of this amount with the exception of approximately $5,000,000,000. It has been the theory of the present administration to secure recovery by pump priming or bring about prosperity by spending borrowed money. The facts are that in 1932 we had a national income of $40,000,000,000. In 1938 it was something over $60,000,000,000. These results should prove to anyone that we cannot spend borrowed money continually and secure national prosperity and security. This excessive spending and taxation of our citizens and industries paralyzes business, destroys confidence, and increases our unemployment problem.

On February 1 of this year the national debt amounted to a new all-time high of $39,684,970,614, and the deficit for the fiscal year beginning last July 1 is over $2,000,000,000. At the present rate it will be well over $3,000,000,000 by June 30. At the present time the Federal Government is spending money at the rate of $18,000 per minute. If we total the expenditures of the State, county, and local governments, we will find it approximates $17,000,000,000, or more than 25 percent of our national income. This means that every citizen must work 1 day out of every 4 for the Government.

Unfortunately, many of our citizens are led to believe that the rich are going to pay the taxes, that the Federal Government should never hesitate to spend money, as the taxes are always paid somewhere else or by someone else. For your information I am submitting a recent quotation from Roger W. Babson on this subject:

Last year public spending, including not only the Federal but the State, county, and local governments, totaled $17,000,000,000. This represented more than 25 percent of the national income. Add up the number of individuals getting support from the Government. My figures show 25,000,000. One person out of every six gets his livelihood from the Government. There are only 51,000,000 workers who should be gainfully employed. This means that every private wage earner is not only supporting his family, but another person, on the public pay roll.

Just for illustration, let us take a family which earns $37 a week, $150 a month, or $1,800 a year. Studies show that such a family spends about $10 per week, or $500 a year, on food. Of this, 70 cents per week, or $35 per year, represents hidden taxes. Each year these taxes add over $5 to the milk bill, $9 to the butcher's statement, $5 to the butter and egg man's bill, $5 to the baker's charges. On every roast of beef there are 127 hidden taxes; on every loaf of bread, 53 unseen taxes.

The average family probably spends $30 per month for rent. Of this amount, $7.50 per month, or $90 per year, is for local taxes. Each year the automobile eats up $175 of the family's income. In this amount is $35 for the tax collector. The same official, through 79 separate taxes, takes $5 out of a $50 suit. With 143 different taxes, he grabs 50 percent of the price of a package of cigarettes. This newspaper is paying 83 taxes you readers know nothing about. Every movie ticket carries 61 hidden donations to the Public Treasury. And when someone dies, these invisible taxes hit a record high—there are 157 of them.

All told, this average family—which owns no real property and thinks it pays no taxes—forks over $230 to $240 of its annual income of $1,800 for hidden taxes. This represents one-seventh of the total income. It means that for every 6 days the family bread-winner works for himself, he works 1 for the tax collector. (In the case of very wealthy people the reverse is true; they work 1 day for themselves and 6 for the public.) The significant point is that these unseen taxes are rising every year. In 1933 the hidden tax collector forced the wage earner to work only 1 day in 10. How soon will he be working 1 day in 3?

Every dollar that must be spent for taxes by the average citizen is just $1 less for him to spend for the necessities of life, the conveniences of life, and the luxuries of life. There are so many hidden taxes, which are sometimes called painless taxes, because they are easy to collect, that the average taxpayer does not realize he is paying them. In reality, the butcher, grocer, and landlord actually are tax collectors by adding to the price of his goods the taxes that are placed against them. In other words, you pay taxes whether you own property or not, which is contrary to general belief.

A group of accountants and experts for the State Committee for Florida Tax Information have compiled much information regarding hidden taxes, and I am asking unanimous consent to have this table inserted in the Record at this point:

20 cents of every dollar you spend goes for hidden taxes

If you spend	$100 per month		$150 per month		$300 per month
	Amount	Taxes	Amount	Taxes	Amount	Taxes
Expenditures divided as follows:
Rent	$20.00		$30.00		$60.00
Hidden taxes		$6.00		$9.00		$18.00

Taxgatherers get (hidden taxes)		$19.31		$30.30		$59.56
Percentage of taxes to total expenditures		19.31		20.2		19.8

Producers, processors, manufacturers and distributors must include the taxes they pay into the cost of their products—therefore, taxes are paid by the ultimate consumer.

There are evidences that this session of Congress will do what it can to reduce Federal expenditures. We should have the cooperation of the President of the United States, but I am afraid that he has in mind greatly increasing the present expenditures. The Budget he presented to Congress called for an outlay of $9,000,000,000. Since that time we have received additional items suggesting the expenditure of enormous sums for national defense; a suggestion that we construct the Florida ship canal, which has been disapproved by every agency that has investigated it, with the exception of specially appointed commissions, at a cost of $200,000,000; a suggestion that we carry into completion a wild dream of harnessing the tides at Passamaquoddy at a cost of $30,000,000.

It is time to call a halt to these wild and extravagant expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that about all the arguments that can be made for and against this bill have been made. I want to speak very frankly to Members on both sides of the House today.

No matter how anyone votes on this bill, I shall not question his motive at all. We are all sworn to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution, and that, of course, is our responsibility. It is an individual responsibility and it is a tremendous responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I was very anxious to find out whether or not this bill is or is not constitutional. I know, and you Members must know, that down in the Department of Justice all the legal lights there have studied and combed the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and other courts have prepared a book which they have sent, I believe, to every Member of Congress, trying to lead the Congress to enact this legislation. When the attorney who had made this study appeared before our committee I asked him this question:

Do you personally entertain any doubt as to the constitutionality of the proposal which is brought here?

Mr. MORRIS. I do not think I would be candid if I said that the question was one without doubt.

I then asked him this question:

We are in this position: This Congress is being asked to pass such an act, notwithstanding doubt as to the constitutionality of it?

Mr. MORRIS. I am not sure whether Congress would have any doubts about it or not. That is for you gentlemen to determine.

That is after this expert on constitutional law has studied this proposition ever since the President's message came in, yet he is not free from doubt as to the constitutionality of the measure.

Do not misunderstand me. Every man on this floor is on the spot.

You are confronted with what we have stood against not only on this side but on the other side of the House for the last 6 years, and that is having a measure brought in here that is clearly unsound or unconstitutional in one part and in another part has something we should all like to support. You are all on the spot. Logically, since the same principle is involved, there should have been brought in here a bill dealing not only with the mutual taxation of Federal and State officers but also the mutual taxation of Federal, State, and municipal bonds.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I cannot yield. I have only a very few minutes.

Those features should be in one bill, and they are what we should be passing on. But no, you have inserted in this bill something that terrifies the school teachers, the policemen, and the firemen and causes them to bring down upon the heads of Congress pressure to pass another part of this bill which many of you are convinced is unconstitutional and about which others entertain serious doubt.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to what you are asked to do. I want you to understand clearly the history of our income-tax laws as they affect State officers and employees.

I wish you to keep clearly in mind that under the 1913, 1916, and 1917 Revenue Acts we specifically exempted State officers and employees from Federal taxation.

But this exemption was removed in the 1918 Revenue Act.

I want you to keep in mind that for the past 21 years there has been no exemption in the revenue acts for State officers and employees, except that in the 1926 act Congress exempted from retroactive taxation State officers and employees who had relied on exemptions contained in the Treasury regulations from 1918 to 1924.

Bear in mind that there has been nothing to prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue going to the Supreme Court to test this question of the taxation of State officers and employees except the Treasury regulations and an opinion of the Attorney General following the 1918 act.

For the purpose of clarification, I wish to mention that the Attorney General in construing the act of 1918 ruled that, notwithstanding the removal of the exemption in the 1918 act, the Federal Government could not tax State officers and employees.

Now, then, bear this in mind: That the Treasury regulations followed that ruling of the Attorney General up to and including the Revenue Act of 1924. Therefore, except for that ruling and the Treasury regulations, there was no exemption in the law to prevent this question's being tested in the courts.

Following the 1924 act, the Treasury Department held that its regulations exempted from taxation only those engaged in an essential governmental function. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue then attempted to collect retroactive taxes on State functions which he considered nonessential governmental functions—municipal lighting plants, waterworks, and so forth.

Today we find ourselves in the same situation that Congress did in 1926—to prevent the injustice of retroactive taxation of State employees who had every reason to believe that they were not taxable. To remedy this situation and prevent retroactive taxation, Congress inserted the following section in the Revenue Act of 1926:

SEC. 1211. Salaries of State and municipal officers: Any taxes imposed by the Revenue Act of 1924 or prior revenue acts upon any individual in respect of amounts received by him as compensation for personal services as an officer or employee of any State or political subdivision thereof (except to the extent that such compensation is paid by the United States Government directly or indirectly) shall, subject to the statutory period of limitations properly applicable thereto, be abated, credited, or refunded.

I want to stress the point that Congress again left the field wide open for the Treasury to tax State salaries to the extent that they were not immune under the Constitution. In that 1926 act Congress did not place any exemption on future State salaries.

It becomes clearly apparent, therefore, that the salaries of State and municipal officers and employees, under the language of the 1938 Revenue Act, are taxable except as the constitutional immunity rule applies. The act contains no exemption for these employees (sec. 22 (a), Revenue Act of 1938).

So here we are today, asked in this revenue act—not to lift any exemptions out of the law but to say to the Supreme Court by the passage of this bill:

The Congress of the United States expects you to overturn the constitutional immunity against the taxation of essential State functions which has been the supreme law of the land under the Federal Constitution, and so decided by the courts time and time again for more than 68 years, Collector v. Day.

I repeat that the purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue, for it is conceded that it will not produce more than $16,000,000, a sum insufficient under the present spending program to run the Federal Government two-thirds of 1 day.

The purpose is to bring congressional pressure upon the Supreme Court to destroy the fundamental principle that one sovereign power shall not destroy the functions of another sovereign power through the power of taxation, which is the power to destroy.

This bill is here because they know that provision is there and they know they can test the law, but under cross-examination it was developed in the hearing from the attorney from the Department of Justice, the sponsor of this bill, that if Congress will pass this legislation in this form it will bring pressure upon the Supreme Court to override a rule that has been established since the beginning of the history of the Government, to protect the sovereign rights of a sovereign people in their freedom; and that is a part of the Constitution and the sixteenth amendment has not changed it. "From whatever source derived" cannot be lifted from its context.

We know the evil at which the sixteenth amendment was directed. The Court had held that you could not impose a tax upon the income from real estate or from personal property without apportionment. The people wanted an amendment that would have the effect—and all the debate here has brought out that this was the understanding of the States when they ratified that amendment—of making it possible for the Federal Government to tax the incomes from these two sources without apportionment. That is all in the world the sixteenth amendment did.

Now, let me talk to you on the majority side. I am earnest and sincere and I want you to think this over. The same principle is involved in this bill that is involved in the bill that is to follow—taxing municipal bonds. I know that 60 percent of the resources of the country on which industry can be developed are in the South, where you have electric power. I know the men who are in this city today working to get war industries located in your section of the South. Nobody begrudges you that development. But let me tell you that when you tax municipal bonds you tax the borrowing power, the only power that will enable you to take advantage of your resources. I can give you an illustration by what happened in a little town in western New York. They raised money from the bootblacks and from everybody in the community to bring a certain industry to their town. The representatives of the industry said, "As a condition precedent we must have hospitals, we must have schools, we must have pure water, and we must have recreation. We are going to have high-class employees." Without the borrowing power the town could not have obtained that industry. You will find it out soon enough in the South.

I am urging you today to sustain this principle that has been the very lifeblood of the communities of this Nation and has kept one sovereign power from encroaching upon the liberties and the freedom of the other. Just as soon as you open this Pandora's box it is going to come back to plague you.

There is nothing reciprocal about this tax, not at all. We step into the States and say, "We are arbitrarily going to tax your instrumentalities." We pitiful little Members of Congress that come and go, what do we amount to compared to the principle involved? We are saying meekly here today, "We consent that the States shall tax this great sovereign power regardless of the damage it may do in the future." Another Congress can come along and immediately revoke that power, but still we are in the States taxing the instrumentalities of government which the courts and the Constitution have sought to protect through all these years.

This is no small, picayune affair. Here we are dealing with fundamental principles. The principle involved in this bill is the very principle that in 1819 Daniel Webster, with his wonderful ability, spent 9 hours establishing before the Court, the principle that the power to tax is the power to destroy. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, as has been well pointed out by several gentlemen who have preceded me, the pending measure, H. R. 3790, is now before this body for consideration in response to two messages from the President of the United States, one sent to the Congress on April 25, 1938, and the other on January 19, 1939.

Many questions have been raised here as to the desirability of this type of legislation. Many gentlemen have raised the question of constitutional validity. Certainly every man has a right to his own views and his own convictions. I have never had any disposition to question the views of any of my colleagues as to the constitutionality of any measure presented here. It is rather interesting to observe in passing, however, that sometimes matters of this kind trouble us in different ways. I cannot keep from recalling that my distinguished friend and colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], who spoke here at some length, taking the position that there could be no doubt that the pending measure is clearly unconstitutional, a few years ago differed with me on another measure, and at that time the situation was just the reverse of what it is now. When the first Guffey coal bill came before the Committee on Ways and Means for consideration I studied it for a long time. I spent many hours at night, and, after attending church on Sunday, spent the balance of several Sundays examining the legal authorities.

I reached the definite conclusion that that bill was clearly unconstitutional. I spoke against it in this Chamber and I voted against it, but nothing of that kind disturbed my friend from Ohio. He supported the bill, spoke for it, and voted for it, and for one time at least I guessed right with the Supreme Court because the Court held the act unconstitutional.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not a fact that the Guffey coal bill is an active, affirmative statute today and the principle upon which the Supreme Court held it unconstitutional was because of the failure of the proper officials to make it enforceable?

Mr. COOPER. I do not propose to go into a reconsideration of the Guffey coal bill. That was not the purpose of my reference, but simply, in passing, to call attention to the fact that on that occasion I took the position that the bill was unconstitutional and I guessed right with the Court, while the gentleman from Ohio took the position that the bill was constitutional and happened to guess wrong with the Supreme Court.

Let us just bear this in mind from a practical standpoint in the matter of the constitutionality or the legal questions involved in this or any other measure presented to this body for consideration. There is a vast difference of opinion among the best lawyers of this Nation and a vast difference of opinion among the judges themselves as to the very question presented here.

I need only to remind you of the experience of a great President of the United States and a great Chief Justice of the United States, Hon. William Howard Taft, who, as President of the United States, vetoed a bill because he felt it was unconstitutional, yet when the bill was passed over his veto and reached the Supreme Court of the United States it was held constitutional. Now, if Chief Justice and President Taft could make a mistake now and then about the legality or the constitutionality of a measure enacted by the Congress, I do not believe any of us are subject to such great censure or condemnation if we may guess wrong now and then as to the course the Supreme Court may take.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. With pleasure.

Mr. McCORMACK. I also call to my friend's attention the fact that the Court itself has reversed itself. For instance, in the child-labor cases the Supreme Court declared the child-labor legislation unconstitutional and since then it has been held to be constitutional.

Mr. COOPER. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

It is extremely difficult for us here to pass upon this question. I do not think it is unreasonable at all to follow the suggestion offered by some of those who have preceded me that the only final and definite way that a matter of this kind can be determined is by presenting it to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. With pleasure.

Mr. MOTT. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman's legal learning, and it is for that reason I ask him this question, and I think his answer will be valuable.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is far too generous.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion, what provision of the Constitution or what ruling or in what case in the Supreme Court warrants a person in believing that a bill of this kind would be constitutional?

Mr. COOPER. I simply invite the gentleman's attention to what I think is a rather practical situation. There are two schools of thought in the country embracing some of the best legal talent the Nation affords in each of these schools of thought. One school of thought has proceeded throughout a number of years in taking the position that a constitutional amendment is necessary. Another school of thought, which I think is just as impressive, has proceeded throughout a number of years in taking the position that a constitutional amendment is not necessary. Now, the Department of Justice spent considerable time on this matter, and quite a number of lawyers under the personal direction of an Assistant Attorney General spent quite a long time during the summer and fall considering the questions involved here. I invite the gentleman's attention to the report made which was submitted to the Ways and Means Committee and in which they recommend this legislation. They sustain this position by analyzing all of the decisions of the courts bearing on this question and reach the conclusion that, irrespective of the sixteenth amendment, this measure has a reasonable basis of constitutional authority, and they take the position that with the sixteenth amendment the measure can reasonably be accepted as constitutional.

Much has been said about the sixteenth amendment. Let us refresh our memories as to the exact language of the sixteenth amendment. In my limited capacity I simply read it and interpret it as I have always been taught to read and interpret the plain English language:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

It occurs to me that that means just what it says. I know some decisions have been rendered by the Supreme Court since the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, some of them relating to decisions handed down by the Court many years before the sixteenth amendment was ever adopted, but in my interpretation of the plain English language I believe that is authority for the provisions of this bill and I do not believe there is any decision of the Court that is directly in conflict with the position that I here take.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I observe briefly that in Mr. Justice Black's dissenting opinion in the Gerhardt case he commented on the fact that the case of Brushaber against Union Pacific, and other cases, held contrary to the gentleman's assertion, and recommended that there be a re-examination of those cases.

Mr. COOPER. I cannot yield further to the gentleman, but certainly the distinguished gentleman from Michigan is not citing a dissenting opinion.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am, because Mr. Justice Black takes the position which the gentleman takes and comments on the fact that the Supreme Court had already interpreted the clause "from whatever source derived" and that it did not include the salary of State officials and he said there should be a reexamination of the case because of that.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. Justice Black's opinion, while separate, was a concurring opinion, and not a dissenting opinion.

Mr. COOPER. Yes. I did not mean to leave the impression that it was dissenting. Mr. Justice Black concurred in the opinion of the Court, but upon some separate reasons.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I regret I cannot yield further. I want to get to some practical phases of this matter. I am sorry that time will not permit a more lengthy discussion of the legal questions here involved, but I believe after this painstaking, deliberate, and careful study made by the Department of Justice and the position they take in coming before our committee and recommending this legislation, we may not be unduly disturbed by any question of legality with reference to this measure.

I shall take a few minutes to invite attention to a few practical phases of this problem. Let us bear in mind that to vote against this measure we must place ourselves in the position that we favor a preferred group of people in this country in the matter of the payment of taxes to support this Government and that that preferred group are those people who are holding public office, receiving their compensation from the taxpayers of the country.

For my part I cannot see how that is fair or a reasonable position to take. These very people sought to be taxed here are those who are receiving their compensation by virtue of holding public office and their compensation comes from the taxpayers of this country. Yet in some way we must say that they should occupy a preferred status in the matter of paying taxes, if we vote to defeat this measure.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman take the position that McCulloch against Maryland and Collector against Day are no longer the law of the land, and have in effect been overruled?

Mr. COOPER. I am not taking that position, but I have tried to cover the legal phases briefly, and I am now trying to touch on some of the practical matters.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I cannot yield further. Since this decision in the Gerhardt case, in which it was held that certain local officials and employees are taxable, we have had a most confusing situation, which now exists. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is receiving numerous requests from all types and kinds of local officials and employees, school teachers, firemen, policemen, all types and kinds of local employees, asking whether or not they are now taxable.

In view of the present state of the decisions he cannot intelligently advise them. He cannot be safe in telling them that they are not subject to tax, because he cannot know. One of the main purposes of the effort being exerted here is to try to clear up the situation, so as to have at least a fair starting point, based upon fairness and equality to everybody, and provide under this measure, title I, that the State, county, and municipal employees shall pay their fair and proper share of taxes to the support and maintenance of their Federal Government. Likewise that the Federal employees shall pay their fair and proportionate share toward the support and maintenance of their State governments.

There is a great deal of confusion even now. A great many of the leading newspapers throughout the country carry information that Federal officials do not pay Federal income taxes. We know that all of us and the President of the United States now pay Federal income taxes. The purpose of this measure is to try to equalize and have a fair situation for everybody. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to submit a unanimous-consent request for the purpose of bringing whatever controversial parts of the bill there may be as quickly as possible before the Committee. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by title.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think in view of what I previously stated concerning the limitation upon the time to debate this highly controversial and fundamental question this bill had better be read section by section in order to give some of the Members who have not had time to talk on the bill an opportunity to do so under the 5-minute rule. For that reason I am constrained to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Public Salary Tax Act of 1939."

TITLE I

SECTION 1. (a) Section 22 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1938 (relating to the definition of "gross income") is amended by inserting after the words "compensation for personal service" the following: "(including personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing)."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Beginning on page 1, in line 6, strike out all of section 1.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will yield, to see if we cannot agree on time.

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is agreed to, I will move to strike out the balance of title I.

The last speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], painted a very pitiful picture in regard to what might happen to these people who may be subject to retroactive taxes if this bill were defeated. This is not the first time that question has come up. That is a matter that can be handled very quickly on the floor of this House, as was done in 1926. People were relieved of retroactive taxes when the Treasury went out and sought to collect taxes.

When the gentleman talks about a preferred class of taxpayers the position of the Members of this House who are opposed to this bill is not that they object to these taxes, provided the people of this country decide they want to change the Constitution. They can do that under an amendment.

We are approaching the birthday of George Washington, and it might not be inappropriate to read just a few words from his Farewell Address. He said:

If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

It might be well to keep that in mind when we know the motive and purpose of this title I, coupled with these retroactive taxes.

When the attorneys of the Department of Justice were before our committee I asked them how long it would take them to test this proposition in the courts. They said they did not know, but probably 18 to 20 months. We know from experience with the eighteenth amendment that the people wanted to make a change in the Constitution, and they did it in 9 months. If this administration is so keen to reach this proposition they can reach it in an orderly way.

One of the Members on the other side said we are casting reflection upon the Court; that we were not trusting the present Court. Well, I happen to be one, at least, who is willing to give the Court the full benefit of the doubt. I have always had confidence in the Supreme Court of the United States, but I will not lower myself nor stultify myself to the extent of being a cat's-paw to a little group who wants to slide in around the Constitution through some chink they think they can find and bring pressure to bear upon the Court, assuming it will yield to that pressure, to overrule this precedent that has been established to protect the States and the Federal Government, for more than a century. I think the time has come for us to stand up here like men and vote on principle, and not resort to these subterfuges to tear down, to wreck, to ruin, to coerce a coordinate branch of the Government, the chief function of which is to guard the liberties and institutions of a free people. The Court is the people's Court.

If you strike out title I, but keep in title II, you will have accomplished your purpose. Then let us come back here in an orderly fashion and consider the other question. Let the head of this administration stand up as the President of a sovereign people should and approach this thing as provided in the Constitution, by a constitutional amendment, giving the people of the 48 States an opportunity to say, as the sovereign citizens, whether they want this plan of taxation installed in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to see if we can reach an agreement on time. I want to be liberal. I do not want to make a motion, but I would like to see if we could agree by unanimous consent to limit debate on this particular amendment to 20 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the gentleman that time for debate has been very limited and many Members wish to express themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in behalf of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, obviously it is not possible for me to fully express my views concerning the bill now under consideration within the brief space of time which I am permitted to use, but in the time at my disposal I want to make a few brief observations.

The case of McCulloch against State of Maryland et al., which was decided in the year 1819, first came to my attention when I was a student in the law school at the University of North Carolina. I am convinced that neither that case nor the case of Collector v. Day (11 Wall. 113) has been overruled by the Supreme Court, or in any way modified by any decision of the Supreme Court which has been subsequently rendered. Both decisions are still authorities in this Nation and both constitute at the present time the law of the land. The constitutional immunities referred to in the course of this debate have been recognized for more than a hundred years in every decision rendered by the Supreme Court bearing upon the point. I do not believe that this bill as a matter of public policy should be adopted. Neither do I believe that it is compatible with the dual system of sovereignty under which we have functioned for 150 years. I firmly believe that the measure is unconstitutional. At least I know that all of the decisions I have read lead my mind conclusively to the opinion that the Supreme Court will hold it unconstitutional if it is ever presented to the Court in the form it is now proposed. On the other hand, no decision I have read persuades me to a contrary opinion. The case of Helvering against Gerhardt, decided by the Supreme Court on May 23, 1938, does not furnish any basis for a belief that the Court will overrule itself and hold that the Federal Government has a right to impose a tax upon the instrumentalities of the sovereign States of the Union, nor does the opinion in the Gerhardt case lead me to believe that the Court will uphold any act which attempts to give to the States a right to impose an income tax upon the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

The fact is the case of Helvering against Gerhardt is not even a case in point. In that case the Court held that the employees of the Port Authority of New York were not employees of the State or of a political subdivision of it, and in that opinion the Court stated that it expressed no opinion as to whether a Federal tax may be imposed upon the Port Authority itself with respect to its receipt of income or its other activities. Even in the Gerhardt case, about which we have heard so much during the course of this debate, the "constitutional immunities" are clearly recognized. I doubt very much that any reputable lawyer will state to this House that in his opinion the proposed act is constitutional.

The section which the pending amendment seeks to strike out is the section which would subject all of the employees of the several State governments to a Federal income tax. This means, of course, that not only the Governors, the chief executives of the several States, together with the heads of the several State departments, but all other employees of the State, including the poorly paid teachers in our public schools, would be forced to pay a Federal income tax upon the salaries they receive for the public services which they render. Not only the teachers but those in the departments of public health, industrial commissions, social work, and in every other capacity, would have a Federal income tax imposed upon them. If we destroy and annihilate the traditional principle of constitutional immunities, the Governors of the sovereign States would have to pay a Federal income tax upon a fair rental value of the Governors' mansions which they are permitted to occupy, because certainly the occupancy of the Governor's mansion is an emolument of the office. The State of New York in imposing an income tax upon the income of the President of the United States could, of course, consider his occupancy of the White House as one of the emoluments of his office, fix a fair rental value upon the White House and premises, force the President to list it as an item in his income-tax return, and impose a State income tax upon the value fixed.

It cannot be argued that this is not contemplated, nor can it be argued that officers of the Army and Navy, occupying quarters furnished by the Government, could not likewise be forced to pay income tax upon a fair rental value of the quarters they are permitted to occupy, since clearly their occupancy of the homes and quarters furnished to them constitutes an important part of their income. Conceivably even the States might insist that a fair rental value of the offices which we are permitted to occupy as Members of Congress constitute a part of our pay and, therefore, should be subjected to a State income tax. I believe that the enactment of this bill in its present form would bring about great confusion and accomplish very little good.

I understand that there are 17 States in the Union in which there is no State income-tax law. Would it be fair for the Federal Government to impose a tax upon the State employees in these States when the States themselves would be prohibited by their own constitutions from imposing a reciprocal tax upon the salaries of Federal employees who are residents of the States affected.

Does anyone suggest that the thousands upon thousands of Federal employees residing in the District of Columbia would in any way be adversely affected by the passage of this measure? They have no income tax in the District of Columbia other than the Federal income tax. Members of Congress and other Federal employees pay a Federal income tax upon their salaries and State income tax upon other incomes earned in the States in which they retain their residence. If more revenue is needed to support the Federal Government, and if those receiving salaries from the Federal Government are not now paying a sufficient tax upon the salaries they receive, additional tax can easily be imposed.

When the advocates of this measure discuss the constitutional question involved, they wind up their arguments by stating that by the passage of this act the question can be clearly presented to the Supreme Court. There are, of course, other ways in which the question may be presented which will not involve the far-reaching effects of the proposed measure. It occurs to me that this act is inspired by a desire on the part of the Federal Government to enter another field of taxation and to take into the grasp of the Federal Government all of the employees of the several States.

If there is serious question as to the liability of State employees to the income-tax provisions of the Federal law, and if there is fear that the Federal Government will attempt to impose retroactive taxes upon State employees, then, of course, we should pass title II of the pending measure; and I have no objection to the passage of title II, notwithstanding the fact that I do not believe that the Federal Government even now has any right to impose an income tax upon State employees. I do not want to question the sincerity of the advocates of this measure, but I do not believe that the interrelation between title I and title II make the passage of this bill in its entirety imperative. If it is the sincere wish of the sponsors of this measure to protect State employees from the imposition of retroactive taxes, why not pass title II and leave the fundamental questions presented in title I to a determination of the people of this Nation by permitting them to vote upon a constitutional amendment, which will settle the question for all time to come?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman will admit that title I is the heart of the bill, will he not?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I do not admit that, although it is an important part of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. COOLEY] seems to favor the motion to strike out this section on the ground of principle primarily. I cannot agree with that, and I do not believe the Members of this House agree that a school teacher, a deputy county clerk, a fireman, a policeman, or an individual who works for a State government or subdivision should be any more exempt from the provisions of a Federal income tax than the man who works in a store, than the plumber, the bricklayer, or the man or woman who earns his or her bread by the sweat of his or her face. I cannot justify that sort of thing in my own mind.

It has been my experience not only during the recent years of depression but all of my life, particularly my public life, that there are many thousands who are always ready and willing to assume the duties of public service and to accept the compensation that goes along with it. I think they would be perfectly willing to pay the small income tax that the Government exacts from them on the salary they draw from the States. There are so few, after all, who would be subjected to the income tax.

As I recall, the average salary is about $1,424. There is a question as to whether or not the decisions which have been spoken of are still law. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the Supreme Court has not overruled any of those opinions. I say to you, on the other hand, if the question of the Constitution is bothering you, that there is not one single, solitary word or syllable in the Constitution of the United States which specifically prevents the Federal Government from taxing the instrumentalities of the States nor prevents the States from taxing the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the judicial interpretation indicate that the Congress cannot do that, so that the Federal Government might be in a position to tax the instrumentalities of the States, which would impinge the States, and vice versa?

Mr. DUNCAN. The Supreme Court has decided that, but I still say there are no words in the Constitution of the United States so holding or directing—not one word or syllable.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. In all of the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court bearing upon this question I will ask the gentleman if they have not recognized constitutional immunities?

Mr. DUNCAN. That is true.

Mr. COOLEY. May I ask one other question?

Mr. DUNCAN. Beginning with the decision in McCulloch against Maryland, when the question first rose.

Mr. COOLEY. Is there anything at all in the Gerhardt case which persuades the gentleman to believe that the Supreme Court will hold the present act constitutional?

Mr. DUNCAN. My answer to the gentleman is that as I read the Gerhardt case the only thing the Court decided was whether or not those employees were engaged in an essential governmental function.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is recognized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, so far as has been pointed out here today, the principle enunciated in the McCulloch case and the Day case has not been modified in any particular by the Gerhardt case or any other decision of the Supreme Court. It has always held exactly as it held in the Gerhardt case. I think the principle of those cases is summed up in Helvering v. Powers (293 U. S. 214), in which the Court in substance had this to say:

The power of the Federal Government to tax the functions of a State or political subdivision, or the State employees engaged in carrying out such functions, depends upon whether or not such functions are of an essential governmental character. States and political subdivision have two kinds of power; one that is governmental and public, and one that is proprietary and private. In the exercise of the former, the State and its political subdivisions are clothed with sovereignty and are immune from Federal taxation, but in the exercise of the latter power the State or political subdivision is treated as a private individual and, therefore, subject to Federal taxation. A State or political subdivision cannot escape Federal taxation by engaging in businesses which constitute a departure from usual governmental functions even though such enterprises are undertaken for what the State concedes to be for the public benefit.

There is no decision of the Supreme Court down to and including the Gerhardt case which changes that fundamental principle.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York. Mr. CELLER. The Supreme Court has been known to change its decisions. I have in mind, for instance, a decision in the case of Eisner against Macomber, in which the Court held you could not tax stock dividends. A decade later the Supreme Court changed its point of view and said we could consider stock dividends as income.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. Chairman, bear in mind if the Court wanted to change its opinion, if it wanted to modify this principle, if it wanted to overrule itself, it could have done so very easily in the Gerhardt case, because it referred to the policy enunciated in the Day case several times in that decision. It had every opportunity to overrule itself if it had cared to do so.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make one more observation. I hope the Committee will refer to page 9 of the hearings and read there a digest of the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Commissioner of Internal Revenue, petitioner, against Charles C. Stillwell, which I think is the last word on this question. Later on I think probably it might be well for some of us to point out some of the high points of that decision and read them in the RECORD.

The court in that case, as late as January 12, 1939, summing it all up, said:

True, as argued, in the meantime certain regulations have been promulgated by the Treasury Department, evidently with the purpose of making such compensation subject to income tax, but if immunity exists as a constitutional matter, as we think it does, no regulation could alter the rights of respondent, and we have no right to alter the Constitution in this respect by passing this law.

The Congress has no more right to amend the Constitution by statute than has the Treasury Department to amend it by regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk a little practical politics again. In connection with my consideration of this bill I find there are many Members who believe they would rather have the matter submitted to the people through a constitutional amendment. If you happen to be in that class, this is your chance. Vote to sustain this amendment.

What will be the result? It will take out section 1 and, of course, will take out section 2. This will follow as a matter of necessity. This will leave the field open to come forward with a proposal to amend the Constitution. Let us go about this in a legal, constitutional way and let the people themselves decide. Let the people themselves say what they want.

There is quite a large group here that believe in this. They would like to get rid of the first title, but they would also like to vote for the retroactive provision. This is your grand opportunity. If you vote to strike out the first section, the following sections will go out, and then you will have title II, the retroactive feature, left in the bill. If you have any fears about the retroactive feature, or if you have any constituents who are fearful about what the administration, and I mean by that the Treasury Department, will do, you will be amply protected by voting for the second title. You need have no fears about that. The administration will not seek to collect taxes retroactively when the Congress has once indicated its views. The Treasury will adhere to what the Congress does today.

I wonder if the Members really appreciate the enormity of what we will do today if we enact title I into law. How many people in your State will be reached by Federal taxation? Literally tens of thousands. I dare say that in large States like Ohio taken together a million people will be reached by this taxation. Then, as I said in my statement awhile ago, we in Ohio will be forced to counteract that with an income-tax law tax.

Mr. Chairman, some cases have been referred to here today that have been a source of much trouble to the Supreme Court on the question of how far this rule of immunity recognized between the States and the Government shall go. The Supreme Court was hard put in the Gerhardt case in determining whether or not the two men in question who worked for the Port of New York Authority came within or without the immunity. When you apply that rule to a great State like Ohio or Pennsylvania you apply it to all the employees of the industrial commission, for example, to the tax commission, and no doubt there are tens of thousands of employees in these commissions. And you apply it to the employees of the welfare divisions and all other such divisions of government that are a vital part of the State government. Then where are you going to draw the line? Where is the line of demarcation to be drawn? It is clear to me there will be literally thousands upon thousands of test cases brought in all the States of the Union. As the gentleman from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH, stated so emphatically and so eloquently a while ago, the State of New York could reach out and tax the salary of the President of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In just a moment.

If the State of New York does that, why cannot the State of Pennsylvania do the same thing? When we start on this program of taxing the office who is going to say to us in Ohio that we cannot tax the salary of the President for he is our President, regardless of whether or not he lives in Ohio? If we are going to tax the office, why cannot Georgia do that, and why cannot Arkansas do that? I just cite this to show you that we will be in an interminable mess. Why not be satisfied with a course that has stood the test of time, that has grown up over 120 years as the greatest Nation in the world? Why throw us into conflict and have constant recrimination between the States and the Federal Government? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELOSON].

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my opinion on this bill before I vote on it. I am in favor of striking out title I, I am in favor of the pending amendment, and I would also vote against the whole bill, because the bill is not necessary. However, I am in favor of taxing Federal employees, from the highest to the lowest, but I am not in favor of retroactive taxation.

What I object to more than anything else is the manner in which this bill comes to us. You recall that some time back a message came to us from the White House in which the President stated that in order for the Treasury Department not to impose retroactive taxes it would be much better to pass this bill. That is the trick they always use in passing these bills.

The incentive that is held out in this bill is that if you pass the bill it will permit Federal employees to be taxed; but you must remember that your State cannot tax Federal employees who are living in the District of Columbia, but only those who are living in your own State. You could build up a great District here by having all the Federal employees who can possibly do so move into the District of Columbia and live here at the expense of your States. That is what will happen.

The real purpose of the bill is to destroy States' rights, and that is what I object to. So the threat is to save a certain group from retroactive taxation, which also is not constitutional, and the promise that if you pass the bill you may tax Federal employees. But, remember, you have jeopardized the States' rights.

We are here to represent our people and to protect their rights, and if any question comes up in regard to what you ought to do or ought not to do, all you have to do is refer to the ninth amendment to the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, during the course of my remarks in the general debate on this bill the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] asked me to yield for the purpose of correcting what he conceived to be an error on my part in quoting him as having stated in debate that this bill should be passed notwithstanding any doubt Members might entertain as to its constitutionality. The gentleman then observed that he had never stated that a Member should vote for the bill if he were absolutely satisfied beyond doubt that it is unconstitutional, but that what he did say was that if a Member had a proper and reasonable doubt he should resolve that doubt in favor of the bill's constitutionality. By this he meant, of course, for it would be impossible to construe his language otherwise, that a Member should vote for the bill notwithstanding any "proper and reasonable doubt" he may have as to its constitutionality.

I cannot agree with the gentleman's reasoning, any more than I could agree at the time with the reasoning of the President when in the last Congress he sent his historic letter to the chairman of a committee of this House urging that the bill then before it should be immediately reported and passed by the House notwithstanding any doubt, however reasonable, that the committee might have as to its constitutionality. Such reasoning, in my opinion, is alien to the whole idea of constitutional, representative government, and it is certainly alien to the almost universally accepted idea of what the function and responsibility of the Congress is.

Mr. Chairman, you cannot entertain a "proper and reasonable doubt" as to the constitutionality of a bill and at the same time believe that the bill is constitutional. And if you do not believe a bill to be constitutional, how can you vote for it and still fulfill the obligation of your oath as a Member of the House to uphold, maintain, and defend the Constitution?

Is any gentleman here convinced in his own mind that this bill is constitutional? If he is, he has failed to say so thus far in this debate. Does any gentleman even believe the bill to be constitutional? If he does, he has refrained, so far as I have been able to observe, from stating that belief on the floor of this House today.

Why is this? The reason, it seems to me, is obvious. It is because there is no ground, either in the Constitution itself or in any of the decided cases of the Court whose exclusive function it is to interpret the Constitution, upon which to base a valid argument, or even to venture a serious opinion that a bill of this kind is permitted by the Constitution.

When the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] was on the floor I took occasion to inquire of him what constitutional provision or what ruling of the Supreme Court would warrant anyone in believing this bill to be constitutional.

The gentleman from Tennessee did not answer my question. He referred me instead to the report of the Department of Justice on the desirability of passing this bill and to some of the observations of the administration attorneys who drafted it, not one of whom, so far as I know, has stated it to be his belief that it is constitutional.

Mr. Chairman, how can anyone possibly be of the opinion that this proposal is constitutional if McCulloch against Maryland and Collector against Day are still the law of the land and if they still constitute the Supreme Court's interpretation of the constitutional authority of the Federal Government to tax an instrumentality of a State and of the constitutional authority of a State to tax an instrumentality of the Federal Government? I would like to have some gentleman answer that simple question.

In McCulloch against Maryland, in Dobbins against The Commissioners of Erie, and in Collector against Day it was held so clearly that no subsequent Court has ever questioned it, that the Federal Government cannot tax an instrumentality of a State and that a State cannot tax a Federal instrumentality. And that interpretation of the Constitution has not only never been modified by any subsequent decision of the Supreme Court but, on the contrary, every subsequent decision on that point has strengthened and fortified the Court's original declaration. If this is a fact, and I have never yet heard anyone dispute it, then this bill cannot be constitutional for the simple reason that it proposes that the Federal Government may tax the instrumentalities of a State, and that a State may tax the instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

It is needless to observe here, I presume, that both a Federal officer, as such, and the payment of a salary by the Federal Government to a Federal officer are instrumentalities of the Federal Government and that a State officer himself and the salary paid him as compensation for his services as such are instrumentalities of the State. The language of Collector against Day and of Dobbins against The Commissioners of Erie, which followed McCulloch against Maryland, is unambiguous and definitely decisive upon that point, as every lawyer in this body is aware.

The reasoning in McCulloch against Maryland, in Collector against Day, and in Dobbins against The Commissioners of Erie is perfectly familiar and perfectly understandable to everyone, whether he be lawyer or layman. The reason and the logic of the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution in that regard was that the State is a sovereign power in respect to its instrumentalities and that the Federal Government has no right to interfere in any way, either by taxation or otherwise, with any of the sovereign instrumentalities of that State. One of the sovereign instrumentalities and prerogatives of a State is to issue bonds or securities in any manner and upon any terms or conditions it may see fit. The Federal Government has no right to go into a State and say, "You cannot issue a tax-exempt security," or "If you issue such a security we will tax it, whether your State law declares it to be tax-exempt or not." The State has a sovereign right to employ such officers and to pay them such salaries to help maintain the government of that State as the State may please, and the Federal Government has no right to go into the State and say, "If you pay a certain salary to one of your officers we will change and reduce that salary by taxing it."

To do this is unconstitutional. It is unconstitutional for the simple and sufficient reason that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared it to be unconstitutional, and that it has never rescinded or modified that declaration. To attempt by an act of Congress to do a thing which the Supreme Court, in rendering its decision in an appropriate case upon the direct question involved, has declared to be in violation of the Constitution is a vain thing. The Congress has no power by a mere vote of the majority of its Members to change a provision of the Constitution. Only the people can do that through the orderly and prescribed process of a constitutional amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I am not a constitutional lawyer, I am not a lawyer at all, and all of these large words and figures and references, and so forth, that are put forth by the legal profession are for the purpose of adding "color and verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and uninteresting narrative," so far as I am concerned. The thing I am concerned with, however, is the following of orderly processes by this body.

The people of the district I come from are not opposed to reciprocal taxation of employees of municipalities and the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, they favor such reciprocal taxation; but they demand of this Congress that it be carried out in accordance with the orderly processes of law.

I would like to address myself for a brief moment to the leadership on the majority side of the House. The leadership on the majority side has arrived there by virtue of long service, and that leadership of the majority may become again the leadership of the minority. The leadership of the majority as at present composed is largely from the South, and from the expressions I have heard on the floor, many of them are from the Tennessee Valley Authority districts. I ask you in all sincerity whether or not title I of this act does not lead directly toward the opening wedge for the taxation of the income, if you please, by the State of, perhaps, the well-known Tennessee Valley Authority and a number of other projects of like character?

It seems to me now is the time to consider, and consider carefully, what we are doing here. I am a political descendant, if you like, of that great man, Abraham Lincoln, the founder of the Republican Party, of which I have the honor to be a member, a Jeffersonian Republican, if you please, and he was and so am I a Jeffersonian Republican.

For that reason I demand that this Congress turn over to the people of the United States the final decision as respects title I of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I call to the attention of the membership of the House the inconsistent position that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and others on his side of the aisle find themselves in. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] talks about the Constitution in its application to this law and then he says, what about the practical political side of it? They talk about taxing the person who works in the welfare department and other State or city departments and the political effect. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are a lot of merchants in their districts and States who are subject to the payment of an income tax; yes, and there are a lot of professional men in their States and other income-tax payers, and they are paying a State income tax, and they are paying a Federal income tax. What about them? How important are they in the game of politics? I think they are worthy of consideration, if one views this from purely a political angle.

Coming to the question of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], his question was entirely different. The gentleman refers to the case of Collector against Day, which was a decision rendered in connection with the Civil War income-tax law, it arose out of that, and also the case of McCulloch against Maryland, which he mentioned arose long before the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Are those decisions now the law of the land?

Mr. McCORMACK. As modified. We have never had a direct case under the sixteenth amendment, as to whether or not the Federal Government can subject to income tax employees of a State or political division of a State, who were engaged in an essentially governmental function. In a recent decision of the Supreme Court, the decision on a West Virginia law, where that State imposed a sales tax or similar tax on the contractors engaged in business in that State, one concern with a Federal contract raised the constitutionality of the power of the legislature to impose such a tax and to have it apply to a contractor doing Federal work. The Supreme Court, in substance, said the Legislature of the State of West Virginia had the power to enact such a law and to impose such a tax.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot yield; and, by the way, the gentleman refused to yield to me.

Mr. MOTT. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then I withdraw it if I am mistaken.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McCORMACK. They talk about an amendment to the Constitution. That means years and years. If the Supreme Court says that this is constitutional, we do not need an amendment to the Constitution; and the only way that that question can be thrashed out is by the passage of this law and letting a test case be raised, and then if the Supreme Court says that we have not the power, we can and will have to amend the Constitution. If the Supreme Court says that we have the power, that will not be necessary.

Gentlemen talk about the Constitution, but the real reason is that they are opposed to the bill. On the other hand, when they go back home they will have to meet the argument from the merchants and from the small businessmen and from every other income-tax payer who is paying his income tax to the State and to the Federal Government, and they will ask why they voted to allow the public employees to be exempt from the payment of an income tax, and that they have to pay one.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman will agree that if the pending amendment is struck out, it strikes at the very heart of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. As my time is about up, I urge the defeat of the pending amendment. If you believe in the objective the bill seeks, I submit you should vote against this amendment. Vote for the bill, thereby enabling the Supreme Court to pass upon any legal questions involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—ayes 136, noes 141.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 116 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1938 (exempting compensation of teachers in Alaska and Hawaii from income tax) shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1938.

SEC. 3. The United States hereby consents to the taxation of compensation, received after December 31, 1938, for personal service as an officer or employee of the United States, any Territory or possession or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, by any duly constituted taxing authority having jurisdiction to tax such compensation, if such taxation does not discriminate against such officer or employee because of the source of such compensation.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: On page 2, beginning in line 9, strike out all of section 3, down to and including line 18.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, it has been my fortune to serve for many years in lawmaking bodies. In all that period I never saw the presentation of so futile a proposal as is contained in this section. [Applause.]

I have no wish nor the time to discuss the constitutional questions involved. I ask the Committee only to consider a perfectly simple proposition. The State now may or may not tax the officers and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and the Federal Government may or may not tax those of the States. Here is a proposal for us to consent that the salaries of Federal Government officers may be taxed by the States. It is now constitutional or it is not constitutional for the State of Massachusetts to tax the salary of the postmaster of Boston. I want that to sink in. It is constitutional or it is not constitutional. If it is constitutional, the thing can be done now and our consent is not only futile but also ridiculous.

I want to repeat that. If it is constitutional, it can be done now and our consent is not only futile but it is ridiculous. I will add an adjective or two. It is absurd. Another one: It is silly; if the thing can be done now. If it cannot be done now, then the same adjectives may be applied to any attempt on our part to change the Constitution by law. Such a proposal as that is novel, is exciting, is preposterous and absurd, and it is no credit to the man who wrote it. [Laughter and applause.] It is an expression of good will; it is a voicing of amity; it is a gesture, absolutely vain. If it is unconstitutional no statute can make it constitutional, and to save the fair name of the House from the laughter this section will arouse in the coming years, from having the finger of ridicule pointed to us by doing such a preposterous thing. I trust we will refrain. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised by the position taken by the very able, learned, and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who has had such long and distinguished service on the Banking and Currency Committee. I am sure he only momentarily overlooked the fact that in the case of McCulloch against Maryland it was held that the State could not tax a national bank. Following that decision, recognizing that decision, and under the force and strength of that decision, section 5219 of the Revised Statutes was enacted by the Congress, which permits States to tax national banks the same as State banks.

Had it not been for that statute passed by the Congress, and had the decision in the case of McCulloch against Maryland continued to operate, we would probably not today have the States taxing national banks. So certainly, since the Congress has granted consent in the provision of the Revised Statutes to which attention has been invited, it is only proper that we should likewise have section 3 of title I contained in this bill.

In addition to that, certainly it could not be contended that the fair and equitable thing to do would be for us, under the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of title I, to impose a Federal income tax upon employees of States, counties, and municipalities without also including section 3 of the same title, which grants to the States and political subdivisions the consent of Congress to tax Federal employees. This certainly is based upon equality and fairness, and no just criticism could be offered against this provision.

I ask for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill forthwith to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], and call attention to the fact that when the McCulloch against Maryland case was decided the national banks were fiscal agents of the Federal Government. At the present time national banks are merely chartered by the Federal Government, the same as other private agencies might be, such as the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans. There is no connection, no connection whatsoever, between the fiscal policies of the Federal Government and the national banks at the present time, but when the McCulloch case was handed down the national banks were the fiscal agents of the Federal Government and, therefore, were an integral and inseparable part of the Federal Government.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will permit, I want to get to another point.

It is conceded, I think, by every intelligent lawyer who is a Member of this House—and I say this advisedly—that the Congress of the United States has no authority to add to, to subtract from, to modify, or to amend any of the provisions of the Constitution. Where an obligation is provided by the Constitution the Congress of the United States cannot make certain of our citizens immune from the obligation. Where the Constitution says that we must or must not do certain things, who are we, the Members of Congress, who are we as individual citizens of the United States—because we have just as much authority as individual citizens as we do collectively as the Congress of the United States—to amend the Constitution? The Constitution of the United States is inviolate. It may be amended only in the manner provided for amendment. The Congress of the United States cannot amend, or modify, or interpret that Constitution.

The question of interpretation is left to the judiciary. The judicial branch of this Government has held that it is unconstitutional, it is not in conformity with the Constitution, for a State to tax the Federal Government, any of its agencies, or any officer or employee of the Federal Government. Now, who are we in our egotism, that we sit around here and tell the States that they may come in and do something which the Supreme Court says is prohibited to them under the Constitution? Think of that, Mr. Chairman; think how ridiculous, in the words of my esteemed friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], how silly it is that we are presuming to do something which the Constitution says cannot be done. Who are you, who am I, that we overrule the established law of this land, the fundamental law of this land as interpreted by the Supreme Court? Big I; the States—little you.

Do not forget that the Congress is a creature of the Constitution. The States are creatures of the Constitution. The Supreme Court is a creature of the Constitution. To the Supreme Court is delegated a definite duty—the interpretation of the Constitution. That is why we have courts. It is our duty to make the laws; it is the duty of the courts to interpret the laws and the Constitution, and they have most decidedly interpreted the Constitution in this respect. We should not, if we are to preserve our constitutional form of government, overrule their decisions. It is not granted to us to do so under the Constitution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman from Michigan offered his preferential motion merely as a pro forma amendment in order to obtain the floor. Does not the gentleman wish to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am afraid were I to do so somebody might embarrass me by objecting. If the gentleman himself wants to submit such a request, I shall not object.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman moved it himself. The gentleman states that he offered his motion merely for the purpose of obtaining the floor.

On the pending amendment I think the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] is convincing.

I have great respect for my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. I remember the first public office that I held was as a delegate to the constitutional convention in Massachusetts; and I sat at the knees of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and gained knowledge and wisdom from him. I have always had the most profound respect for him, for his ability, for his sincerity. It is with great hesitancy that I take issue with him.

I think we have the power to do this thing. Certainly if we have the power, we should not subject the State and city employees to a Federal income tax without subjecting the Federal employees to a State income tax.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The holding in the McCulloch case was that a State could not tax the salaries of Federal officials or the instrumentalities of the Federal Government without its consent. All we are doing by this section is giving the consent of the Federal Government that its employees may be taxed.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is quite correct. You see, when great constitutional lawyers like my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], and my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], put their minds to a subject it makes a poor little lawyer like myself hesitate to express an opinion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were—ayes 80, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as we are now past the controversial part of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that title II be read in its entirety, then to be open for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II

SEC. 201. Any amount of income tax (including interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1938, to the extent attributable to compensation for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing—

(a) shall not be assessed, and no proceeding in court for the collection thereof shall be begun or prosecuted (unless pursuant to an assessment made prior to January 1, 1939);

(b) if assessed after December 31, 1938, the assessment shall be abated, and any amount collected in pursuance of such assessment shall be credited or refunded in the same manner as in the case of an income tax erroneously collected; and

(c) shall, if collected on or before the date of the enactment of this act, be credited or refunded in the same manner as in the case of an income tax erroneously collected, in the following cases—

(1) Where a claim for refund of such amount was filed before January 19, 1939, and was not disallowed on or before the date of the enactment of this act;

(2) Where such claim was so filed but has been disallowed and the time for beginning suit with respect thereto has not expired on the date of the enactment of this act;

(3) Where a suit for the recovery of such amount is pending on the date of the enactment of this act; and

(4) Where a petition to the Board of Tax Appeals has been filed with respect to such amount and the Board's decision has not become final before the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 202. In the case of any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1937, and before January 1, 1939, compensation for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, shall not be included in the gross income of any individual under title I of the Revenue Act of 1938 and shall be exempt from taxation under such title, if such individual either—

(a) did not include in his return for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1936, and before January 1, 1938, any amount as compensation for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing; or

(b) did include any such amount in such return, but is entitled under section 201 of this act to have the tax attributable thereto credited or refunded.

SEC. 203. Any amount of income tax (including interest, additions to tax, and additional amounts) collected on, before or after the date of the enactment of this act for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1939, to the extent attributable to compensation for personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, shall be credited or refunded in the same manner as in the case of an income tax erroneously collected, if claim for refund with respect thereto is filed after January 18, 1939, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, finds that disallowance of such claim would result in the application of the doctrines in the case of Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405) extending the classes of officers and employees subject to Federal taxation.

SEC. 204. Neither section 201 nor section 203 shall apply in any case where the claim for refund, or the institution of the suit, or the filing of the petition with the Board, was, at the time filed or begun, barred by the statute of limitations properly applicable thereto.

SEC. 205. Compensation shall not be considered as compensation within the meaning of sections 201, 202, and 203 to the extent that it is paid directly or indirectly by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

SEC. 206. The terms used in this act shall have the same meaning as when used in title I of the Revenue Act of 1938.

SEC. 207. If either title of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the other title of the act shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: On page 5, strike out, beginning in line 18 and ending in line 21, all of section 205.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment by striking out section 205 because, under the present wording, the exemptions of incomes in regard to retroactive taxes might be made inapplicable to many innocent persons. For example, section 205 states that compensation shall not be considered as such within the meaning of sections 201, 202, and 203, if the compensation is traced directly or indirectly to moneys paid out by the United States Government or any agency or subdivision thereof. Take Cornell University in my State—New York. This university has a State agricultural college which is supported by the Federal Government. It is a land-grant college. Practically every State university has such a land-grant college. The attendants, teachers, and aides of such college receive their salaries and emoluments indirectly out of the land-grant fund, which, in turn, is an indirect payment of the Federal Government. Remember, such professors, teachers, or employees of such land-grant colleges might have their salaries attached retroactively for a period of as much as 12 years, because the immunities granted to the other type of employees in sections 201, 202, and 203 are not effective as to them by section 205. In other words, where city or State employees are paid directly or indirectly out of Federal funds there are no immunities whether such employees knew that was or was not the case. Take the Tri-Borough Bridge in my city. It was built in part through P. W. A. funds. Some of the draftsmen, engineers, and architects employed in the planning and building of the bridge, although regularly employed by an agency of the State, nevertheless received their compensation in part from funds allotted to the Tri-Borough Bridge Authority through P. W. A. funds. In other words, these men mentioned might have their salaries attached retroactively for 3 or 4 years. Take the West Side Highway of New York City. The city employees on this project are paid indirectly from P. W. A. funds allotted to the city of New York. In other words, their salaries are paid by the Federal Government, because some of the expenses for the building of this highway comes out of P. W. A. funds, and the salaries of those paid are charged to construction costs, which are paid out of P. W. A. funds. In other words, the salaries received by these men are chargeable against Federal funds.

Ordinarily these persons are city and State employees and as such were not taxable. Just because they were loaned to these agencies they are being made taxable. No tax was asked of them for several years back. Now they are asked to pay or will be asked to pay retroactively. That is unjust.

On this matter I direct your attention to the case of Hanson against Landy, decided by the United States District Court for the Third Division of Minnesota, August 3, 1938. The plaintiff in that case was employed and his compensation was fixed by the board of regents of the University of Minnesota and not by any office of the Government of the United States. His salary was $3,100 per annum, of which $2,100 was paid from a grant by the United States Government to the university under the Smith-Lever Act. The court said that that portion of the plaintiff's salary paid from Federal funds was subject to income taxation by the United States Government. In this connection the court said:

The question is whether the portion of the plaintiff's salary paid from Federal funds is subject to income taxation by the United States. The answer depends on whether the appropriation under the Smith-Lever Act became the absolute property of the State or remained Federal funds until used for the purpose designated by the act, whether the tax imposed a burden on the State government, and whether the activities provided for in the act are essential governmental functions of the State of Minnesota.

According to the more recent decisions, immunity may be claimed from taxes laid on private persons employed by the State or an instrumentality of the State and engaged in the performance of an essential governmental function when it clearly appears that the burden on the State would be actual and substantial and not merely conjectural.

Furthermore, it may be assumed, without deciding, that the University of Minnesota is an instrumentality of the State, that it is engaged in the performance of an essential governmental function, and that the plaintiff, in the performance of his duties as assistant professor of agriculture and in meeting the requirements of the Smith-Lever Act, was performing an essential governmental function of the State; and yet, under principles above stated, the tax on the plaintiff's salary was valid because it did not impose an actual, substantial burden on the government of the State of Minnesota.

This professor now will be called on to pay such back taxes for 12 years. This is horrible. I presume there must be hundreds of similar cases where you have land-grant colleges. These professors, agents, and clerks of the said colleges who thought themselves immune, will now be called on to pay not only the current taxes, but also taxes for 12 years back. I believe a similar situation might arise in the case of employees of drainage commissions, highway departments, and irrigation entities, where city or State employees of such are either in part or in whole, directly or indirectly, paid from Federal funds.

I do not wish to press my motion, as I have high respect for the members of the Ways and Means Committee. I do not wish to embarrass them. I offer it in the hope that the matter might be considered in the other chamber and there be remedied.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. There is no oversight. We just do not feel that these employees, who receive money from the Federal Government, ought to be exempted or excused from the payment of these taxes.

Mr. CELLER. Then I ask for a vote on my amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] was considered by the Committee on Ways and Means. The section he undertakes to strike out includes certain employees who have always been subject to a Federal income tax in the main. It is a case where an employee of the State is being paid out of the funds of the Federal Government. They have always been subject to the Federal income-tax law and we simply provide that the retroactive features of this title shall not apply to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill H. R. 3790 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with an amendment striking out all of title I.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. REED of New York. I am.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Lord of heaven and earth, who hast in all the ages shown forth Thy power and mercy in the protection of all who put their sure trust in Thee: We humbly beseech Thee to look upon this Nation of ours, so richly endowed, and, lest in our pride we no longer stoop to learn Thy ways, send us the spirit of a child, a new generation springing from the uncorrupted source of things, and lead us back to a sane mind, a sincere heart, and a simple life.

A shadow, sorrow-laden, has fallen on the world and a voice that plead for justice, mercy, and a common brotherhood is forever hushed; yet may the afterglow of his radiant life light the way for all the races of mankind, that holiness may return to earth as king and nobleness walk our ways again until we come into our heritage with Thee. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to use all honorable means to enact Senate bill 1030, introduced by Senator PITTMAN, of Nevada, or Senate bill 1049, introduced by Senator McCARRAN

Whereas Senator PITTMAN has had introduced in the United States Senate a measure designated as Senate bill 1030, providing for the transfer of that certain building, situated in the city of Carson, State of Nevada, commonly known and designated as the old United States Mint, from the United States to the State of Nevada, to be used for the purposes designated in said bill; and

Whereas Senator McCARRAN has introduced a bill of similar import, designated Senate bill 1049; and

Whereas the said building and the site upon which it is situated are of no future use or consequence to the United States; and

Whereas the said building and site upon which it is situated would be of inestimable value to the people of the State of Nevada for the uses and purposes designated in said bill: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States, and the Members thereof, be, and they are hereby, memorialized to use every legitimate means for the passage of one of said bills; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit properly certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators in the United States Senate, and to our Representative in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Assembly Joint Resolution 1

Whereas Senator KEY PITTMAN on the 4th day of January 1939 introduced in the United States Senate S. 2, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain land to the State of Nevada to be used for the purposes of a public park and recreational site and other public purposes; and

Whereas the State of Nevada requires such area for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public park and recreational site; and

Whereas the State of Nevada, under the Boulder Canyon Project Act, and contracts relating thereto, is allotted 18 percent of the firm horsepower developed at the Federal powerhouse at Boulder Dam for use in the State of Nevada; and

Whereas it will be essential for the State of Nevada to make available an ample water supply for industries desiring to contract for the use of such State power in the State of Nevada; and

Whereas the subsurface and the artesian water in the vicinity where such power would be used is inadequate for such industries, and it will, therefore, be necessary to pump water from Lake Mead; and

Whereas the only economical and suitable area on the margin of Lake Mead from which to pump said water from Las Vegas area is within the area described in said Senate bill No. 2; and

Whereas there is a wash extending from the Las Vegas area down to and into Lake Mead, formerly extending into the Colorado River; and

Whereas the proposed pipe line for the supply of such water has been surveyed by this State down this wash to the waters of Lake Mead that are backed up into the Las Vegas wash, the water backed up into the wash forming a narrow inlet extending several miles in a northerly direction from the main body of Lake Mead; and

Whereas the State desires, at its own expense, to develop a park and recreational site on the banks of this inlet for the benefit and pleasure, in particular, of the citizens of the State of Nevada; and

Whereas the National Park Service is now actively developing an area on the westerly end of said Lake Mead, some 10 or 15 miles distant from the Las Vegas inlet, for the general accommodation, benefit, and pleasure of tourists and all who may visit Boulder, adjacent to such development; and

Whereas a general burden is thrown upon the National Park Service to develop an enormous area surrounding Lake Mead, which services will require many years for even partial consummation; and

Whereas the State of Nevada has surveyed a road down said wash to the proposed park and recreational site and is prepared and is desirous of undertaking the development of such area immediately: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of Nevada, That the State of Nevada, acting through its Governor and its legislature, unqualifiedly endorses said Senate bill No. 2 herein referred to, and respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact such bill as expeditiously as possible; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Nevada be directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of our Senators, and to our Congressman in Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 7

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to enact such legislation that will enable our farmers and stockmen to be self-sustaining and able to repossess their homes and property

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Session of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas the farmers and stockmen of South Dakota have found it advisable and necessary in the past to accept seed and feed loans from the Federal Government; and

Whereas many of such farmers and stockmen, because of crop failures caused by drought and insect plagues, have been unable to pay such loans; and

Whereas because of accumulating interest such farmers and stockmen are becoming involved to such an extent that recovery is impossible: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring), That we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact legislation by which all Federal claims by virtue of seed and feed loans in South Dakota will be canceled, to the end that our farmers may become secure and self-sustaining in possession of their homes and property; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House Concurrent Resolution 8

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to appropriate funds under Farm Forestry Acts

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas windbreaks and shelterbelts composed of trees are of great value to South Dakota agriculture because such tree strips protect crops from destruction by hot winds, prevent removal of topsoil by wind and water erosion, aid in holding snow on the land, in the reduction of evaporation and consequently the conservation of soil moisture; diminish fuel and feed requirements; supply fuel and fence posts; and shelter for game birds and birds that consume crop-destroying insects; and

Whereas the Congress, under section 4 of the Clarke-McNary law (passed 1924), authorized an annual appropriation of $100,000 to be divided among the States for the distribution of trees at cost among the farmers, of which from $1,400 to $2,000 annually (depending on actual congressional appropriation) has been made available to South Dakota for that purpose during the past 4 years; and

Whereas the Congress, under section 5 of said Clarke-McNary law, authorized an annual appropriation of $100,000 to be divided among the States for the extension of knowledge and information on the best practices of tree culture "to assist farm owners in establishing, improving, and renewing shelterbelts, windbreaks, and other valuable forest growth," under authority of which law the extension service of the South Dakota State College for 3 years has been employing an extension forester to carry on such educational work throughout the State; and

Whereas the Congress, under the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act (Norris-Doxey law of 1937), recognized the importance and value of shelterbelts and farm forests and authorized an annual Federal appropriation of $2,500,000 for the establishment of such forestry plantations, shelterbelts, and for the extension of educational work, but for which no money has as yet been definitely appropriated; and

Whereas the shelterbelt work under the Prairie States forestry project to date has been carried out wholly as a work-relief measure, which may be discontinued unless Congress decides to make a definite appropriation available under the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That Congress be, and hereby is, memorialized and requested to make the appropriation of the full $100,000 authorized under each of the sections 4 and 5 of the Clarke-McNary law; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress be, and is hereby, memorialized and requested to make the appropriation of the full $2,500,000 authorized under the Norris-Doxey Cooperative Farm Forestry Act; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the Governor of the State of South Dakota to the Secretary of State of the United States at Washington, D. C., and to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Resolution H

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota:

Whereas President Franklin Roosevelt in his message to Congress specifically pointed out the unjust and unfair operation of the present Embargo Act, which prevents the victims of aggressor nations from obtaining the necessary materials and supplies for proper self-defense; and

Whereas with the lifting of the present embargo Loyalist Spain stands ready to buy for cash and provide necessary transportation for large quantities of agricultural products which now constitute the surplus in our country and aggravate the depression here; and

Whereas such sale of surplus commodities will definitely improve the economic position of our farmers while at the same time it will be of incalculable aid to the cause of democracy in Spain and serve to unite democratic nations against the encroachments of undemocratic and dictatorial forms of government which now seek to displace the form of government which we revere: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota hereby memorialize Congress and the President of the United States to take immediate steps in lifting the present unjust and unfair embargo in keeping with the conditions as set forth hereinbefore; and be it also

Resolved, That one copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the following: The President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt; Vice President John Garner, President of the United States Senate; the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull; Speaker Bankhead, House of Representatives; Senator Lynn J. Frazier; Senator Gerald P. Nye; Congressman William Lemke; Congressman Usher L. Burdick.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 64

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the Federal Government has purchased and is contemplating the purchase of large tracts of land in North Dakota, which lands were the property of private owners, and as such were assessed and taxed with the other property located in the same taxing districts; and

Whereas when such purchases are completed the land can no longer be taxed by the State of North Dakota or its subdivisions; and

Whereas the removal of large tracts of land from the tax rolls of the taxing districts of the State of North Dakota has created a very critical situation in such districts, which are largely dependent upon the property tax for the support of schools and other necessary governmental functions; and

Whereas at the time of such purchases by the Federal Government such lands were encumbered by a debt representing tax levies due annually to pay the principal and interest on bonded indebtedness, as required by section 184 of the constitution of the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas the removal of large tracts of land from the tax rolls through such Federal purchases seriously impairs the value of the contracts represented by outstanding bonds and other evidences of indebtedness issued by the subdivisions in which such lands are located, contrary to section 10 and the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and contrary to section 16 of the constitution of the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas in some instances the areas left in private hands are insufficient to pay outstanding indebtedness of the taxing districts; and

Whereas it is unjust and inequitable that the remaining property owners in such taxing districts be compelled to pay the whole of such outstanding indebtedness: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota, do petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States to provide funds for the payment of such proportion of the outstanding indebtedness of the taxing districts in which the Federal Government has made or will make such land purchases in the proportion that the value of such land so purchased bears to the valuation of the entire taxing district; be it further

Resolved, That copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Congressmen from the State of North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Joint Memorial 4

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill (H. R. 2—S. 3), known as the General Welfare Act of 1939; and

Whereas the bill has the threefold purpose of—

1. Providing security for the aged, giving recognition of our debt of gratitude to them; and
2. Eliminating the many million men and women past 60 years of age from competition with the younger men and women seeking an honest job to make an honest living; and
3. Stimulating industry with a vast new purchasing power that will so increase business activity that our relief problem will largely disappear: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the senate concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to consider the said General Welfare Act of 1939, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

Senate Joint Memorial 5

Whereas the State of New Mexico, conscious of its Hispanic background and its linguistic and cultural ties with Latin America, has signified its intention to commemorate in 1940 the four hundredth anniversary of the exploration of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, first European to traverse the southwestern portion of the United States now included in Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and Colorado; and

Whereas during the last 6 years the people of the United States, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, have sought to bring about a closer relationship among all the Americas; and

Whereas the League of the United Latin American Citizens (Lulac), Council No. 90, of Denver, Colo., is vitally interested in securing the moral support of the State of Colorado for the purposes of this memorial; and

Whereas the State of New Mexico, recognizing the priceless heritage of 400 years under the flags of Spain, Mexico, and the United States, is planning to commemorate the four-hundredth anniversary of these friendly relationships with the Cuarto Centennial Celebration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirty-Second General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring herein), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give every consideration to the said Coronado Cuarto Centennial Celebration when the same is presented for consideration; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States be requested to take such necessary steps as will insure full consideration of the aforesaid Cuarto Centennial Celebration upon its presentation to the Congress of the United States; and that copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to provide sufficient relief funds to stricken farmers in Marion, Horry, Barnwell, Clarendon, and other counties to relieve such condition

Whereas during the year 1938 hundreds of farm families in Marion, Horry, Barnwell, Clarendon, and other counties received severe and disastrous destruction of their crops from the effects of hail and wind storms; and

Whereas in many instances such farmers were impoverished to the extent that, unless some aid or relief be given them, their homes will be lost; and

Whereas in the past the Government of these United States has often aided and rehabilitated people in various sections of the Nation suffering from impoverishing disasters; and

Whereas in the minds of the thinking citizens of this State, the Government of the United States would be warranted in extending relief to our people who have been stricken as aforesaid, and especially so in view of the fact that the Government saw fit to regulate the extent of crops planted by the farmers of this State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of these United States be, and it is hereby, requested to provide national legislation for the reimbursement to the farmers of Marion, Horry, Barnwell, Clarendon, and other counties for crops destroyed by hail and wind storms during the year 1938 in an amount sufficient to relieve such condition; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of Congress from the State of South Carolina and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the Clerk of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HATCH presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial of the State of New Mexico and the fourteenth legislature thereof to the President and the Congress of the United States of America, pertaining to any proposed extension in the State of New Mexico of the Navajo Indian Reservation

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, That—

Whereas the further extension of the Navajo Indian Reservation within the boundaries of the State of New Mexico, and the purchase or condemnation of lands for that purpose by the United States Government within the State of New Mexico would result in permanent and irreparable injury to the people of the State of New Mexico and to the State for the following reasons, to wit:

(1) The ownership of such land by the United States of America would seriously injure the State of New Mexico in its revenues by removing such lands from the tax rolls of the State.

(2) Ownership of such lands by the United States of America would at once remove from the tax rolls of San Juan County $389,304 and will result in the impoverishment of San Juan County in the State of New Mexico to such an extent as will greatly hamper it in functioning as a component part of the government of the State of New Mexico, and will greatly hamper the State officials and county officers of said San Juan County in the administration of the civil and criminal laws of the State.

(3) The oil and other mineral resources of the State are proposed to be placed within such Indian reservation, which has been and is being developed sufficiently to determine the existence of such minerals in the area, and is at present far from a state of full development, and offers a present and future potential revenue to the State of New Mexico from this source. The entire school system of the State to a very large extent depends upon oil and mineral revenue and any action which would deprive the State of the oil and mineral resources of the area would reduce the efficiency of the State school system to that extent and would deprive the county of San Juan, a governmental agency of the State, of considerable revenue, reasonably to be expected from the future development of mineral resources of the area.

(4) Since for more than one-half a century the cattlemen and sheepmen of northwestern New Mexico have used this area for a winter range for their cattle and sheep when, on account of the severe winter and deep snows prevalent in other areas of the State, it has been impossible for those engaged in this industry to pursue the same without the advantage of the grazing afforded by the area contemplated as an addition to the Navajo Indian Reservation, and such addition would, therefore, injure and destroy to a very large extent the cattle and sheep industries of the northwestern area of the State, to the permanent injury of the industries and to the State in the matter of its revenues and especially to the county of San Juan and the business interests of the county largely supported from this source.

(5) The agricultural and irrigation districts of the county of San Juan and adjoining sections in Sandoval County, McKinley County, and Valencia County would be permanently injured in that a large portion of the agricultural products of the irrigated districts is fed for cattle and sheep and other livestock which market furnished by livestock on the proposed extension area would be wholly destroyed, resulting in the impoverishment of many of our citizens.

(6) The future economic welfare of the Navajo Indians upon the reservation and the whites in San Juan County, Sandoval County, McKinley County, and Valencia County depends to a very large extent upon irrigation projects and the future development thereof, which would add several hundred thousand acres of farm land, both on and off the present reservation, the development of which unhampered by a change of the boundary of the reservation would enable both the Indians and whites to attain greater prosperity and a better standard of living, and materially add to the future revenues of the counties hereinbefore mentioned and the State of New Mexico: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States of America and the Congress of the United States of America be, and the same are, very respectfully memorialized and petitioned in the name of the State of New Mexico and of the fourteenth legislature thereof, to prevent the passage of any measure which would extend the boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation within the boundaries of the State of New Mexico; and be it

Resolved further, That a certified copy hereof under the great seal of the State of New Mexico be forwarded to His Excellency the Right Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy hereof certified under the great seal of the State of New Mexico be forwarded to the Right Honorable John Nance Garner, Vice President of the United States of America, for presentation through the proper channels to the Senate of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution under the great seal of the State of New Mexico be forwarded to the Honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America for presentation through the proper channels to the House of Representatives of the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution under the great seal of the State of New Mexico be forwarded to the Honorable CARL A. HATCH, United States Senator from New Mexico, and to the Honorable DENNIS CHAVEZ, United States Senator from New Mexico, and to the Honorable JOHN J. DEMPSEY, Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Mexico.

Mr. MURRAY presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting it to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana

Whereas only 29.5 percent of domestic sugar sales are allotted to domestic producers at present. Cuba has practically the same amount and our insular possessions 41.5 percent. American producers are rightfully entitled to all of the domestic market that they are able to supply; and

Whereas the import quotas of raw sugar as set at the present time have brought the farmers, the workers in the beet-sugar factories, and the laborers in the beet fields in direct competition with the poorly paid labor in the sugar-producing territories outside of continental United States; such competition has the direct result of lowering the standard of living of these farmers and laborers to a level incompatible with the American way of life; and

Whereas sugar beets can be effectively grown at a reasonable profit in this State and there is no food more valuable to the consumer in nutritive worth even at a much higher price than at present; and

Whereas the production of sugar beets provides employment at good wages for many times as many workers as the same acreage of other crops adapted to this latitude, and any control of the expansion of sugar-beet acreage means more unemployment and more relief clients who could otherwise make a living in this industry; and

Whereas there is grave danger that the present policy, if continued, will result in many now employed in this country losing their means of livelihood, thereby further increasing the already tremendous burden of unemployment; and

Whereas our beet growers, if permitted to make a reasonable amount of money, are, due to their higher standard of living, many times better customers for eastern industry as are foreign sugar laborers and planters; and

Whereas an orderly and sound expansion of beet plantings in accordance with the development of suitable land and the building of new factories to take care of the increased production is a reasonable and necessary process to the building up of this State and should be encouraged; and

Whereas the expansion of the domestic production of sugar should be encouraged as a problem of national economy and defense; the acute shortage of sugar during the World War demonstrated our need for a much higher domestic sugar production in time of emergency; and

Whereas because of the high altitude of this region there are practically no substitute crops for sugar beets, and the restriction of the beet industry means the throttling of our agriculture by eliminating the best cultivated crop in a proper rotation for maintaining soil fertility and weed control; and

Whereas the development of profitable agricultural operations is so vital to the business of all of Montana, as well as of the entire United States, and should be given most serious consideration by all individuals and lawmaking bodies; and

Whereas the Beet Growers' Associations of Montana, supported by the Montana Federation of Labor, and Montanans, Inc. (the State chamber of commerce) have given serious and careful consideration to the present sugar quotas, and the above facts have been definitely established: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the prayer of your memorialists, the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, that the Congress of the United States should, by proper legislation, right the wrong suffered by the farmers, processors, and wage earners engaged in the growing and manufacturing of beet sugar by immediately raising the domestic sugar quota to permit the unrestricted production of sugar within the continental limits of the United States and to maintain the protective market by quota reductions and adequate tariffs on foreign sugar: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Joint Memorial 1

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of the legislation for the creation and establishment of the Townsend recovery plan, and for benefits to be paid to all persons over the age of 60 years

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas there exists among employers of labor a widespread policy by which persons over 45 years of age willing and anxious to earn their livelihood are deprived of the opportunity of receiving employment, thus placing many such persons in a position of depending either upon friends or relatives or on public charity; and

Whereas many of the persons thus deprived of an opportunity to earn their support are, because of this policy, adopted and enforced by employers of labor, unable to support themselves by means of their own effort; and

Whereas our social and economic welfare demands of the American people as a whole that those who, through no fault of their own, are thus deprived of the opportunity to earn a livelihood, be placed in a condition where their morale be sustained and they be neither indigents or partakers of public charity; and

Whereas the burden of creating and maintaining the social and economic welfare is of greater magnitude than the State of Montana, in common with other States, is able to carry on; and

Whereas there exists not only a widespread demand of persons over 60 years of age for the passage of legislation which will permit them to maintain their self-respect, but there also exists an unusually strong demand of persons under the age of 60 years that those who have pioneered in the building and development of our country be justly and adequately provided for in their declining years: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the Townsend recovery plan into law, the said plan being deemed just and equitable to all persons over the age of 60 years; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, and they, and each of them, be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about the enactment of the Townsend recovery plan into law.

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Joint Memorial 3

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America requesting an investigation of the wrongful destruction, removal, and failure to replace the fairgrounds buildings of the county of Musselshell, and thereafter cause restitution of the same, said buildings having been wrongfully destroyed and removed by authority of the National Park Service.

To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the National Park Service, under the Secretary of the Interior, having been authorized by the Congress of the United States to aid the several States and political subdivisions thereof in planning and developing adequate park, parkway, and recreation-area facilities for the people of the United States, set up C. C. C. camps in Montana to aid in developing our State parks; and

Whereas in 1935, under and by virtue of said authority, a C. C. C. camp, designated by the National Park Service as "Roundup Peaks Camp," was established for the purpose of reconstructing the Musselshell County fairgrounds; and

Whereas said camp having been set up, the exhibit building, grandstand, and certain other buildings were torn down, and, in spite of and contrary to the definite assurance and promise to the county of Musselshell of new buildings of superior quality, the C. C. C. camp was removed prior to the construction of any buildings whatsoever; and

Whereas all subsequent efforts of the county of Musselshell to secure replacement of said buildings have been of no avail: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house concurring) does hereby respectfully petition and request the Congress of the United States to cause a thorough investigation to be made of the destruction, removal, and failure to replace the fairgrounds buildings of the county of Musselshell, and thereafter to provide for restitution of said buildings and structures; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Honorable B. K. WHEELER and the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, United States Senators, and to the Honorable JAMES F. O'CONNOR, United States Representative of the Second Congressional District of the State of Montana.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to amend the California Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928

Whereas it has come to the attention of this legislature that but half of the tribes and nations of Indians within this State in 1851 and 1852 had signed the 18 treaties forming the basis of the Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928; and

Whereas nontreaty Indians are at the present time barred from bringing actions in the Court of Claims against the Federal Government on account of the failure of the Government to ratify and keep certain treaties with Indian tribes of California in 1851 and 1852; and

Whereas this legislature is informed and believes that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have approved legislation proposed for submission to the Congress of the United States, which legislation contains the nontreaty provisions; and

Whereas new hope and confidence in our fellow men by the Indians of California and the Nation will be encouraged: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States be most respectfully urged to forthwith amend the California Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928 to provide for nontreaty Indians; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress be, and are hereby, urged to put forth their best and united efforts to secure the enactment by Congress of the proposed amendments; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be respectfully transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each of the Senators and Representative of the State of California in Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to take such steps as may be necessary and to urge the Secretary of the Interior to name the lake to be created by the construction of the Shasta Dam at Kennett, Shasta County, Calif., "McColl Lake"

Whereas there is now being constructed in California the great Central Valley project, which will bring untold benefits and wealth to the people of California; and

Whereas it is largely due to the untiring efforts of our late beloved Hon. John M. McColl, senator from the fifth district of California, that the Shasta Dam, a part of the Central Valley project, is fast becoming a reality; and

Whereas the thousands of friends of the late Senator John B. McColl are appreciative of the earnest endeavor of the late senator and the fact that he had dedicated his life work to the completion of the Shasta Dam, at Kennett, in Shasta County, Calif., and a great water plan known as the Central Valley project; and

Whereas it is fitting and appropriate that some recognition be given to the untiring effort of our late beloved senator: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States take such steps as may be necessary and that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Reclamation are respectfully urged to name the lake which will result from the construction of the Shasta Dam at Kennett, Calif., "McColl Lake"; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Members of the United States Senate, the Members of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Reclamation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Senate joint resolution relative to exemption from taxation of bonds issued by governmental agencies and memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to take immediate steps for the termination of the exemption of such securities from taxation

Whereas the exemption from taxation of bonds issued by the Federal, State, and local governments has progressed to such a point that there are now outstanding tax-exempt securities of this character amounting to the aggregate par value of approximately $45,000,000,000 in 1937, and has now reached a total of approximately $72,000,000,000; and

Whereas such securities are owned and held by a very small percentage of the population of the country, and there results a great and most unjust disproportion in the bearing of the cost of government as between the owners and holders of various types and classes of property; and

Whereas it is a fundamental principle of government that one group or class should not be favored as are the owners of these tax-exempt securities, and all persons enjoying the order and protection which government affords should share fairly, equally, and equitably in bearing the cost of government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the legislature of this State hereby memorialize the President and Congress of the United States to consider and enact such legislation and to propose such amendment or amendments to the Constitution of the United States as may be found suitable and appropriate effectively to prevent the further exemption from taxation of any and all bonds and other evidences of indebtedness issued by the Federal, State, and local governments, to the fullest extent that the President and the Congress may have power so to do, and that the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives from California are hereby urged and requested to use all honorable means in furtherance of the consideration and enactment of such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Members of the House and Senate from the State of California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate joint resolution relative to the memorialization of the President and the Congress of the United States for the protection, use, and development of the natural resources of the State of California

Whereas Nature has bestowed upon the State of California a priceless heritage of natural resources of soil, water, forests, minerals, forage, game animals, birds, fish, and scenic and recreational attractions; and

Whereas these natural resources are vital to the permanence and future growth and prosperity of the basic industries of the State and to the welfare and happiness of its citizens; and

Whereas the protection and wise use of our valuable natural resources is the responsibility of the Federal and State Governments, and the civic duty of all our people; and

Whereas large areas of California's important watersheds, forests, grazing and mineral lands, fishing streams and lakes, wildlife ranges, free public playgrounds, and scenic features are found within the national forests in the State; and

Whereas there is pending national legislation which will create a new national park in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River that will remove large water and other natural resources from development and use by adjacent dependent communities; and

Whereas these national-forest resources are protected and managed for the benefit of all our citizens and the permanence of our industries, and are open at all times to full utilization and economic development: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the State of California through its legislature hereby memorializes and petitions the President and the Congress of the United States that all national forest lands in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River and their valuable natural resources be permanently retained in national-forest status under the protection and administration of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, where they will be perpetually open, as needed, to all measures, developments, and activities necessary for the full use, regulation, and control of the land and the resources thereof; and be it further

Provided, That this resolution is not to be construed as any criticism of the National Park Service or as evidence of any lack of appreciation of the aid given this State by the Federal Government in respect to flood control and the construction of irrigation dams; and be it further

Provided, That this petition is not to be interpreted as manifesting a lack of sympathy on the part of this legislature with the basic objective of the Federal Government to provide for the perpetual protection of national-forest lands in the Middle and South Fork of Kings River as a protected wilderness for the benefit and enjoyment of future generations; and be it further

Resolved, That the State of California through its legislature hereby memorializes and petitions the President and the Congress of the United States that any contemplated further extension to Yosemite National Park be deferred until some plan is evolved to compensate adequately the counties for the resulting loss of tax revenue; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and to Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Forest Service.

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to refuse enactment of legislation which would becloud the sovereign rights of the State of California in its submerged lands

Whereas upon the formation of the United States of America, the States, as independent sovereignties, reserved to themselves all the right, title, and interest in and to the submerged lands and tidelands bordering upon their respective territories and, with the expenditure of public funds, have devoted such lands to harbor developments and other State purposes, or through grants or arrangements made with their municipalities and public agencies and with their citizens have devoted said lands to other public and private uses, and such sovereign rights of the States have never heretofore been questioned; and

Whereas legislation has been introduced in the Congress of the United States, particularly Senate Joint Resolution No. 24, introduced by the Honorable United States Senator GERALD P. NYE, wherein it is asserted that the Federal Government possesses the title to or holds an interest in submerged lands and tidelands bordering upon the various States of the Union, and it is proposed to direct the Attorney General of the United States to institute legal actions in the courts to litigate such asserted titles or interests; and

Whereas any such litigation will becloud the rights and title of the respective States, prejudice their progress in developing such lands for State and local uses, both public and private, endanger existing investments and impair future financing of local projects on such lands, and the enactment of such legislation is, in the opinion of this legislature, undesirable and contrary to the public interests: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully urges and petitions the Congress of the United States to refuse enactment of either Senate Joint Resolution No. 24 or any other bill or resolution which may similarly seek to establish the asserted claim of the Federal Government to any title or interest in such submerged lands or tidelands of the State of California, other than such lands which may have been heretofore expressly granted it by this State or under its authority; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and myself, I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Education and Labor. A companion bill has already been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. LARRABEE, chairman of the Committee on Education of that body. I also ask, in order that I may not detain the Senate now, that a statement prepared by me and a summary of the provisions of the bill be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Utah, and, without objection, the statements will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The statements presented by Mr. THOMAS of Utah are as follows:

One of the matters pending before the Senate when it adjourned last year was the question of a permanent policy with regard to Federal aid to education. The Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate has devoted much time to this question in recent years.

At the beginning of the Seventy-fifth Congress the committee had before it the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi and former Senator Black, of Alabama. After extensive hearings the bill was reported favorably and placed on the calendar.

Shortly after, the President requested a special Advisory Committee on Education to consider and report on the whole subject of Federal relations to education. The President's committee included a number of eminent educators, officials representing several of the Government departments, and other prominent citizens from various walks of life. The members of the President's committee gave generously of their time, made a careful investigation, and eventually brought in a comprehensive report, which was transmitted to Congress in February 1933. Copies of the report are available to Senators who are interested in the subject.

After consulting with representatives of the President's committee and others conversant with its recommendations, the Senator from Mississippi and I had drafted a substitute bill which was based largely on the recommendations of the President's committee. The substitute was approved by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and was brought before the Senate. The substitute was discussed by the Senate to some extent, but could not be brought to a vote prior to adjournment. At the close of the session it was agreed that the bill would be revised and reintroduced for consideration at this time.

Meanwhile the bill as previously introduced has been the subject of intensive discussion by citizens all over the country and by most of the groups and organizations interested in public education. Many suggestions for revision were the result of this discussion.

The suggestions for revision have been carefully considered and the bill has been thoroughly redrafted. We are introducing the new bill today, and it is anticipated that the committee will begin consideration of the bill at an early date.

The total appropriations authorized by the bill would begin during the next fiscal year at approximately $75,000,000, increasing to about $208,000,000 the sixth year. The bill contains a number of titles and parts which cover in general the same subjects as those included in the substitute bill of last year. The new bill, however, is entirely self-contained. It makes no change in any other laws relating to Federal aid for education, such as the vocational education laws.

The purpose of the bill, as set forth in the general statement of policy with which it begins, is to assist in equalizing educational opportunities without Federal control over the educational policies of States and localities. The administrative features of the bill have been given careful attention with this purpose in mind. Every effort has been made to avoid any necessity or even occasion for the intervention of Federal administrative officials. After the States have accepted the act, or the various parts, which are separable, and have complied with a limited number of specific provisions, the United States Commissioner of Education is directed to certify payment of the grants. He is not directed or authorized to approve or disapprove any plans of the States for the expenditure of the funds. He is, however, required to audit the expenditures after they are made and to make an annual report setting forth in detail the extent to which each of the States has accomplished the equalization of educational opportunity in comparison with previous years.

The bill provides for the apportionment of the larger part of the fund among the States on an equalization basis, using the financial ability of the respective States as determined by the Treasury Department and the number of children of school age in each State as determined by the Census Bureau. The objective of the bill is to put funds where they are needed, and only where they are needed. The apportionment procedure has been made as simple and certain in its operation as possible. No discretion over apportionment is vested in the Commissioner of Education.

As many Senators know, some controversy arose over the provisions of the former bill with respect to the availability of funds for certain services, including scholarships, which the States might choose to make available to children, including children attending sectarian and other private schools. The controverted provisions of the former bill have been eliminated entirely from the present bill and the problem is dealt with in a different way. No provision is made for the payment of scholarships for children either in public or in private schools in view of probable continuance of the student aid program of the National Youth Administration.

The bill as a whole presents a comprehensive program. It provides for a series of Federal grants to the States, including grants for the operating expenses of public elementary and secondary schools, for improved preparation of teachers, for the construction of school buildings, especially in connection with the reorganization of school districts, for the administration of State departments of education, for adult education, and for rural library service. In addition, there is provision for educational research and demonstrations, for the administrative expenses of the Office of Education, and for the education of children residing on the various Federal reservations throughout the country. As many Senators know, children residing on tax-free Federal lands are frequently admitted to public schools only on payment of tuition, and in some cases have no opportunity at all to attend public schools.

The provisions of the bill have been carefully related to each other to form a unified and integrated proposal. The program provides means by which Federal aid can be so applied as to improve education at the crucial points where it is most in need of improvement. Moreover, the entire program has been constructed with the utmost respect for, and a desire to make more secure, the autonomy of the States and localities in the administration of their schools and the determination of their educational programs.

It is in keeping with the necessities of the times that we turn to Federal aid for education. It is in keeping with the evolving theory of cooperation between the States and the Nation that we today justify that aid. It is in keeping with the meaning of American citizenship and the relation of that citizenship to the theory that education is basic in American democracy that we extend now the cooperative spirit and justify Federal aid on the score that all persons born in the United States shall have an equal opportunity in the attainment of the fundamentals of education.

Education is the path democracy treads. Propaganda is the way of the dictator and dictatorships. And there is a vast difference. Shall the people learn the truth, be free to discover it, to express it, and to use it, or shall they just be given what is for their good? Thoughtful American citizens demand the first. He who would destroy democracy in America will picture as attractive the second. Equality of educational opportunity offers democracy's greatest chance.

SUMMARY OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE PROPOSED FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION ACT OF 1939

A bill (S. 1305) to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education.

The primary purpose of the bill, as stated in section 1, is "to assist in equalizing educational opportunities, among and within the States, insofar as the grants in aid to the States herein authorized will permit, without Federal control over educational policies of States and localities. The provisions of this act shall, therefore, be so construed as to maintain local and State initiative and responsibility in the conduct of education and to reserve explicitly to the States and their local subdivisions the administration of schools, including institutions for the preparation of teachers, the control over the processes of education, the control and determination of curricula of the schools, the methods of instruction to be employed in them, the selection of personnel employed by the State and its agencies and local school jurisdictions, and insofar as consistent with the purposes for which funds are made available under this act the determination of the best uses of the funds appropriated under this act."

Appropriations are authorized by the bill for a period of 6 years, beginning in the next fiscal year and continuing through the fiscal year 1945. The appropriations authorized by the various titles and parts of the bill are as follows:

The respective titles and parts of the bill may be summarized as follows:

Title I, part 1. General Federal aid

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $40,000,000 and increasing to $140,000,000 per year, ending in 1945, for the current operating and maintenance expenses of public elementary and secondary schools.

Amounts appropriated are to be apportioned among the States by the Commissioner of Education in accordance with indexes of financial need. Procedure for computing an index of financial need for each State is specified in the bill, using statistics of educational load based on the number of children of school age in each State and an index of the financial ability of each State with respect to the support of public education, such index of financial ability to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury and certified to the Commissioner of Education. No discretion over apportionment is vested in the Commissioner.

The Commissioner of Education is required to report annually on the extent to which each State has accomplished the equalization of educational opportunity in comparison with previous years.

Title I, part 2. Improved teacher preparation

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $2,000,000 and increasing to $6,000,000 per year, ending in 1945, for the current operating and maintenance expenses of public institutions preparing teachers and other educational personnel.

Grants under this part are apportioned among the States proportionately to those under part 1.

Title I, part 3. Construction of school buildings

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $20,000,000 and continuing at $30,000,000 per year through the fiscal year 1945 for the construction, improvement, and equipment of public-school buildings, primarily in connection with reorganization of administrative units and attendance areas. Grants under this part are apportioned among the States proportionately to those under part 1 and may be used for up to 50 percent of the cost of school-building projects, except projects in school districts entirely without public-owned school buildings in 1938, in which districts up to 90 percent may be paid from the Federal grants.

State educational authorities are required to review plans for building projects and certify approved projects to the Commissioner of Education, who in turn certifies projects for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Title I, part 4. Administration of State departments of education

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $1,000,000 and increasing to $2,000,000 per year, ending in 1945, for the salaries of employees and other current operating and maintenance expenses of State departments of education.

From the amounts appropriated, $5,000 is apportioned annually to each State and the remainder is apportioned among the States proportionately to the grants under part 1.

Reports are required concerning the duties, manner of selection, qualifications, tenure, and experience of employees of the State department of education.

Disapproval of any appointment in any State department of education by any Federal official is specifically forbidden.

Title I, part 5. Provisions applicable generally

In order to qualify for payment of funds under any part, States are required through their legislatures to accept the provisions relating to such funds, to provide for their custody and disbursement, and to provide for auditing and reports. In States maintaining separate schools for separate races, a just and equitable apportionment of the Federal grants is required. States accepting the grants for school buildings are required to provide for the payment of prevailing wage rates on the building projects. States accepting the grants for State department administration are required to provide by law a system for the appointment and tenure of personnel upon the basis of merit and efficiency.

States accepting the general aid for elementary and secondary schools are required to provide a plan, either through their legislatures or through their educational authorities if the legislatures so direct, of apportioning the funds among local school jurisdictions in such manner as to assist effectively in equalizing educational opportunity in public schools within the State.

States accepting Federal aid for public schools, teacher preparation, and State departments of education, are eligible to receive such aid only if they maintain State appropriations for the same purposes at not less than the amounts provided in 1938.

Provision is made for payments to the States by the Secretary of the Treasury on certificate by the Commissioner of Education. The Commissioner is required to audit expenditure of the funds and is authorized to withhold funds in case of illegal expenditure. Payment of funds may be suspended for specified reasons after notice and hearing.

Title II. Grants to States for adult education

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $5,000,000 and increasing to $15,000,000 per year, ending in 1945, for current operating expenses of public adult educational services, including the teaching of illiterates, citizenship classes for aliens, workers' education, facilities for self-education, and other adult educational services. The grants are apportioned among the States in proportion to their respective populations 20 years of age and older.

State acceptance provisions and provisions for payment and auditing are similar to those of title I.

The grants are to be administered in each State by its designated State adult educational authority, which may be the chief State school officer or any appropriate existing board provided for by State law. The State adult educational authority is required to consult with a council representative of each major type of adult educational activity or service in the State, rural and urban.

Title III. Grants to States for rural library service

Authorizes grants to the States beginning at $2,000,000 and increasing to $6,000,000 per year, ending in 1945, for the current operating and maintenance expenses of public-library services primarily for rural inhabitants of the various States. The grants are apportioned among the States in proportion to their respective numbers of rural inhabitants.

State acceptance provisions and provisions for payment and auditing are similar to those of title I.

The grants are to be administered in each State by its designated State library administrative agency, which may be the State library board, a State library, a State department of education, including a library division, or similar agency. The State library administrative agency is required to prepare and file with the United States Commissioner of Education a plan for apportioning or disbursing the funds in such manner as will effectively lessen inequalities of opportunity for library service.

Title IV. Grants for cooperative educational research and demonstrations, and for administration

Authorizes the appropriation for the purposes of the title of 3 percent of the amounts authorized under titles I, II, III, and V, equivalent to an authorization beginning at $2,190,000 and increasing to $6,060,000 the sixth and last year.

Sixty percent of the amounts appropriated under the title would be available for expenditure for cooperative educational surveys, research, and demonstrations under the direction of State departments of education, colleges and universities, and other nonprofit institutions and agencies. Not less than 30 percent of the amount appropriated under the title must be expended under the direction of State departments of education, and not less than $5,000 must be allocated for expenditure each year in each State. The extent of matching by State, local, and private funds is to be determined by joint agreement.

Forty percent of the amounts appropriated under the title would be available for direct expenditure by the Commissioner of Education for assistance in cooperative undertakings, for research, survey, planning, and demonstration activities, for advisory services, for services necessary to the administration of the act, and for compiling, preparing, and publishing reports required by the act.

Title V. Education of children residing on Federal reservations and at foreign stations

This title would make provision for the education of the only children in the United States not now entitled by law to public-school facilities, namely, certain children residing on Federal reservations and at foreign stations.

The policy of the United States is declared to be to make such provision as may be necessary for the education of such children, the education to be comparable to the education provided in public schools and to be provided through use by cooperative agreement of existing public-school facilities, so far as feasible. Appropriations necessary for the purpose, not to exceed $3,000,000 per year, are authorized.

Appropriations are to be administered by the Commissioner of Education, who is given authority to enter into agreements and make allotments. He is required to consult with an advisory committee made up of representatives designated by the several departments and agencies in which need exists for educational services for children living on reservations.

The amounts appropriated under the title would not be available for the children of Indians, who are now provided for, or for expenditure in the Panama Canal Zone, which now has a system of schools supported by Federal appropriations.

Title VI. General and miscellaneous provisions

Provides in general that the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and Guam shall receive the benefits of the act in the same manner as the States. Makes special exceptions and provisions with respect to such areas where necessary.

Defines a "minority racial group" as any racial group constituting a minority of the population of the United States and for which separate schools are required by law in any State. Defines a just and equitable apportionment of the funds as meaning any plan of distribution which results in the expenditure for the benefit of minority racial groups of a proportion of the funds not less than the proportion which such groups bear to the total population of the States affected.

Provides that in carrying on his function, the Commissioner of Education shall secure the advice of a general advisory committee of citizens, to meet not less than twice each year.

Provides for detailed annual reports by the Commissioner of Education showing accurately the status of education in the United States.

Authorizes the Commissioner of Education to make necessary regulations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Authorizes the President to appoint a special temporary advisory committee in 1943 to report in 1944 with recommendations concerning Federal relations to education. The major purpose of this committee would be to review the experience with the grants authorized in the present bill and to make recommendations for consideration prior to the expiration of the grants in 1945.

I ask also that a statement drawn up by a committee of experts and my own statement, which follows, be printed as part of the RECORD immediately after the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) to amend the Neutrality Act was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the Neutrality Act, approved August 31, 1935, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this act and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the export of certain articles or materials of use in war, in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war, from the United States to belligerent States, or to a State wherein civil strife exists, is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe, to export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, such articles or materials from any place in the United States to belligerent states or to any state wherein civil strife exists, named in such proclamation issued under the authority of section 1 of this act, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such belligerent state or any such state wherein civil strife exists."

Sec. 2. Such act is further amended by adding after section 3 the following new section:

"Sec. 3A. Whenever the President shall find that one or more states signatory to a treaty to which the United States is a party is engaged in war with another state in violation of such treaty, he may, with the approval of a majority of each House of Congress, exempt such other state, in whole or in part, from the provisions of any proclamation issued by him under the authority of this act, if such other state is not engaged in war in violation of such treaty. The President may, from time to time, change, modify, or revoke, in whole or in part, any exemption issued by him under the authority of this section."

The statements presented by Mr. THOMAS of Utah are as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS APPOINTED BY THE COMMITTEE FOR CONCERTED PEACE EFFORTS TO STUDY REVISION OF THE NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION

The committee believes that, in such critical times as we now face, it would be unwise to attempt abrogation or radical revision of the Neutrality Act, or to embark upon a controversial debate as to a policy which might be substituted for it. For this reason only a few and simple changes have been proposed, having in mind the purpose of making possible a workable foreign policy under the statute.

The most essential change required in the act is that it should be made more adaptable to the varying circumstances to which it must apply. In its present rigid form it has worked in favor of states whose policy the American people do not approve and whose actions are contrary to our rights under our treaties and under international law. It is a fact beyond doubt that whatever policy we adopt, and however impartial we may strive to be, we shall aid one side more than the other in any foreign conflict. It seems to us unwise, and even absurd, to have a law which denies to our Government (for the Congress itself cannot, under the act, consistently discriminate between the disputants in a foreign war) the right to hinder an aggressor, or to defend ourselves by measures short of war against a state which is doing injury to the United States in violation of treaty rights or of international law. If our action will in any case aid one party more than the other, we should be free to direct that action against the state which violates law and treaties or does harm to us. As the act now stands, a war-making state can know that our Government is restrained to a limited course of action, and it can therefore shape its own course of action to the disadvantage of the United States. The Neutrality Act should certainly be amended so as to enable us to defend our interests and so as to permit a workable foreign policy.

With this conclusion we believe the vast majority of the American people would agree, for the neutrality legislation has worked to aid states whose course of action was heartily disliked by the people. There is, however, opposition to granting to the one man who happens to be the President the power to declare a state to be a treaty breaker, and to permit discrimination against that one which he may so name. The committee does not enter upon the debate as to whether the President is the authority best fitted to make this decision. The important thing is to permit American foreign policy to be shaped by American rather than by foreign authorities; and if Congress is unwilling to entrust this decision to the President, then it should be changed to permit the decision to be taken with the approval of Congress. This would be a more awkward and dilatory method, but it would mean an important improvement in the act as it now stands; the United States would then be able to use it for our own purposes, instead of having it exploited by other states for their purposes.

The committee therefore recommends four changes, of which the first is the most important.

I

That the following clause be substituted for section 4 of the present act, a clause which has always been questionable, and which would be unnecessary if the proposed substitution were accepted:

"SECTION 4. (a) Whenever the President shall find that one or more of the countries is engaged in hostilities in violation of a treaty to which the United States is a party, he may so inform Congress, and with the approval of a majority of each House of Congress, he may so proclaim, and thereafter he may revoke his proclamations issued under the authority of this act, in whole or in part, in respect to any state engaged in hostilities not in violation of such treaty and continue their application in respect to states named in the proclamation issued under the authority of this section. (b) The President may, from time to time, change, modify, or revoke in whole or in part any proclamations issued by him under the authority of this section."

II

That the following clause be inserted after (b), in section 2: "Sec. 2. (c) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation under the authority of section 1 of this act and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the export of certain articles or materials of use in war, in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war, from the United States to a state engaged in hostilities (or to a state wherein civil strife exists) is necessary to promote the security or preserve the peace of the United States, he shall so proclaim, and it shall thereafter be unlawful, except under such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe, to export or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, such articles or materials from any place in the United States to any state engaged in hostilities, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, any such state."

The purpose of the above clause is again for the purpose of securing additional flexibility. It is highly important to have an export embargo on other materials of use in war, and this addition, together with the embargo on shipment and the "cash and carry" rule, offer varying methods for the use of the Government, whether against both parties or against one.

III

That all references to civil strife be stricken from the act. Civil war is a very difficult situation in international law, and varies so widely that it would be preferable to handle it through a special statute for each situation rather than through a general rule applicable to all situations.

IV

That the term "hostilities" be substituted throughout the act for the term "war." Recent experience, both in foreign wars and in the application of the act, indicates the wisdom of this change.

It would enable the act to cover situations which it could not cover the term "war."

Finally, the committee calls attention to the desirability of cooperation with other states in situations intended to be covered by the Neutrality Act. Isolated economic action by one state is not so effective as when a number of states combine in it, and, on the other hand, any risks which might be incurred would be shared by other states. Our position would be much strengthened by such cooperation, and the agreement reached at the Lima conference would seem to call for such cooperation. But, again, the committee emphasizes that the most important thing is to enable the American nation, whether in cooperation with others or not, to conduct a foreign policy which can meet its needs. It believes that the changes proposed are essential from any viewpoint, whether that of the person who prefers for the United States to act alone or of the person who believes in collective security.

The committee consists of Prof. Charles G. Fenwick, of Bryn Mawr College, chairman; Dr. Esther C. Brunauer, American Association of University Women; Prof. Clyde Eagleton, of New York University, rapporteur; Dr. Emily Hickman, of the New Jersey College for Women, chairman of public affairs committee of the national board of the Y. W. C. A.; Prof. James T. Shotwell, of Columbia University, president of the League of Nations Association; Prof. Eugene Staley, of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy; Prof. Quincy Wright, of the University of Chicago.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

Mr. President, the two amendments which I have offered follow only two of the suggestions of the committee of experts appointed by the Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts, and the first one I do not offer as a substitute for section 4 as the committee suggests. I could not sponsor an amendment I do not believe in. Personally I consider section 4 of the Neutrality Act one of its strongest sections. Our Monroe Doctrine has meant many things in its history, but one thing it has always meant is that America would view as an unfriendly act an expedition or an invasion in any part of the American hemisphere or against any State in North or South America on the part of a European or an Asiatic state. Whether this understanding has preserved the Western Hemisphere from such an attack and such an invasion we, of course, do not know, but the fact remains that with very insignificant exceptions neither invasion nor expedition has been attempted. If our Neutrality Act, as some declare, has encouraged an aggressor in other parts of the world, this is no time for us to encourage such an aggression in our part of the world.

Section 4 is not an interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine; it is not an extension of that doctrine. I consider the pan-American treaties of the last 2 or 3 years, though, an interpretation and an extension of the doctrine. They have turned the Monroe Doctrine from a unilateral understanding to a multilateral one. This act is extremely helpful to world understanding. It is well, in my opinion, that section 4 remains in the act. Therefore the amendment, instead of acting as a substitute, is an addition.

The second amendment which I offer will produce greater flexibility in the administration of the act when once the Neutrality Act is invoked. It will not, though, leave greater discretionary powers with the Executive. After once the Neutrality Act is invoked there can be no change in its administration short of revocation without the consent of Congress. Thus, if the time comes to decide between a wrongdoer and a nation which is hurt, that decision rests with Congress and not with the Executive. This effect is in keeping with the sort of judgment Congress has been willing to pass on nations of the world, such as our law against the defaulting nations, which is definitely a break from impartiality and which, nevertheless, does make that break in accordance with a simple standard. The determination of an aggressor will always be difficult, but the discovery of a simple definition, such as the one we have decided upon in regard to defaulters, can make the meaning of aggression in American experience more easily ascertained. An aggressor nation under this amendment would be one which deliberately goes to war contrary to a treaty to which the United States is a party.

The committee suggests that all reference in the act to civil strife be stricken. From the standpoint of international law I think this should be done, but this is definitely not the time. Therefore there is no reference to this suggestion in my amendments.

The committee's suggestion that the word "hostilities" be substituted for "war" has not been followed. The reason for this is that in the framing of the neutrality acts I, time and time again in the Foreign Relations Committee, attempted to make a point that in the light of circumstances and in the light of changed conditions in the world that the acts' use of the terms "war" and "state of war" was an unhappy one, but with my suggestions my colleagues disagreed. I am happy to abide by the decision of my senatorial colleagues.

An editorial in the New York Times of February 3, in commenting upon the recommendations of the committee of experts, has the following to say:

"There is an alternative to this present method, and that alternative is to proceed openly and directly to a policy which is a logical consequence of the position Mr. Roosevelt has taken. The most damaging fact of the present situation, so far as American influence in restraint of potential war makers is concerned, is that the war makers know very well that our so-called Neutrality Act would deny to their intended victims the opportunity to purchase in our markets the necessary weapons of self-defense in time of war. The President, who has already shown his disapproval of the Neutrality Act, can properly recommend an amendment of it which would waive this prohibition. By doing so, he would indeed give the potential war makers something to think about.

"The President could also recommend to Congress that the United States withhold from those nations which are clearly identified as aggressors the right to purchase weapons in our markets, even when war has not been declared formally, but when an 'undeclared war' is being fought. It has been objected that no one man, not even the most conscientious Chief Executive, ought to have power to identify an 'aggressor' nation. But this objection could be met in the manner in which the Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts has proposed to meet it—by requiring that the President's identification of an aggressor be confirmed by a majority vote of both the Senate and the House. We may be sure that in such circumstances a prohibition on export of arms would be invoked only in cases when American opinion was crystal clear as to the identity of the aggressor—as in the case of Japan's unprovoked and wholly aggressive war on China. Is there really any large number of Americans who do not believe that our hands would be cleaner, and our interests better protected, if from the outset we had refused to sell instruments of death to the Japanese armies in China?

"The policy recommended here—permission for all nations to purchase American weapons in time of war, except in the case of nations clearly identified by the President and Congress as aggressors—does not go so far in the direction of collective security as this newspaper believes it is desirable and in the long run essential for the United States to go. But we recognize—particularly when so good a former friend of collective security as Herbert Hoover now speaks out against it—that there are necessary limitations to what can be done at this time. The policy recommended here would at least substitute open for secret diplomacy, carry a message to the aggressor nations which they could not possibly misconstrue and throw the influence of the United States against the outbreak of a war which, once begun, might soon involve us."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3790) relating to the taxation of the compensation of public officers and employees was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

RESTRICTION OF EXPORTATION OF CERTAIN LOGS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McNARY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1108) to restrict the exportation of certain Douglas fir peeler logs and Port Orford cedar logs, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AND AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—AMENDMENT

Mr. BARBOUR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1265) to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL FLAG DAY

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas on the 14th day of June 1777 the Continental Congress adopted a resolution creating the flag of the United States in the following terms:

"Resolved, That the flag of the (thirteen) United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the Union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new constellation"; and

Whereas on recurrent anniversaries of the natal day of the national emblem through the years since its creation, on its one hundredth anniversary, on its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, when President Calvin Coolidge issued a public statement June 7, 1927, to his "fellow Americans" requesting the observance of Flag Day, appropriate commemorative exercises befitting the importance and sacredness of the occasion have been observed by the Government of the United States, the American Flag Day Association, and numerous other patriotic organizations, associations, and societies; and

Whereas by proclamation issued May 30, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson gave official recognition to Flag Day when he requested "that throughout the Nation, and, if possible, in every community, the 14th day of June be observed as Flag Day with special patriotic exercises": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the year 1939 and in every year thereafter the 14th day of June officially shall be declared "National Flag Day" within the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States; and that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to issue a proclamation with each recurring anniversary proclaiming National Flag Day and calling upon all Americans, whether resident in the mainland or in the insular possessions of the United States, to observe National Flag Day by displaying the Stars and Stripes in public places and upon public and private buildings and by patriotic exercises in our schools and community centers throughout the Nation, thereby giving public expression of faith in and fealty to America and allegiance to our national ensign, symbol of the glory and achievement of a free, united, and independent people.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF

Mr. BYRNES. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 77) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief created by Senate Resolution 36, Seventy-fifth Congress, shall hereafter consist of 11 instead of 7 members, and the 4 additional members shall be appointed by the President of the Senate. In addition to the authority heretofore conferred upon such committee, the committee shall have power to consider and report to the Senate any bills or resolutions which may be referred to such committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this the resolution concerning which the Senator from South Carolina spoke to me a few minutes ago?

Mr. BYRNES. I spoke to the Senator from Oregon about it.

Mr. McNARY. It increases the membership of the Unemployment Committee?

Mr. BYRNES. From 7 to 11.

Mr. McNARY. How many Republicans are to be on the committee?

Mr. BYRNES. Four; so that the membership of the committee would be 7 Democrats and 4 Republicans.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the resolution is made advisable because otherwise any legislation dealing with the subject might have to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, instead of to the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief, of which the Senator from South Carolina is chairman.

The Committee on Appropriations is not a legislative committee in the sense that it reports substantive measures, and it is not thought desirable that that function be conferred upon it. For that reason, in view of the fact that the special committee has made the investigation and probably understands the subject better than any other committee, it is desirable that in this particular case this authority be conferred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the additional members of the special committee the Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AND AMENDMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 1265, to establish a Department of Public Works, to amend certain sections of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, and that the bill be referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES

Mr. BYRNES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 78), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures hereby is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum until the end of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—LETTER FROM SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary this day directed its chairman to request that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of a letter dated January 31, 1939, which was addressed to the Vice President by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that the letter be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The letter pertains to the delegation of certain powers to subordinates in the Department of Agriculture, and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on February 2, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

PROFIT FROM OPERATION OF STABILIZATION FUND

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the 2d day of February the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury concerning a statement which I had made here in a colloquy with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] concerning the $12,000,000 profit which had been made by the operation of the stabilization fund. On the 8th of February the Secretary of the Treasury replied to that letter. I ask unanimous consent that both letters may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
February 2, 1939.

HON. HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On page 1018 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 1, Senator BARKLEY is quoted as follows:

"I understand that the stabilization fund has been used in such a way as to make a profit to the American Treasury of something like $12,000,000."

Would you be so kind as to tell me whether Senator BARKLEY's understanding is correct and, if so, how this profit was realized?

With kind regards, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
February 8, 1939.

The Honorable HENRY CABOT LODGE, Jr.,

United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of February 2, in which you ask for information with regard to the stabilization fund, I am pleased to advise you as follows:

1. Not as a part of the purpose for which the stabilization fund was created by the act of Congress (the Gold Reserve Act, approved January 30, 1934), but as an incident to its operation, the fund has increased by approximately $12,000,000.

2. While the Congress appropriated $2,000,000,000 as a stabilization fund, only one-tenth of that amount, $200,000,000, has been used as a working fund.

3. Since its creation the fund has been operated, as specified by the act, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and with the approval of the President.

4. It has been employed for the purpose specifically stated in the act, which is that of "stabilizing the exchange value of the dollar." In its administration all of the act's provisions have been most scrupulously followed, both in letter and in spirit.

5. The fund has not been employed for any purpose, and it has not been operated in any way, directly or indirectly, for any other object or to effect any other purpose than that stated in the act.

Sincerely,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

PROMOTION OF WORLD PEACE THROUGH WORLD TRADE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the part the Americas are playing in the promotion of world peace through world trade was emphasized at a luncheon held at the Hotel St. Regis, New York City, January 17, under the auspices of the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission.

A message from President Roosevelt was read by Dr. James Rowland Angell, former president of Yale University and a director of the American Arbitration Association, who presided.

The meeting was held to honor the newly inducted chairman of the Commission, Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Chamber of Commerce and president of the International Business Machines Corporation, and Mr. Spruille Braden, honorary chairman, who recently retired as the active head of the Commission to become American Ambassador to Colombia.

It was announced that Mr. Watson, who is an outstanding American advocate of international cooperation and world peace, would confer with Latin-American colleagues on the Commission in the course of a good-will tour of South America in February and March. Other speakers at the luncheon were Dr. Angell; Ambassador Braden; James S. Carson, chairman of the American section of the Commission; and Mrs. Vincent Astor, director of the American Arbitration Association.

The representative and official nature of the meeting and its international significance were indicated by the attendance of consular officers of 11 Latin-American countries.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list of official guests, the message of the President of the United States, and the address delivered by Hon. Thomas J. Watson be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIST OF OFFICIAL GUESTS

Hon. Rafael Navia, acting consul general of Colombia; Hon. A. R. Hidalgo Z., consul general of Ecuador; Hon. Pablo Saurez, consul general of Cuba; Hon. Rafael de la Colina, consul general of Mexico; Hon. E. Pardo de Zela, consul general of Peru; Hon. Ricardo Castro Beeche, minister of Costa Rica; Hon. F. Alvarado Gallegos, consul general of El Salvador; Hon. Hector Giron, consul general of Guatemala; Hon. Oscar Correia, consul general of Brazil; Hon. Tomas Pacanins, consul general of Venezuela; and Hon. Jaime Gutierrez Guerra, consul of Bolivia.

[Text of message from President Roosevelt to the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission, meeting at New York City January 17, 1939]

I have received Mr. Herman G. Brock's letter of January 9 telling me of the installation in office tomorrow of the Honorable Spruille Braden as honorary chairman and Mr. Thomas J. Watson as chairman of your Commission, and I appreciate the invitation conveyed by Mr. Brock to send you a message in connection with the occasion.

It is unnecessary for me to emphasize anew the importance which I attach to all responsible activity destined to strengthen further the ties of friendship and understanding which happily exist between the peoples of the American republics. The objectives of the Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission seem to me clearly directed to further these ends.

Mr. Braden's association with your Commission brings to mind the notable achievements of the Chaco Peace Conference, at which he was the representative of the United States, in solving through pacific negotiation a dispute which had long continued between two of our sister republics. The conference provided an outstanding practical contribution to the settlement of inter-American differences through peaceful and equitable means. It provided an admirable example of the practical use to which patience, open-mindedness, square dealing, good will, and the services of impartial friends can be put toward the settlement of all disputes, whether they be political or commercial.

I trust that the field for the usefulness of your Commission will continue to develop, and with my cordial greetings to your new chairman, Mr. Thomas J. Watson, I send my best wishes to your organization.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Text of address of Thomas J. Watson, chairman, Inter-American Commercial Arbitration Commission, at New York City, January 17, 1939]

COOPERATION OF THE AMERICAS AS AN AID TO WORLD PEACE

I wish to express my very deep gratitude for the honor of appointment as chairman of this Commission to succeed Ambassador Braden. I am interested in relations between the United States and all countries, but especially in the relations among the Americas.

We live in the same hemisphere. The talents of the people, the quality of the soil, and the natural resources afford an opportunity for each country to profit through fair trade relations with other countries in the Western Hemisphere. I believe the greatest achievement along this line, since I have been interested in international affairs, is the reciprocal-trade treaties worked out by our Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, with the endorsement of the President.

The more we improve and develop trade relations between our country and Latin America the more we shall help the rest of the world, because as we increase the standards of living in our country and all these other countries it opens broader fields throughout the world for all peoples to work in.

I want to pay a special tribute to those engaged in the transportation industry on land, water, and in the air for the very great interest and effort which they are putting forth in developing better transportation facilities between our countries.

I also want to pay tribute to our press, which is doing such a big job in presenting the arbitration association's work and that of all the organizations interested in this work in the Western Hemisphere.

The International Chamber of Commerce, in whose work I am privileged to play some part, is composed of business, financial, and educational leaders from 50 countries. After a great deal of careful study they decided that the only sure road to peace is through world trade.

I want to digress just for a moment to mention one thing in which I am very deeply interested—something that is outside of and much broader than the Western Hemisphere. That is the matter of minorities in certain countries.

I hope and trust and pray that this great world problem is going to be settled through arbitration. It has ceased to be a local problem, but is a world problem, and I feel that every individual in the world who is thinking about the right kind of future should take a personal interest in helping to solve this matter in a peaceful manner through arbitration.

As long as we can hold meetings like the Eighth International Conference of American States at Lima, dealing with arbitration and trade relations, and accomplish as much as was accomplished at that meeting, we should feel encouraged. We must all realize that the matter of relations between nations is something that must be worked on continuously.

We owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Hull and every member of his delegation, and the others who attended, for their splendid efforts during that conference, which was in keeping with the "good-neighbor" spirit which the United States is so desirous of promoting.

All who are interested in the relations between the countries of the Western Hemisphere have a right to feel that a great deal has been accomplished. To my mind, the most important thing in connection with our relations with other countries is to avoid anything that might be considered in the light of propaganda.

I am looking forward with the keenest interest to my forthcoming trip to South America, to meeting my colleagues on the Commission, and to their increased collaboration in keeping open and using trade routes for the maintenance of peace, cooperation, and good will.

I would like to pay my tribute to Mr. John L. Merrill, president of the Pan American Society, and all its members, who are putting forth their best efforts toward promoting trade and friendship between the American countries.

The task ahead of us today is not one of setting up arbitration machinery. We have that in abundance. Our task is intensive education in the knowledge and use of arbitration; it is to make every businessman, big or little, conscious that he is a vital part of the great western peace structure; that what he does in his business relations and how he does it may make the difference between peace and war, or between good relationships and bad understanding. The task is to carry to the young businessmen of tomorrow a greater sense of the solidarity to be achieved through economic cooperation and that world peace through world trade offers the best promise of endurance.

The world needs something bigger and broader than any of these things, and that is a spiritual revival, not based on any particular individual's church affiliations but based on the Golden Rule. We must develop a greater desire in the hearts of more people simply to do right in dealing with their fellow man.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

DEATH OF POPE PIUS XI

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the entire world mourns the loss of one of the greatest spiritual leaders of recorded time.

The pontificate of Pius XI covered the eventful years of postwar disillusionment, world economic crisis, and the ascendancy of absolutist government, communism, and fascism. In this critical period he embraced, with high courage and supreme statesmanship, every opportunity for service to the progress of the world.

His successful negotiation of the Lateran Treaty in 1929, restoring temporal power to the church, would in itself have marked him as a great figure in history. But, beyond that, he achieved a position of influence and authority rarely attained by one in his office because of his untiring efforts in behalf of international peace and social justice.

To the very end, wrestling with the forces that threaten the foundations of civilization, he labored to preserve freedom of religious worship, the rights of minorities, and the dignity of the individual.

His passing is mourned not only by the 350,000,000 communicants of the Roman Catholic Church in every corner of the globe but by peoples of every faith and creed. With one voice and one heart the peoples of the world join in praying that his immortal soul may rest in peace, and that we may soon realize fully upon this earth the ideals of human brotherhood for which he worked and died.

Mr. President, I present a resolution, for the consideration of which I ask unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 79) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the news of the passing of Pope Pius XI.

Resolved, That the Senate commiserates with the millions of communicants of the Roman Catholic Church, in this country and abroad, upon the death of a preeminent spiritual leader who endeared himself to peoples of all nations and all faiths by his untiring efforts to maintain international peace, freedom of religious worship, and the dignity of the individual against the onslaught of antagonistic forces in every part of the world.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Papal Secretary of State, the Vatican City.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, not knowing that the Senator from New York had announced his purpose to present the resolution which has been offered, I, myself, had drawn one and intended to offer it, but I have yielded to the Senator from New York for that purpose. In support of the resolution I wish to make a few brief observations.

In the midst of the chaos which threatens the perpetuity of both religion and democracy, it is appropriate that we pause in the midst of our responsibilities to pay tribute to the life of a man who has made so great a contribution to the cause of world peace and world democracy. I am not an adherent to the Catholic faith as a denominational expression of religious aspiration, though there are many things about this great church which I admire. For six generations my ancestors have been elders in the Presbyterian Church. I was educated in a Methodist college, and have for the greater part of my life been a member of the Methodist Church. But in the great cause of religion, in the desire for tolerance and understanding, in the accomplishment of the brotherhood of man, we must recognize the achievements of men of all religions and of all races who have devoted their lives to making the world a better place in which to live and a better place in which to die. With this sort of religious background, I am honored to pay tribute to the head of the great Catholic Church who, during all of his life, and especially during his tenure as Pope Pius XI, has brought the weight of his great influence to bear upon the rulers of nations in attempting to bring peace on earth and good will to men.

Pope Pius was a scholar. It is said that for a hundred years no greater scholar has occupied the Papacy. He was a statesman. During his incumbency he was instrumental in adjusting the differences between the Vatican and the Italian Government. He was deeply schooled in the history of mankind, in its poetry and philosophy, and in the sciences by which men live. He preached those fundamental doctrines which he believed essential to the fulfillment of man's destiny upon this earth. He abated fascism in his own country and communism throughout the world, and was the author of numerous encyclicals which will be a permanent part of the history of his church and of the world.

With all his scholarship and statesmanship, he was gentle, modest, consecrated, and with all of this he brought to his work a sense of the indispensability of a modern outlook upon the problems which he faced and which faced the world.

Let us hope and believe that the influence of this devoted man may work in effective ways to bring peace and understanding among the discordant nations, and that his words, spoken in behalf of the rights of depressed and repressed people, may penetrate into the hearts of the rulers of nations to such an extent as to bring a compulsion upon them to promote the establishment, preservation, and observance of the privileges to which the lowliest of men are entitled. Let us believe that the example of such a life emphasizes one of the greatest of Christian teachings, namely, that it is more blessed to give than to receive; that nations, no less than individuals, should do unto others as they would have others do unto them; and that the mission of the Master Himself, to give life, not only but to give it more abundantly, may in our day achieve its fulfillment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as a member of the religious faith of Pope Pius XI, and speaking for the others of his faith who are Members of the Senate, I wish to anticipate the action which we are taking here today on the pending resolution by expressing our appreciation, and the appreciation of all the people of the church of which Pope Pius XI was the spiritual head, for this token of sympathy and tribute. It is a notable sign of the tolerance, broad-mindedness, and good will of the Members of the Senate and of the people of the United States whom we here represent.

The adoption of this resolution affords renewed evidence of the spirit of tolerance and brotherly love that Americans have toward men and women of all religions, no matter in what part of our land they live or in what way they extend worship, gratitude, praise, and prayer to the Creator, who has bestowed especially upon our Nation a wealth of resources and an equality of opportunity and free institutions never before witnessed in the world.

Pius XI has lived in troublesome times. He witnessed a tremendous transition in the attitude of the world toward religions, institutions of freedom, and turbulent experimentation in new philosophies of social and political action and forms of government. Never in the world's history more than today have there been such violent manifestations of envy, jealousy, antagonism, and hatred among social, economic, and religious groups and among the heads of many governments. His heart, weakened by advancing years, must have been pierced deeply. He looked out upon a world crushing religion and enthroning tyranny.

To us here in America it is consoling that in the midst of all the selfishness, self-seeking, and personal ambitions which characterize this period this great spiritual leader, this aged and holy man, raised his voice again and again pleading with mankind to practice the two great natural virtues which alone can bring peace, happiness, and contentment to the world, namely, justice and charity—justice not merely in the social relations of individuals but in its application to the social and economic problems of society; charity, not merely almsgiving but an all-embracing brotherly love.

We can better understand his plea for justice by recalling the definitions of this virtue expressed through the ages by some of the world's great leaders.

Justinian, the greatest of lawmakers, said, "Justice is a firm and continuous desire to render to everyone that which is his due."

Cicero put it thus: "The foundations of justice are that none shall be harmed, and, next, that the commonweal be served."

The great St. Augustine said, "Abolish justice and what are governments but great robbers?"

Edmund Burke proclaimed: "Justice is the greatest standing policy of civil society."

Our own Whittier called justice "the hope of all who suffer; the dread of all who do wrong."

No one in all the world was in a better position than he whose passing the world mourns today to point out that the economic systems of our day were becoming instruments of oppression and denial of opportunity; that the problem of our day was far more than the preservation of material greatness and prosperity; rather the problem was and is to preserve the soul and spirit of justice. Well he knew that to lose this spirit was to lose all. He recognized that without a continuing and growing justice there would arise a vast mechanism of oppression and a great subversion of our liberties. He knew that the priceless heritage of freedom that the peoples of the world had achieved through untold sacrifices through the centuries would thus be lost.

In his great encyclicals he pointed out that the crucial economic problems of our day, becoming more and more complex, arose out of the struggle of the poor and the toilers in their natural aspirations to have a reasonable chance in life. It grieved him to find the masses in some countries going to extremes in their attempts to win this struggle. He pleaded with the rulers of the world not to think entirely of the strong and the powerful, or a particular social class, or a particular political party; justice, he said, demands that the necessities and the aspirations of the poor, of working men and women, of the multitude must be recognized and dealt with adequately.

His voice is stilled in death, but his admonitions will not cease to reverberate throughout the world until nations and mankind realize that only upon the foundation of justice and charity can peace reign and contentment and happiness be the heritage of the human family.

Mr. President, it is most appropriate that the United States Senate should pause in the midst of its deliberations today to pay tribute to this fallen spiritual leader of the world, beloved by men of all religions, who saw with him through the mist and gloom of this hour the importance of the restoration of the spiritual values of life, if freedom is to endure, justice be established, and peace prevail.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Republican Members of the Senate I join in the splendid sentiments expressed by the distinguished leader of the majority, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I endorse all that has been said by him, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], regarding the life, character, spirituality, and usefulness of the beloved Pope.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks made by me a few moments ago I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very scholarly and moving address delivered by that distinguished American, Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, paying tribute to His Holiness Pope Pius XI.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF BERNARD M. BARUCH IN NATION-WIDE TRIBUTE TO POPE PIUS OVER COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1939

Ladies and gentlemen, this meeting is an expression of the world's sorrow at the death of a great man. I feel it a privilege to be heard on this occasion—a privilege that would become the greater if words of mine were able to express the thoughts of others.

I confess my debt to this priest, whose name will not be outshone by any of the 260 men who have filled Peter's chair. I confess my debt as an American. I confess my debt as a seeker for world peace and the friendship of mankind. I confess my debt as one of the Jewish faith. To all of these roles he has given effort to keep them decent, dignified, and self-respecting.

To say that Pius XI preached tolerance is to belittle his gigantic service. He did more than that—far more. He preached justice—equal and freehanded. He preached justice to all, not to a few. Justice to those he liked as well as to those he did not like. And more than that, he preached mercy. Only God knows how much each of us needs that. He preached man's right to seek salvation in his own way. He preached freedom of conscience. He preached the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. He preached love and good will in preaching the gospel of Jesus. And he preached it in a way that, were it translated into deed, the world would be a better place to live in. That was what he sought.

With a courage that overcame sickness and defeat, he carried on, and carried with him the hope of humanity. It is not too much to say that no man in history has been so much the head and front—so wholly the leader—in the age-long fight for the right to live as free men and free women.

Pius feared no foe in shining armor. He was a St. George, battling with the dragons of prejudice of force, of venom, dragons whose noxious breath strangles the divinely fashioned individual, and snatching his soul, leaves a dead thing. The Pope was winning that fight because he was armed by truth, by justice, and by humanity.

His right to free expression, of which he became so great an exemplar, was historically sound. He was the first Pope, except Benedictus XV (who was chosen in the pressure and divisions of war), to be elected by the free and unvettable ballots of the conclave of cardinals.

Pius was the Holy Father in act as well as name. He was bound by the unbreakable ties of spirit to all who love truth and cherish freedom. He brought comfort and hope to the oppressed. He was uncompromising in his war against the false and the destructive. He protested bitterly against the torture of the body, of enslavement of the mind, and the degradation of the spirit. He flayed communism as he did nazi-ism. His encyclicals, more in number than any other Pope uttered, were declarations for liberty, for the deeper line, for democracy. In them America finds a code that it embraces and proclaims.

Achille Ratti, born poor, died the richest man in the world—rich in the record of the battles he waged for God and for righteousness, rich in the love of countless millions, rich in the trust and the confidence of the oppressed, and richest in heartfelt prayers that he may have peace.

Pius XI needs no cachet from the secular world. That has been given him by his works. He died strong in his beliefs; he did more—he lived for them.

Through his death there has come into our world a great vacuum which we anxiously watch. Our prayers for the repose of his soul will be mixed with our prayers for the fate of humanity, to which his successor can and must make so great a contribution.

May this martyred Pope, sanctified already by the love of his fellows, be with us for all time in the spirit of those who take over the golden throne.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Pope I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously entered, until Thursday, February 16, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most compassionate God, our Heavenly Father, enable us to walk in the old way, the everlasting way of a living faith. Let these moments be Thy silence; may they arrest our souls. The world is saddened because of the death of him who was the spiritual leader of an earth-wide church. Mankind finds a common ground in its great loss and sorrow. Calm and serene, his last breath bore the gentle touch of peace. He wore the garment of our Saviour's spirit. He will continue to weave it by the light of eternity as he did by the light of time. We praise Thee, Almighty God, for the abiding inheritance he has left to the boundless races of men. While the earth was struggling in the turbulent sea of the cursed depths of war, he stood amid the storm. While it was engulfed in the furnace of bitter hate, he rested his spiritual eye on the seamless robe and the spotless vestment. We thank Thee that Thy messenger marked the star in the darkness and hailed the dove in the deluge. He stretched forth his hands, clinging to the cross, and yearned for the brotherhood of man. We beseech Thee that Thy spirit may brood and have sway over bruised and troubled humanity; thus may it be brought back to God. In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 9, 1939, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Resolution 91

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States has learned with the profoundest of sorrow and shock of the death of His Holiness Pope Pius XI, supreme spiritual sovereign of the Roman Catholic Church and Sovereign of the State of Vatican City. That the President of the United States be requested to communicate this expression of sentiment to the secretary of state at the Vatican, and that, as a mark of further respect to the memory of Pope Pius, the House do now adjourn.

Also, petition of the City Council of Berkeley, Calif., requesting that the Congress reject the doctrine embodied in Senate Joint Resolution 24, that the Federal Government may not attempt to proceed against the several States and assert title to submerged lands now adjacent to the shores of those several States; and authorizing the city manager of Berkeley, Calif., to appear before the committees of Congress and oppose such legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1053. Also, memorial of the State Legislature of California, requesting the Congress of the United States take such steps as are necessary, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Reclamation are requested, to name the lake which will result from the construction of Shasta Dam at Kennett, Calif., "McColl Lake"; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

1054. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, urging the Congress of the United States to amend the California Indian Jurisdictional Act of 1928 to provide for nontreaty Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

1055. Also, memorial of the State Legislature of California to the Congress and the President, urging the passage of legislation that will make it imperative that the Works Progress Administration art project be continued in its present form; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1056. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, urging Congress to enact legislation that will result in the increase of Federal aid to aged and disabled veterans; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

1057. Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, urging the Congress to include the construction of dams and hydroelectric power plants in connection therewith on the Kern River as one of the Federal construction projects, and that Federal moneys be appropriated in sums sufficient to complete the constructions of the dams and other works therewith at the earliest possible moment; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause His face to shine upon us.

That Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations.

Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee.

O let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for Thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee.

Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOURLY MEETING

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, after consulting with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I understand the majority leader wishes to finish this bill, that is now pending, on tomorrow night?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the desire.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And after that we are to take up the legislative appropriation bill and finish it this week?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there anything else on the docket?

Mr. RAYBURN. Nothing that I know of now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the untimely death of George R. Holmes, one of Washington's most distinguished newspapermen, came as a great shock to his many friends in his profession and in official and private life.

Mr. Holmes was stricken in the zenith of his life. Suffering a heart attack, he died at his home on February 12. True to the tenets of his profession, he had worked diligently to the end. He left his office but a few hours before his death.

It is a notable tribute to his talents and character that great and humble joined in a tribute to his memory in the Fort Myer Chapel and accompanied the body to its resting place near the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. It was fitting that he should lie in Arlington National Cemetery. He trained at Fort Myer for service in the World War.

The rise of George R. Holmes is typical of the success which is possible in a great democratic nation. Born on a farm in Tippecanoe County, Ind., on January 28, 1895, he knew the rigors of work in the fields and doubtless dreamed of great cities beyond the horizon.

After being educated in local schools and at the University of Wisconsin, he entered the newspaper field on the Indianapolis Sun. His talents readily became apparent, and soon he had transferred his activities to New York.

Joining the staff of International News Service in Washington in 1916, he became chief of the bureau 3 years later. At his death he ranked as dean of press association bureau chiefs.

His newspaper work was interrupted by the World War. When the war broke out, he enlisted in the Cavalry. He served throughout the war, first gaining the rank of second lieutenant in the Cavalry, next assistant adjutant of the Seventy-eighth Division, then as observer in the Two Hundred and Fifty-eighth Aero Squadron.

Among his accomplishments in the newspaper field was his story of the burial of the Unknown Soldier, a touching story which won him a Pulitzer prize honorable mention.

Mr. Holmes, in the course of his work, knew intimately Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and Roosevelt. He was the friend of many Cabinet officers and Senators and Representatives of varying political faith.

Among those who mourned for him at funeral services were both Republican and Democratic political leaders, leaders of the legal and other professions. Both President and Mrs. Roosevelt joined in expressing their deep sorrow.

As a political writer, Mr. Holmes was confronted with the task of giving his millions of readers a true picture of the national situation without bias.

He was widely known for his ability to do so without arousing the animosity of those who necessarily figured in the news. This is evidenced by the fact that he held the friendship of rivals in the political field.

Mr. Holmes' life work is a sterling example to those who seek achievement in the field of journalism. He was able, alert, and a keen observer. And above all, he was fair and just. These many fine characteristics, as well as his engaging personality, won for him a legion of warm friends. The respect of his colleagues in his profession of journalism was indicated by his choice as president of the famed Gridiron Club.

Newspaperdom and the country can ill afford the loss of men like George Holmes, particularly in this crucial period when America needs men of courage, of vision, and character.

The world is poorer for the untimely death of this great journalist. Those of us privileged to call him a friend, mourn his loss.

INCOME-TAX REFUNDS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel it is worthy of special mention when it can be shown the Bureau of Internal Revenue collected 10 times as much in additional assessments and penalties than it was forced to refund in the last fiscal year.

As chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I released yesterday to the press the report for the fiscal year 1938 of refunds which you referred to the committee. This report, required under the provisions of section 5, of the act of May 29, 1928, shows refunds of $500 or more of internal revenue taxes. It was made clear by me that this report represents amounts that have been paid taxpayers during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not amounts that are to be hereafter refunded.

Mr. Speaker, the statement submitted to the committee lists only those taxpayers who received in excess of $500. The total amount of income-tax refunds paid during the fiscal year, which total includes many amounts smaller than $500 and not required to be reported to Congress, was $24,329,415.27. This amount included interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of the overpayment to the approximate date of refund. The number of taxpayers who received income tax refunds was 159,233.

I am advised that the more common errors of taxpayers which resulted in overpayments of income taxes, according to the records of the Department, were: Mathematical errors, the reporting of nontaxable income, failure to take credit for foreign taxes, and failure to take proper credit for depreciation and obsolescence of physical properties. The larger refunds to a considerable extent are based upon final decisions of courts or the Board of Tax Appeals and/or determinations by the Treasury Department based upon decisions by courts or the Board of Tax Appeals.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I point out that during the fiscal year 1938 the actual cash collections on account of back income taxes amounted to $251,619,229.50, an amount in excess of 10 times the total of actual cash refunds of income taxes.

In connection with the statement that income-tax refunds for 1938 totaled slightly in excess of $24,000,000, I also call attention to the fact that for the fiscal year 1938 the total of the cash paid out for all classes of refunds and interest thereon was in excess of $34,000,000; for the fiscal year 1932 the comparable items amounted to in excess of $80,000,000; for the year 1931, it was nearly $70,000,000; for 1930, more than $126,000,000; and for the year 1929, more than $190,000,000 was paid. The large expenditures in past years had been occasioned, to a considerable extent, by the relief provisions and by the complexity of the tax laws during the excess-profits tax years, and due to overpayment because of an initial lack of understanding of the provisions of the taxing statutes enacted as an incident to the World War.

The refunds to payers of processing taxes, totaling $10,200,359.64 during the fiscal year 1938 (the items over $500 being included in the report), did not in fact or to any material extent represent erroneous collections, since the statute levying the tax directed the return of that portion of the tax collected on articles exported, or sold for charitable use, or on cotton used in the manufacture of large cotton bags. The processing taxes statute did not provide for exempting articles from taxation as usually was the method in respect of other internal revenue taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I offer this brief explanation so that the Congress and the people of the country will know that everything is not going out and nothing coming in. I might add in conclusion the law does not permit the Bureau of Internal Revenue to make public the names and amounts of additional collections as it does in reference to refunds. [Applause.]

THE LATE POPE PIUS XI

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the passing of Pope Pius.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, the news of the death of Pope Pius XI comes as a great shock to the people of the entire world. While not unexpected, because of the severe and protracted illness he so valiantly underwent, it has nevertheless caused universal sorrow.

I am sure that history will accord to this sainted pontiff an exalted place among his predecessors and will record that his frail hand deterred the onslaught of barbarism on this earth.

His was a life replete with unselfish service to God, church, and mankind. Of humble origin, he was endowed with a brilliant mind and great love of humanity which he devoted to the service of God, thereby dedicating himself to the needs of his fellow man.

In the service of the Roman Catholic Church he consummated treaties that were masterful in their diplomatic achievements and historic in their significance. The Lateran Treaty with the Government of Italy brought to a mutually satisfactory and beneficial ending an ancient dispute. The concordat with the present Government of Germany has unquestionably operated to check persecution in Germany, not alone of the Roman Catholic Church but of all Christian religion. His achievements in the advancement of the church are great and unsurpassed.

Born in an Italian mill community, he learned from his boyhood associations the crying needs of those who labor and, after a lifetime of exhaustive study and work, he brought forth his inspired encyclicals on labor which rank with those of his illustrious predecessor, Pope Leo XIII.

An eyewitness in Poland to the lawless invasion of the armies of communism and an ideological principal in the historic event that hurled back from western Europe the spread of communism, he wrote with the penetrating eye of direct knowledge the encyclical on atheistic communism which has thrown the full light of truth and reason upon the illusory promises of that form of government.

Perhaps his greatest contribution to universal mankind was his steadfast and unflinching position with respect to the emergence of new ideologies in government, inimical to and in derogation of fundamental principles of Christianity.

Enfeebled by long illness, with no armies, navies, or vast material resources at his command, this slender reed has stood out in a world torn with hatred, jealousy, and avarice as a compelling symbol of peace, toleration, and universal love. His frail voice rose above the din of war machines and the clamor of propaganda, steadfastly preaching the teachings of the Saviour. Weakened though it was by illness, his voice carried to the peoples of the world words of mighty import because inspired by God and reason, and gave pause to the headlong march of militarism and international lawlessness.

In a world shocked by the recrudescence of persecution and legalized atrocity, sorrowed by the imminence of devastating war, wearied by the sufferings of economic disorders, he has stood forth as the untemperizing voice of reason and the symbol of hope and faith in God and mankind.

When at last he realized that death drew near, his only protest was "there is still so much to be done." And when death claimed him a prayer for peace was on his lips.

He has laid down the great burdens he so heroically bore through life. His voice is stilled but there is hope that his task is complete. There is hope that even now the mold of decay is undermining the weeds of barbarism and savagery that have harried this earth; that even now the seeds of a new world order devoted to Christian principles are growing into maturity. Inevitably that day must come. When it arrives it will in no small measure be due to the fruition of the life work of Pope Pius XI.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of the legislative business for the day, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE FISCAL SITUATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we heard a moment ago about collecting income taxes of a few hundred million dollars. There was a Democratic caucus this morning, and I suppose the Democratic administration has found some way whereby we are going to balance the Budget, a weighty question in our national life. I want to call your attention to the fact that we are $2,033,000,000 in the red from July 1 to this time this year. If the administration in power today would give some time to considering how we are going to stop spending and balance the Budget, we could do it. I say to the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle, if you do not stop reckless spending, "Where are you going to get the money?"

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. There is one special order for Thursday.

Mr. COX. Subject to the special order already entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by inserting a very brief but very informative discussion of industrial conditions in this country.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a radio address delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], under the auspices of the Washington Star in its national radio forum last evening on the subject of our national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein three memorials passed by the Legislature of the State of Montana: First, House Joint Memorial No. 1, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of the legislation for the creation and establishment of the Townsend recovery plan, and for benefits to be paid to all persons over the age of 60 years.

Second, a memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, House Joint Memorial No. 3, requesting an investigation of the wrongful destruction, removal, and failure to replace the fairground buildings of the county of Musselshell, and thereafter cause restitution of the same, said buildings having been wrongfully destroyed and removed by authority of the National Park Service.

Third, House Joint Memorial No. 7, a memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, requesting it to assist the beet-sugar industry in Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

A PLANNED PROGRAM OF PUBLIC WORKS AND WHY IT SHOULD BE PERMANENTLY CONTINUED

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point on the subject A Planned Program of Public Works and Why the P. W. A. Should Be Permanently Continued.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Members of the House seriously consider the advisability of creating a permanent bureau for public works. We can never hope to establish a balance between industrial production and consumption—there will continue to be fluctuations which result in peaks and below normal activities. We can also expect physical disasters, such as floods, fires, earthquakes, droughts, in various parts of the country, with which the Government will have to cope. Communities stricken by such disaster will call upon the Government for financial aid to repair the damages. It seems to me that all of these things seriously affect our employment and security problems. It has been proposed that a Federal agency be established of a permanent nature which could go into action when industrial consumption declines below the danger level and avert economic catastrophes which so easily follow such declines.

The work undertaken in the past by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works has been so helpful in time of economic emergency that its usefulness must be continued on a permanent basis. California has benefited to such an extent that the gains in industrial activity jumped to a new peak in recent months when the new P. W. A. program started. The P. W. A. program in California has been successful not merely because it has resulted in putting more money into circulation but because it has the enthusiastic cooperation of local communities, private industry, and the labor unions. Local communities have had a voice in determining what form municipal improvements would take. Private industry has been encouraged and aided. Private employment has been provided at regular industrial and construction jobs. Labor has had the benefit of normal working conditions, stable wages, and the provision of work in the individual trades.

Involved in the public-works program are jobs for our building-trades workers, the spread of purchasing power, expansion of factory pay rolls, and, probably what is equally important, the recovery of our whole economic system.

In April 1936 Mr. M. J. Collieran, president of the Operative Plasterers and Cement Finishers International Association, spoke in behalf of a permanent public-works program as follows:

What I refer to, of course, is the principle of long-range planning for public-works construction.

The idea that public or public-aided construction is a major weapon of any modern government against unemployment and depression has been generally recognized for so long that I do not need to dwell on it. That such construction ought to be planned and timed in order to provide a cushion of employment when most needed has likewise been a matter of general agreement. But, still, in spite of all the talk, and in spite of the large sums actually spent on public-works construction during the past 4 years by various temporary Federal agencies, no permanent machinery has been set up which could plan out a long-range future program of construction.

Way back in 1921 Mr. Herbert Hoover, as Secretary of Commerce, and in a special capacity as chairman of a committee on unemployment, presented an eight-point report to President Harding. The main point in this report was the long-range planning of public works. It recommended the immediate appointment of a committee to take up the problem of planning and carrying out a long-range program of public-works construction to offset future depressions. This committee, however, failed to function.

We see, therefore, that the subject is one which has been discussed for many years. I see no reason for continuing the present Public Works Administration as an emergency temporary agency. We know that such an agency will be needed always and that we need not hesitate to make it permanent in view of its splendid accomplishments in controlling fluctuation in production.

While the Congress is considering ways and means of alleviating unemployment in the future, consideration should be given to a permanent plan for absorbing future economic shocks and unavoidable unemployment. Converting the Public Works Administration into a permanent organization would remove the present emergency time restrictions under which that agency is now operating and permit it to function on a long planned range basis. It seems logical and to the best interests of the country to do this. Certainly an organization which operates on a permanent basis can operate more efficiently and economically.

We have been concerned in the past with the "cure" of economic ills of the Nation and have had little opportunity to inquire into the "cause" of such ills. It is now time to concentrate our efforts and resources to combat the "cause" and thus remove the need for temporary measures. Permanent social-security machinery has already been put in operation to provide economic security for the workers of our country through social insurance. The functioning of this machinery will go far to take care of our unemployables and those who are temporarily unemployed. But there is no permanent machinery in existence to care for those who are unemployed for long periods of time. Long-range planning in the field of public works presents one solution to this problem.

The Public Works Administration is to be congratulated upon its fine record of achievement. I have yet to hear any adverse criticism of its operations. Considering the many restrictions that have been placed upon its activities by the emergency legislation under which it has been functioning it is remarkable that it has been able to operate so efficiently and smoothly. Various "dead lines" have been imposed for receiving and approving applications. Other restrictions made it necessary for the work to be started at certain dates and completed in certain periods. These mandates of the Congress have always been fulfilled and construction has proceeded promptly and efficiently. Such restrictions, however, would not be necessary or expedient under a planned program of public works, thus eliminating any possibility of material and contract price boosts.

Mr. Speaker, the necessity for such legislation at this time is too obvious to demand further elaboration. I firmly believe that industrial rehabilitation is dependent upon a planned program of permanent character.

Mr. MAGNUSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the legislative program for today I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the conclusion of the legislative program for the day I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have already held up for 4 days the consideration of the national-defense bill that is to come before the House today. It is very necessary that we proceed to the consideration of this bill. I hope no other Members will request time to speak now. I shall not object to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin, for he has already made it, but I serve notice that I must object to other requests of a similar nature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

NEUTRALITY AND PEACE

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, in America today we again hear the cry of war. We hear that events abroad are threatening our American institutions. We are told that we must prepare for defense against some unnamed nation somewhere. It is said that we cannot be assured of peace in a world which has grown small and methods of attack swift. We are led to believe that we cannot ignore foreign acts which are contradictory to our democratic principles and beliefs; that it becomes increasingly impossible for us to maintain a neutral position; that we should arm and employ sanctions against aggressors. The utterances coming from administration sources are creating a war hysteria which finds no parallel during the last 20 years.

Let not the White House forget that the underlying sentiment of the American people is for peace. There is an overwhelming desire among Americans to keep our country out of war. There is no wish anywhere for a tragic repetition of the events of 1917 and 1918. There are those who remember the horrors of the last war—a war presumably waged to make the world safe for democracy. How deceived we were! Instead of democracy we begot fascism and communism. That must not happen again.

Through the creation of a war consciousness, through criticism of other forms of government, through ill will and resentment toward other people, through preparation for war, through the adoption of methods short of war but stronger and more effective than words, our Nation will drift into a position from which it will not recede, and war will be inevitable. It is the privilege and the duty of Congress to give to America an assurance that strict neutrality will be maintained so that the American people will enjoy a well-founded and lasting peace.

There is much confusion about the meaning of the term "neutrality." In popular thought neutrality means simply keeping out of war—the condition of those who remain at peace while others are fighting. From a more technical viewpoint, neutrality has meant a legal status involving certain rights and duties. For my purposes, I prefer to use the term "strict neutrality." By this is meant no contact with a warring nation; no transmission of war materials to a warring nation; and no transmission of food, clothing, or any other supplies if we are served with an ultimatum to such effect by any belligerent nation.

Any discussion of the meaning of neutrality must state the relation between neutrality and the defense problem. An air force, landed force, and naval force sufficient to protect our territory from sudden attack is all that is necessary. A large standing army, a huge navy, a powerful air fleet engender the courage to enter into war upon the slightest pretext.

There is no more fallacious belief than that the best way to preserve peace is to prepare for war. From the days of the Roman militaristic rule to the period preceding the World War history clearly demonstrates that when a nation is well armed and its military forces well trained it will seek outlets to make use of those arms.

An excessive defense program will increase the likelihood of our becoming involved in foreign disputes, will make it more difficult to adhere to a policy of strict neutrality. Our national defense must be adequate for the protection of our own territories, but it must not be extravagant to the point of leading us into war. How much better it would be if all our energies were directed toward improving the internal conditions of this country. How much more sane, how much more civilized it would be if our money were spent on developing America for the American people, and not in the creation and maintenance of a vast army and navy. America must not join in the current armaments race, must not become infected with the "preparedness mania" which is the forerunner of war. We must keep our heads. Sanity promotes peace. Armaments create wars.

The United States, from the time of its inception, has had as an established principle of its foreign policy the maintenance of neutrality. The part played by the United States in realizing the great conception of neutrality forms one of the most honorable chapters in our national history.

In spite of that fact our previous neutrality policy has not kept us out of war. The attempt to safeguard our so-called neutral rights was one of the factors which led us into the World War.

In August 1914 neutral nations and their citizens possessed certain rights of trade and otherwise on the high seas which may be said to have been generally recognized by belligerents—at least in theory. Then came the Great War and a series of acts by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany, every one of which was challenged by the American Government as a violation of our neutral rights—the planting of mines, the extensive sea war zones, destruction of our ships captured in midocean, unwarned sinking of our ships by submarines, forcing of our ships and our mails into belligerent ports for the purposes of search and seizure and censorship, the extension of contraband to cover foods and supplies to civil populations, and the taking of persons off of our ships. On April 16, 1917, not one of our contentions had been accepted by the belligerents, not one neutral right asserted by us had been granted by them as a right. At the end of the war no definite neutral rights were established and recognized by the great powers. Today not a single contention advanced by us is recognized by Great Britain, France, or Germany to any greater extent than between 1914 and 1917.

In the light of history we can now see that in addition to other factors, such as financial involvement and emotional pressure, one of the motivating forces which drove us into the last war was our futile attempt to maintain certain neutral rights.

At Chicago in 1937 we heard the first indication that the President had definitely turned his back on the neutrality policy prescribed for him by Congress, a policy which he has refused to execute in relation to the Chinese war. Mr. Roosevelt accepts the thesis of those who believe in "collective security action"—that it is impossible to stay out of war; that, in fact, if international anarchy and aggression continue, we shall be attacked. Therefore, it is said it is necessary for the peace-loving nations to take positive measures against the aggressors and check them before it is too late.

If things proceed along this line the United States will be involved in a new world war.

The lack of confidence in our ability to remain neutral, displayed by the President, is peculiarly an American obsession. We became involved in the World War because there were strong interests who wanted us drawn in, but Holland and the Scandinavian countries, infinitely more harassed than the United States, were perfectly able to remain neutral and still enjoy the respect of belligerents and of historians.

No one tries to disguise the fact that genuine neutrality will cost us a great deal. The price of peace is high and will require many sacrifices. But let no man forget that the cost of war is immeasurably higher.

We must be willing to take the losses in trade and investments which cannot be avoided, in order to escape the greater economic losses which follow in the wake of war. If our country is to remain at peace, our trade as a neutral must be at the risk of the trader. Our Army and Navy must not be used to protect this trade. We cannot keep out of war and at the same time enforce the freedom to make profits out of countries in a death struggle.

The loss of temporary profits due to our remaining neutral during a foreign war, no matter how great, will be less than the loss of the economic stability of our entire country which follows as the aftermath of war.

In addition to monetary sacrifice necessitated by the maintenance of neutrality, Americans must be willing to forego the personal desire of seeing justice triumph all over the world. We will doubtless be ridiculed and stamped as cowardly, told that we should be ashamed of our selfish policy. Our sympathies will be appealed to by strong emotional tales of oppression. But we must stand firm, we must let no pressure of propaganda swerve us to one side or the other. Are we not willing to give up a measure of our pride in order that we may save our tears, our lives, and our blood?

Many will say that we are selfishly preserving ourselves while others are fighting for civilization. But actions are judged, in any realistic view, not by the emotions behind them, but by their results. You cannot end war by waging war, defeat totalitarianism by defeating totalitarian nations at war. Victory for civilization is too complex an achievement to be won by drilling soldiers and dropping air bombs. Whatever contribution to civilization we can make, will be completely ruined by letting the world catastrophe spread within our borders. To keep isolated from this contagion is as difficult, heroic, and positive a contribution to the future of humanity as can well be conceived.

The cost of war is vast and prolonged. It is counted in human suffering, death, and destruction of morale as well as in industrial collapse, financial losses, and foreign debts which are never paid. If escaping these costs means sacrifice of financial profits, if it means sacrifice of pride, we must make those sacrifices willingly in order that our country may be safe from the infectious hand of war, that we may live in a land in which peace and happiness can never be challenged.

In view of the present foreign situation, the defense controversy, and the war-mindedness of some of our people, it behooves us to face realities. Unless we take steps to keep out of war, unless we stop to consider where our present policy is leading us, we may find that our predicted "rendezvous with destiny" will be a rendezvous with death.

America's first consideration must be the formulation of a definite plan to keep out of war.

In the past the American neutrality policy has drawn this country into great wars because of the irritating contacts with belligerents and their operations. From this premise it logically follows that if we reduce these contacts we reduce the chances of becoming involved in a war. We must abandon the protection of our so-called neutral rights and maintain strict isolation from contacts with warring nations. Such a program offers our only promise of peace. Nothing short of total isolation is full assurance of the success of such a plan.

Our present Neutrality Act should be made stronger, and enforcement thereof should begin automatically with the opening of hostilities, without reference to whether war is declared or not. It is quite possible that the world will never again see a formal declaration of war.

The primary object of neutrality is to stay out of war. If war can be prevented, well and good; if it breaks out between other countries, the United States should stay out. If, as a nation, we are willing to go out and fight the battles of the weak and oppressed all over the world it is better to avow that policy and prepare for it, instead of sliding into it under some other guise. Neutrality should cease to be a road to war and be a road to peace.

There is every reason to believe that the people of the United States prefer a national policy which promotes peace rather than war. A strict neutrality policy will give America that peace. [Applause.]

THE PUBLIC SALARY TAX ACT OF 1939

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 93

Resolution providing that the Senate be requested to return the bill H. R. 3790 to the House of Representatives for such further consideration as the House of Representatives may deem proper

Whereas in the Revenue Act of 1926 there was established the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, to be composed of 10 members, 5 of whom are members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, 3 from the majority party and 2 from the minority party, to be chosen by said committee; and 5 members who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, 3 from the majority party and 2 from minority party, to be chosen by such committee; and

Whereas it is the legal duty of this joint committee to investigate the operation and effects of the Federal system of internal-revenue taxes; to investigate the administration of such taxes by the Bureau of Internal Revenue or any executive department, establishment, or agency charged with their administration; to make such other investigations in respect to such system of taxes as the joint committee may deem necessary; to investigate measures and methods for the simplification of such taxes, particularly the income tax; to publish, from time to time, for public examination and analysis, proposed measures and methods for the simplification of such taxes, and to report, from time to time, to the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Ways and Means and, in its discretion, to the Senate or to the House of Representatives, or both, the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations as it might deem advisable; and

Whereas the present membership of this Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is composed of the following members: Hon. Pat Harrison, Mississippi; Hon. William H. King, Utah; Hon. Walter F. George, Georgia; Hon. Robert M. La Follette, Jr., Wisconsin; Hon. Arthur Capper, Kansas, all Members of the United States Senate; Hon. Robert L. Doughton (chairman), North Carolina; Hon. Thomas H. Cullen, New York; Hon. John W. McCormack, Massachusetts; Hon. Allen T. Treadway, Massachusetts; Hon. Frank Crowther, New York, all Members of the House of Representatives; and

Whereas Colin F. Stam is chief of staff of the said Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation and has certain technical assistants, a statistician, and attorneys of expert ability; and

Whereas President Franklin D. Roosevelt in messages to the Congress on April 25, 1938, and January 19, 1939, recommended legislation which would subject to Federal and State income-tax statutes the interest paid on future issues of Federal, State, and municipal bonds, and the salaries of Federal, State, and municipal officers and employees; and

Whereas, subsequent to the President's message of April 25, 1938, at the request of the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice undertook a study of the problems and transmitted its report to the Treasury Department on June 24, 1938; and

Whereas the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, under the direction of the Congress and with the assistance of its staff of experts, also undertook an investigation and study of these same tax proposals; and

Whereas the question of the constitutionality of the legislation proposed by the President was studied by an agency of the executive branch of the Government and by an agency of the Congress; and

Whereas the studies and conclusions of the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department were reported to the Senate Finance Committee, the special Senate Committee on Taxation of Government Securities and Salaries and the Special Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation were made available to several libraries, the press, and, in general, to all persons interested, these studies and conclusions thus having a wide circulation in the Congress and throughout the country previous to the action of the House on H. R. 3790; and

Whereas the report of the Department of Justice was placed before each member of the Ways and Means Committee when H. R. 3790 was being considered, and a synopsis thereof made available to all Members of Congress; and

Whereas a representative of the Department of Justice discussed the constitutionality of H. R. 3790 before the Ways and Means Committee and submitted himself to cross-examination; and

Whereas, although he admitted that he was not free from doubt as to the constitutionality of H. R. 3790, he nevertheless urged the enactment of this legislation; and

Whereas the staff of experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation had made an exhaustive study and report, which was "printed for the examination and use of the members of the committee," meaning the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; and

Whereas there appears on the title page of this report this language: "Note.—This report has been ordered printed for purposes of information and discussion, but it has not yet been considered or approved by the committee or any member thereof"; and

Whereas Government Printing Office officials have stated that this report was printed and delivered to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation on January 15, 1939; and

Whereas the members of the Ways and Means Committee, at least the minority members thereof, and other Members of the House of Representatives, were denied access to this report and had no knowledge of it, and were thus deprived of the benefit of the investigations and conclusions of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, while the Ways and Means Committee was considering H. R. 3790; and

Whereas the first intimation the Members of the House had of the existence of this report was through an item concerning it published in a Washington newspaper on February 10, 1939, the day after H. R. 3790 was passed; the newspaper article referred to this report as having been mentioned in a Senate hearing on the very day the House of Representatives debated and passed H. R. 3790; and

Whereas this report to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation states on page 47 thereof: "It appears that the only way all of the salaries of State and political subdivision officers and employees could be reached by the Federal Government, and all the salaries of Federal officers and employees could be reached by the State governments, is by a constitutional amendment"; and

Whereas this conclusion by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation undoubtedly would have had great influence and bearing upon the final action of the House of Representatives concerning H. R. 3790; and

Whereas the members of the Ways and Means Committee and of the House of Representatives were thus deprived of the studies and conclusions of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, although their report had been printed and delivered 25 days previous to the consideration of H. R. 3790 by the House of Representatives; and

Whereas copies of this printed report have not yet been made generally available to the Members of the House of Representatives, although they have been printed since January 15, 1939; and

Whereas the House of Representatives has been given no reason why the printed copies of this report were ignored, neglected, or sequestered until H. R. 3790 had been passed by the House of Representatives; and

Whereas no explanation has been offered why the Ways and Means Committee was denied the benefit of these investigations and conclusions of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, although the Ways and Means Committee did not begin its hearings on H. R. 3790 until January 26, 1939, 11 days after the report had been printed and delivered to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and although the report of the investigations, conclusions, and opinions of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice, representing the executive branch of the Government, were, during this time, brought to the attention of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, the House of Representatives, and the press; and

Whereas the Members of the House of Representatives who voted on H. R. 3790 were thus denied the benefit of the research and conclusions of the staff of its own agency, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; and

Whereas knowledge of this report of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation might have affected the votes of some Members of the House of Representatives, and might have altered the action of the House by which the bill was passed; and

Whereas the ignoring, neglecting, or sequestering of this report impaired the ability of the Members of the House of Representatives to fulfill their oaths of office to uphold and defend the Constitution by due exercise of study and judgment of legislation which they might believe to be in violation of the Constitution; and

Whereas such action in ignoring, neglecting, or sequestering pertinent and important information bearing upon the constitutionality of legislation did adversely affect the safety, dignity, and integrity of proceedings of the House of Representatives, and of the Members thereof; and

Whereas such ignoring, neglect, or sequestration of this report to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has had the effect of concealment to deceive, mislead, and cause the Members to vote, with a lack of adequate and available information upon an important tax measure of questionable constitutionality; and

Whereas such ignoring, neglect, or sequestration of a report to a standing committee of this Congress, pertinent to pending legislation, if deliberate, is utterly indefensible and in violation of constitutional procedure in the Congress; and

Whereas the belated knowledge of this report to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has placed many Members of the House of Representatives in an embarrassing and humiliating position; and

Whereas Hon. DANIEL A. REED, of New York, a minority member of the Ways and Means Committee, and other Members of the House, raised the question of the constitutionality of the legislation during the debates on H. R. 3790, calling attention to the fact that a fundamental constitutional question affecting the sovereignty and independence of the several States of the Union was involved; these Members contending that the objectives sought by the legislation could be achieved only by a constitutional amendment; this contention would have been fully supported and confirmed by the aforementioned report had it not been concealed from the Members of the House; and

Whereas the ignoring, neglecting, or concealing of the aforementioned report constitutes a denial to the Members of the House of Representatives of their official rights and privileges; and

Whereas the said H. R. 3790, having been passed by the House, has been sent to the Senate for its consideration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate be, and is hereby, requested through the proper channels to return H. R. 3790 to the House of Representatives for such further consideration as it may deem proper.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not privileged. I think it is clear that there is no irregularity, either in the preamble or in any part of this resolution, that would vitiate the action of the House. I think, therefore, it is not a privileged resolution, and I make the point of order it is not a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] makes the point of order that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is not a privileged resolution.

Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly. There has been set forth in the resolution a clear case of impropriety on the part of someone. I have been very careful not to charge that this was done with deliberation. I should like to think it was by inadvertence or oversight; but, nevertheless, the fact remains there was available in a standing committee of this House a report which had a direct bearing upon important legislation involving a constitutional question which was not made known to Members. Although I am cognizant of the fact that the mere request by a Member without any substantiating evidence is not sufficient for the House to request the return of a bill from the Senate, the fact that there is an allegation of impropriety which might be shown in the debate to actually exist is sufficient ground to justify the House in requesting the return of this legislation.

The legislation was passed in the House by inadvertence because the Members of the House were denied information which otherwise would have been available to them had not this report been concealed from the Members of the House. There is a grave question of the integrity of this House involved as well as the dignity of the Members. The only way this can be corrected in a legislative manner is to have the bill returned from the Senate to the House for such further consideration as the House may see fit to give to it. I may say if the bill is returned to the House, it is my purpose to ask that the motion by which the motion to recommit the bill was laid on the table be taken from the table and the bill reconsidered in the light of this report which was sequestered and concealed from the Members at the time the bill was passed.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this involves at least a moral duty to the people of this Nation who should have some assurance that this House is doing its constitutional duty with respect to important legislation. If there is no precedent for this action on the part of the House, I think the House today should establish the precedent that where there is made a prima facie case of impropriety in connection with bills passed by this House, we should as a matter of course request the Senate to return such bills here for the correction of any errors that might have been involved in the action taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan offers a resolution providing that the Senate be requested to return the bill H. R. 3790 to the House of Representatives for such further consideration as the House of Representatives may deem proper.

A reading of the subsequent allegations contained in the preamble seems to support the idea that the gravamen of the objection made by the gentleman from Michigan is that in the course of the performance of its duty the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation failed to offer to or concealed from certain Members of the House Committee on Ways and Means the study compiled by its staff with reference to the constitutionality of the statute seeking to tax the salaries of State officials. The gentleman from Michigan in his argument rather tacitly admitted he had grave doubts as to whether or not under the usual rules and precedents of the House the facts stated justified the submission of the resolution as involving privileges of the House.

The Chair is very clearly of the opinion that one or two precedents, which are found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, sections 3477 and 3478, lay down sufficient guidance for the Chair in determining this question.

On August 6, 1856, an order directing the Clerk to request the Senate to return the Mississippi land bill in order that an error in engrossment might be corrected, was offered by unanimous consent, and does not seem to have been contemplated in the light of a privileged proposition.

In the other precedent, Mr. Speaker Crisp, in interpreting the question of whether or not matter of this sort constituted a privileged proposition, said:

If the gentleman from Indiana would modify his resolution so as to allege that this bill was reported unfavorably from the Committee of the Whole, and was considered by the House under the idea that it had been favorably reported, the Chair thinks the resolution would be privileged. But a simple resolution to recall a bill can hardly be considered privileged, because in that case such a resolution might be presented with regard to any bill that is passed. To make the resolution privileged, it should show that the House has acted under some misunderstanding of the report of the Committee—

The Chair interpolates there that he assumes that was a report of a Committee of the Whole—or something of that kind.

The fact suggested that all Members of the House were deprived of the benefits of the legal opinion formulated by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation does not justify the Chair in assuming that, even if they had had such information, it would have changed the vote of the House. The Chair recollects that this particular problem of the constitutionality of this bill from the Committee on Ways and Means was very ably debated on the floor of the House.

Under the rules and under the precedents the Chair has suggested, although the Chair realizes there are cases in which it might be proper to offer a resolution to recall a bill for some clerical misprision or for some patent misstatement of the Record, the Chair is of the opinion that this matter does not present a privileged resolution and, therefore, sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege of the House and offer a resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I may say in fairness to the Speaker and the House that the substance—

Mr. RANKIN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let us hear what this resolution is before we have any statement about it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then in order to get to the point I was trying to make, to save time, I ask unanimous consent that all of the resolution with the exception of the resolving clause be considered as read, it being identical with the resolution recently submitted asking that the bill be returned.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report primarily the resolution itself.

Will the Clerk, for the information of the Chair, read the resolving clause of the resolution?

The Clerk read as follows:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the acts and omissions herein charged constitute a question of privilege affecting the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of this House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is submitting a point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I submit the point of order the gentleman is making is not in order until some disposition is made of the reading of the resolution. I was about to clarify the matter by asking unanimous consent that all of the resolution, with the exception of the resolving clause, be considered as read and printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. RANKIN. I object to that, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe this material, if it is not relevant, ought to go in the Record.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is going to lose time by objecting.

Mr. RANKIN. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 94

Resolved, That the acts and omissions herein charged constitute a question of privilege affecting the safety, dignity, and the integrity of the proceedings of this House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the resolution is not privileged.

Mr. RAYBURN. For the same reason, stated formerly.

The SPEAKER. For the reasons as stated in the point of order against the original resolution.

Does the gentleman from Michigan care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Briefly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, this presents a different question. This is a question affecting the privilege of the House. This is a question not involving a request to the Senate to return the bill to the House for consideration, but has to do primarily with the safety, the dignity of the Members of the House and the integrity of the proceedings of the House. If this resolution comes within any one of these classifications, if it makes out a prima facie case that the safety of this House, the dignity of this House, or the integrity of the proceedings of this House, has in any alleged manner been violated, then the resolution is in order.

In substantiation of the fact that this important committee report would have had a direct bearing on the result of the action taken by the House on legislation and that the denial of this report to the Members of the House prepared by the experts on the staff of one of its own committees has been a denial of rights and privileges attendant upon membership in this House, I want to read the last sentence of the report of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. That report, as alleged in the resolution was printed on January 15, 1939, and has not even yet been made available to members of this House. That report discusses in 47 pages all of the outstanding court decisions. It comments upon the report submitted to this House by the Department of Justice at the request of the Treasury Department and taking issue with opinion of the Justice Department, the experts say as follows:

It appears that the only way all of the salaries of State and political subdivision officers and employees could be reached by the Federal Government and all the salaries of Federal officers and employees could be reached by the State governments is by a constitutional amendment.

Now, we have charged in this resolution, as a basis for determining this to be a matter of privilege of the House, first, that this report was sequestered, that it was concealed from the Members, and, although it was printed, you understand, on January 15, 1939, it has not even yet been made available for general distribution to Members of the House or to all the members of the Ways and Means Committee. It exists, however. I have a copy of it, and it is the product and the work of a standing committee of this House. We further say that the ignoring, the neglecting, or sequestering of this report impaired the ability of the Members of the House of Representatives to fulfill their oaths of office and uphold and defend the Constitution by due means and study the legislation which they might believe to be in violation of the Constitution.

If there were reports or information in a congressional committee set up for this purpose which were withheld from the Congress, then that is a matter affecting at least the efficiency of this Congress and the integrity of this Congress.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know that I may yield while discussing a point of order, but if I can I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I was just going to say that these experts of the Joint Committee on Taxation were investigating the precise point involved, the constitutionality of this act, and they made a definite report on that, all based upon the recommendation in the President's message.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand it, the joint committee which we set up and the experts who were working on this in the Department of Justice were coexistent and were covering exactly the same questions.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will be very pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not also true that the self-constituted committee from the Attorney General's office and also the Treasury, were permitted to present a large and voluminous report to the Ways and Means Committee setting forth their side of the contention, when it was well known by some at least that this report of a committee lawfully set up by this Congress was not permitted to be introduced before the Ways and Means Committee or before the Congress?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is one of the pertinent reasons, I think for contending there has been a violation of the integrity of the Congress.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does the gentleman contend that the Joint Committee on Taxation had approved this report made by the so-called experts?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I have definitely set out in my resolution that it has not, and that it is not the work of the committee but the work of the experts who were employed by the committee under the direction of Congress to make this study; but the charge is that somehow or other these findings of the experts who have been on the pay roll, some of them since 1926, of this joint committee, have been pigeonholed and were not available to the Members of the Congress.

This instrumentality set up as an agency of the legislative branch of the Government has been quashed. The report of the Department of Justice has been published in full and made available to the Members and has been published in synopsis form and made available to the Members through the medium of the report of the Ways and Means Committee, but there is no mention whatsoever in the report of the Ways and Means Committee or in any other document before the Members of the House of this report made by our own committee, although the Public Printer advises that the report was printed and delivered on January 15, 11 days before the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee started and 25 days before the consideration of this bill in the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer one further question? Does the gentleman know whether or not the joint committee itself ever considered this report?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, I do not; but I do know—and this would be brought out if we were given an opportunity to discuss the question of how this report happened to come to life—I do know, or we have reason to assume, because of the facts and circumstances surrounding the release of this report, that certain members of the joint committee did have it in their possession, substantiating the assertions of the Public Printer that this printed report was delivered to the joint committee or some member thereof.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Knowing the gentleman as I do, I know the gentleman would not directly or indirectly, expressly or by implication, inferentially or by innuendo, want to convey to any Member of this House or certainly to have the press convey it to the American people, if it were not so, that a report was withheld from the consideration of the Members of the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say to the gentleman right now that I have been very careful not to charge any Member of this body, or any Member of the other body, with willfully and maliciously concealing this report, but I do say that it has been withheld.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a pretty serious statement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course it is, and I realize its seriousness. That is why I am choosing my words as I go along.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman permit me to give him a little bit of evidence. I came in while the gentleman was talking and made inquiries and found out what the gentleman was talking about, that he was making rather serious charges. For the benefit of the gentleman and for the benefit of the Members of the House, it happens that I have in my pocket a letter which I found on my desk yesterday morning. It arrived in my office yesterday morning. I put it in my pocket and took it to my hotel last night to read it, but circumstances were such that I did not have time to read it last night. I again put it in my pocket to read at the earliest possible moment. The letter is dated February 10, 1939, and is addressed to me as a member of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. The bill my friend refers to was considered last week. I am glad to read this letter so that there will be no misunderstanding, and nothing more said about secrecy. There is too much innuendo about secrecy lately. The letter reads, in part, as follows:

There is transmitted herewith a report entitled "Power of Congress to tax the interest from State and local securities and the compensation of State and local employees," prepared by the staff of the committee. The report deals with the question in what are considered by the staff to be its principal aspects, namely, whether the Congress has the power directly to tax the subject interest or compensation, whether it may do so indirectly and whether the reciprocal or mutual taxation plan proposed would prove effective. As indicated on the cover of the report, it has not yet been considered or approved by the joint committee or any member thereof.

I think that evidence should certainly remove from the mind of the distinguished gentleman, and if not from the gentleman's mind then from the mind of any other gentleman, the thought that any member of the Ways and Means Committee or joint committee had knowledge of this, and that there has been any withholding of any information. The first intimation I had was yesterday, and I have stated the facts in chronological order. The letter is dated February 10 and was received yesterday in my office. I put it in my pocket the same as we all do, to take to our homes or hotels to read last night. I have not had the opportunity of reading it, but there certainly has been no withholding. With this evidence the gentleman ought to accept as conclusive that the inferences which he has made, with his lack of evidence, are absolutely incorrect.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am glad the gentleman made those observations. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he has been but recently appointed a member of this committee, I understand within the past 2 weeks, otherwise he might have received a copy of this report at an earlier date. I am convinced other members of the committee received copies previous to yesterday. If the gentleman will bear with me, and will not be humiliated by the information, I call his attention to the fact that although the gentleman was not given a copy of this report until yesterday, the press commented on the fact on February 10 in this manner:

While the House was debating the salary tax bill, members of a Senate subcommittee—which has been holding hearings on another Presidential recommendation that income from all Government securities be made taxable—were considering a confidential report from the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue.

I hope that information will not humiliate the gentleman. I hope he will not be humiliated by realizing that although he is a member of this committee, he was not given a copy of this report when the press was given a copy of the report the day after the House voted on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of opinion that although this conversation may be very illuminating, it does not bear directly upon the question that the Chair has to decide, and the Chair would be pleased if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] would conclude his argument on the point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Chair wishes me to decline to yield further, I shall be very glad not to do so.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Mississippi to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not yield to the gentleman to make a point of order while another point of order is being considered. A point of order cannot lie when another point of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter in the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. RANKIN. I make the point of order that taking as correct every statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, it does not constitute basis for rising to a question of the privileges of the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would like to be heard on that. In that respect I have not finished my perhaps rather weak argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We also allege in the resolution that this action in ignoring, neglecting, or sequestering pertinent and important information bearing upon the constitutionality of legislation did adversely affect the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives and the Members thereof. We also state in the resolution that the ignoring, neglecting, or sequestration of this report has had the effect of concealment, to deceive and mislead, and to cause the Members to vote with a lack of adequate available information on an important tax measure of questionable constitutionality.

My point in that particular is that if there was any intention, either implied or otherwise, to mislead this House, to deceive this House, to withhold valuable information which any Member of this House or any committee thereof knew to be in existence, then it is surely a matter of high privilege for this House, and should be considered on the floor hereof.

We also set forth that this concealing, neglecting, and ignoring of the report of a standing committee of the Congress, pertinent to pending legislation, if deliberate, is utterly indefensible and in violation of the constitutional procedure in the Congress; and the debates on this matter will bear out at least the conclusion which many have come to—that the withholding of this report has been deliberate and for a deliberate purpose.

We set forth that the belated knowledge of this report to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has placed many of the Members of the House of Representatives in an embarrassing and humiliating position, and any act on the part of any individual—perhaps that is not true—but any act on the part of the Members or any important group of people or the press which has the public ear, which reflects upon the dignity of this House to the humiliation of the Members of this House, is plainly a matter of high privilege of this House and should be considered as such, and especially should this be true of such reflections resulting from the acts or omissions of anyone or of an agency directly connected with this House.

We also charge that the ignoring, neglecting, or concealing of the aforementioned report constitutes a denial to the Members of the House of Representatives of their official rights and privileges, and it affects the privileges of this House in that it was denied the privilege and the right to have before it, when this legislation was considered, this all-important report of a committee which was set up by its own action to study this question and report to it in anticipation of the consideration of such legislation, such as H. R. 3790.

I submit that the allegations of this resolution present a question involving the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] raises in a new form the original question of privilege submitted for the determination of the Chair. The resolution now pending provides—

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the acts and omissions herein charged constitute a question of privileges affecting the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of this House of Representatives.

The Chair, in its former decision, announced the general principle of parliamentary law that should govern this question; but in addition to the statements there made in connection with this resolution and the admissions that have been made upon the floor, the only matter now apparent in the Record about which the gentleman from Michigan can complain is that a staff of experts employed by the joint committee made certain suggestions with reference to the legal aspects of proposed legislation. It is admitted that the committee itself never took any action upon those suggestions, and, for aught appearing in this Record, the committee might have entirely differed from the legal conclusion submitted by the staff of experts.

In addition to that, the mere fact that a committee of the House fails to make available to the membership of the House the hearings or the opinions of persons appearing before such committee does not give a Member the right to raise the question of privilege of the House, when such privilege is based solely upon that ground. As a matter of fact, a great many proceedings before committees of the House are not submitted to the House or to the Members. A great many meetings of committees are in executive session. A great mass of evidence appearing before a committee that might be valuable to Members of the House in drawing conclusions on legislation is never, as a matter of fact, presented to the House or to the membership.

For those reasons the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that the facts asserted in the preamble to this resolution do not constitute a matter affecting the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did the majority leader a little while ago say something about no one being allowed to speak?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; because of the desire to consider the national defense bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly if my friend from Massachusetts takes his position as a result of something the majority leader said, under no conditions would I embarrass my distinguished friend from Texas by submitting a request. I therefore withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEES

Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 4, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Joint Committee on Government Organization the following Members of the House to fill the existing vacancies thereon: Mr. Cox, of Georgia; Mr. SCHULTE, of Indiana; Mr. DIRKSEN, of Illinois.

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 60, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Select Committee on Government Organization, the following Members of the House to fill the existing vacancies thereon: Mr. Cox, of Georgia; Mr. SCHULTE, of Indiana; Mr. DIRKSEN, of Illinois.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE BILL

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 88.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 88

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 3791, a bill to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan desire any time on the resolution?

Mr. MAPES. I would like 3 or 4 minutes only.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising is to have carried in the RECORD the fact that the statements made by my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] about the membership of the House being misled or deceived are without foundation. Statements of this kind are rather strong statements to make. I also realize that what I might say is not of a sensational nature. If I attack you, or if I attack this House, or if I attack any committee of this House, that is news; but any Member who rises in defense, or who undertakes to present what are the true facts, does not state anything which constitutes news. I do not want, by this statement, to have anyone draw the inference that I think my distinguished friend from Michigan was seeking news. I admire him and I respect him, but, being a member of the joint committee and listening to his statements in support of his resolution, I cannot, in all justice to the members of the Ways and Means Committee and to this House, permit any impression to exist that any information of value to any Member of the House was withheld. I stated what I had when I recited the information I now hold in my hand.

The Ways and Means Committee never, as a committee, had this information; and if the Ways and Means Committee did, I am frank in stating that I doubt if it would have changed the action which was taken. The fact remains, however, that the Ways and Means Committee never had this document, and I submit that it is not fair to rise in the House and make statements which convey the impression to the membership of this House and to the country at large that actions are being engaged in or have been engaged in that are of a questionable nature. Such statements, Mr. Speaker, go deeper than this middle aisle which separates the Members of the Democratic and Republican Parties. Such statements, carried to the country, constitute a direct attack upon representative government.

In the heat of debate we may all of us say things that upon reflection we regret, but certainly in the heat of debate none of us would deliberately ever make a statement which would impugn in the minds of the public the integrity of this great body. When the integrity of any committee of this body is attacked or impugned without incontrovertible evidence to support it, that attempt reflects itself upon this distinguished body.

I am proud of my membership in this body. I am proud of my associations with all of my colleagues without regard to party, and I dislike, when I sit in this body, particularly when I am conversant with the situation, to see an honest but completely incorrect impression conveyed to my colleagues, and—of more far-reaching importance—conveyed to the people at large, that a great committee of this House had deliberately withheld certain evidence.

I hope that I have satisfied the minds of the membership of this House. I hope that the press—not because I am making this statement, but because the integrity of the House itself is involved—will see that both sides are presented to the American people and that the report complained of was a report never given to the Committee on Ways and Means. So far as I, a member of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, am concerned, the first time I knew of this report was yesterday. I can understand how the press might have gotten it on February 10, for a special Senate committee has been holding hearings on this subject. The attorneys general of the various States and other public officials were down here last week and appeared before that special committee, and I can very easily see where this information may have been transmitted to the members of the Senate committee—not members of the Joint Committee on Taxation but members of a special Senate committee—and I can very easily see why that should be done, because it was on February 10, according to the gentleman from Michigan, and it was the same day this report was mailed to me.

I hope that similar incidents of this kind, where the integrity of the House is attacked or impugned, will happen with more infrequency in the future. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, having been satisfied that the charges made by the gentleman from Michigan were unfounded, unjustifiable, and unwarranted, I yielded to my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts to disprove these unfair and baseless charges. I greatly deplore that the gentleman from Michigan should have been used for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution makes in order H. R. 5791, the national-defense bill recommended by the President and unanimously reported—except for minor reservations—by the Military Affairs Committee.

The rule provides for 6 hours' general debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, after which the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion the Committee shall report same to the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Consequently, the usual charge coming from the other side that no opportunity has been given for debate and that it is a gag rule surely cannot be made against this rule.

I do not desire to take up the time of this House by reviewing the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky will go into that thoroughly. All I want to mention is that it provides for 3,032 additional planes, the elimination of obsolete equipment, and for raising our number of first-line planes to 5,500 within 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, I have always stood as an opponent of militarism and against appropriations for maintaining an unnecessarily huge military force.

I am urging the adoption of this resolution because, while our traditional policy has been and is to foster friendly relations with all nations and to threaten no nation, we must forever guard against power-maddened aggressors.

In pointing out the need for national defense, the President stated, in his message of January 12, that this—

Does not remotely indicate that the Congress or the President have any thought of taking part in another war on European soil, but it does show that in 1917 we were not ready to conduct large-scale land or air operations. Relatively we are not much more ready to do so today than we were then—and we cannot guarantee a long period free from attack in which we could prepare.

Secretary Hull, a peace-loving man, after a sane consideration of conditions, declares, "The specter of a new major armed conflict haunts the world."

This House does not need to be reminded that a future war will come without warning. A formal declaration of war, if made at all, will reach us no sooner than the drone of enemy planes. There will be no time then to forge our defenses. Now is the time to prepare. President Roosevelt points out that "there is a new range and speed to offense."

Increasingly that range and speed grows greater, and we must face all eventualities. Oceans now spanned by airplanes bring Europe closer to us each day. We cannot afford to be unprotected, nor placed in a position where we must yield to foreign terror.

I believe, and have always believed, that differences between nations should be settled by peaceful methods, but, as Secretary Hull emphasized, it takes two to reach an agreement.

With totalitarian nations hungry for conquest—with dictators whose power over their people can only be maintained by agitation and aggression to take the minds of the people off of the economic ruin into which they have been plunged, with these nations unwilling to employ peaceful mediation—there is no alternative but that we face them secure in a strong defense.

We must guard against the dangerous propaganda that streams from the dictators, echoed here by those who seek to misinterpret our program of national defense and degrade it into a political issue. This is no time for petty issues.

Let us place national safety above party politics and work in harmony. We arm not for conquest but to defend more than our lives. We arm to protect all that we hold sacred—religious freedom, the rights of the individual, everything that we know as free government. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, everyone, as far as I know, favors this resolution. I shall take only a moment to call attention to the novel title of the bill which the resolution seeks to make in order. As far as my recollection goes, confirmed by some investigation, this is the first time that the title of a bill has referred to any recommendation of the Chief Executive. The title of the bill is as follows:

"A bill to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress."

I find no reference to the recommendations of the President or to his message of January 12, 1939, in the body of the bill. It seems to me that it is entirely out of place to refer to it in the title. To do so is out of harmony with the dignity of a coordinate branch of the Government. If the legislation is good the Congress is entitled to take the credit for it. If it is bad, it should and must assume the responsibility for it.

Judging from the expressions on the faces of the chairman and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs, I assume at the proper time a request will be made to amend the title.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the President of the United States has the right to recommend to this Congress and this Congress has the right, if it sees fit, to follow the recommendations of the President?

Mr. MAPES. Oh, yes; it is the duty of the President to recommend legislation, but the responsibility for the passage of legislation rests upon the Congress, and I do not like to see a coordinate branch of the Government, like the Congress, hide behind the skirts of the President in the passage of legislation. This is the first time in my experience that any such thing as this has ever been attempted. If this reference to the message of the President remains in the title, what will be its effect, if any? If anyone wants to find out what the law is, will he have to refer to the message of the President as well as to the act itself to ascertain? What bearing has the reference in the title to the message of the President? Is it going to affect any court or administrative officer in the interpretation of the law? At best it is only surplusage; it has no place in the title or in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to state that I expect to support the pending bill. The probabilities are I will not be here tomorrow when the vote is taken, for the reason that I may be required to be absent on important official business. For this reason I take this time to state my position.

I have always been in favor of adequate national defense, and I am in favor of the general principles contained in this bill, and I should vote for it if I were present. When the House comes to the consideration of this bill, amendments will no doubt be offered to provide for the number of airplanes to be constructed in given periods of time. Great care should be taken with reference to providing for the construction of airplanes and all other instrumentalities of national defense. We must recognize the fact that obsolescence is a law of nature and the law of nature moves very rapidly sometimes and always moves with great certainty. In all these intricate and modern equipments great care should be exercised against changes and improvements. For this reason, if an amendment shall be offered that would stagger production of airplanes so as to produce them on a schedule I should support it. I am in favor of defending my country and providing adequately to be in position to do it. Still I am opposed to mixing in foreign entanglements. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] desire to use any more time?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, we have no more requests for time on this side.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMISSION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

FEBRUARY 14, 1939.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,

Speaker, House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby respectfully submit my resignation as a member of the General Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE P. WOLCOTT.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

GEN. ANTHONY WAYNE MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 64, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Gen. Anthony Wayne Memorial Commission the following Members of the House to fill the existing vacancies thereon: Messrs. CROWE, of Indiana; HARTER, of Ohio; and CLEVINGER, of Ohio.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3791, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the lamp of life flickered and went out, and the notable Pope Pius XI passed away. His immortal spirit crossed the dark corridor into the land from which no traveler returns. As he went, with his last utterance he left with us this most remarkable message: "We have much to do. Peace to the world."

Today, in that spirit, I bring to the House of Representatives this measure, which is a peace measure, not a war measure. [Applause.]

Something has been said here about the unusual features of this proposed legislation. There is nothing unusual about it except that it is both a defense measure and a recovery measure.

In presenting the bill to the House of Representatives, I, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, feel it incumbent upon me and my duty to say that the bill is the result of many weeks of extended hearings and very careful study by all the members of the committee. Also I am very happy to accord to the minority members of our committee due credit for the part they have played in the preparation of this measure. They have been considerate at all times of the chairman and the other members of the committee. They have not in any sense attempted to obstruct but, on the contrary, have been patriotic, courageous, and impartial, just as have we of the majority. With this feeling toward the entire committee, I wish to say we are here to render the very best possible service to our country. We have no axes to grind, no criticism to make, and no charges to prefer against anyone. Nor is there now or has there been at any time any intimation whatsoever of partisanship or political rancor.

In presenting this measure I wish to say to the Members of the House that in an effort to see that everyone who will be called upon to vote upon the measure has an opportunity to study the hearings and inform himself, I directed the clerk of the committee to place in the seat of each Member of the House for distribution yesterday morning copies of the hearings, and they are available now on the floor of the House. In the report we have attempted to give a brief analysis of each of the sections of the measure for the information of the Members, so that by a mere reading of the report they may be able to grasp the purport, tenor, and effect of the proposed legislation.

I believe I am safe in saying there is no issue over the measure with the exception of one section, and that is section 1, relating to the number of airplanes to be provided for the Air Corps. As I understand, there is a very slight issue over that section, and only on the question of whether or not the production of these planes should be staggered over a particular number of years or with a particular number of planes for each year, or whether it shall be left to the discretion of the War Department to proceed under their regular plans.

For the purpose of explaining the first section, which, as I say, presents practically the only issue, I should like to state that this section authorizes the Secretary of War to equip and maintain the Air Corps with not to exceed 5,500 airplanes. Authorization of this number of planes is essential to carry out the program of the War Department prepared in accordance with the figures recommended by the President for the augmentation of our existing air defenses. The program provides for the procurement of approximately 3,032 planes in addition to those on hand or on order. This increase in the number of planes will raise the total in 1941 to approximately 5,500, of which number it is contemplated that about 2,100 will be held in reserve, without personnel. Of these planes in reserve, more than 1,300 will be of the combat type, and 820 will be training planes and in constant use. This leaves 1,280 planes actually in reserve. They will constitute the source of recruit for planes disabled or destroyed in combat.

The wisdom of keeping a reserve of planes under this section of the bill is perfectly apparent, although I take it this question will be the point of argument and the bone of contention in the debate. All the major powers in the world have an adequate reserve of planes for the reason that if we got into combat in the air, and if we had only the number of planes for which we had flying pilots and planes were shot down, we would perhaps have pilots without planes to operate and we would have no planes to fill the places of the planes that were lost or disabled. From the experience of all the governments of the world and of the War Department it is believed that we will always have more pilots than we have planes, because the pilot sometimes escapes catastrophe by using his parachute and can get out of the plane and come to the ground in safety, but if a plane falls, it is crashed and ruined and is unserviceable at least for the hours of the combat.

In connection with this feature of the program, which is to provide 5,500 airplanes for the Air Corps, I believe it would be well to give you some statistics with regard to the air power of the major nations of the world, so you can see the apparent necessity for this expansion. For instance, let us consider the British Empire, with a population of 448,385,000 people. In the entire Empire they have a regular army of 1,107,570 men. They have an active air force of 87,950, with 26,175 in reserve, or a total of approximately 114,000. The British Isles, with a population of 47,600,000 people, has an army of 573,000 and an air corps of 83,000, with an air reserve of 25,000, or 108,000 men.

China, with a population of 486,000,000, has an army of 2,000,000 men, with 7,500 active air officers and no reserve, a total of 7,500. This is a sufficient explanation of why the Chinese are being bombed from the air with impunity today. France, with a population of 42,757,785, has an army of 725,759 and a reserve of 5,300,000 men, making a total of 6,025,000. France is a small state, with one-third the population of our country, and not comparable in any sense with the wealth of the United States. In addition to this, France has an active air corps of 64,650 men, with 6,220 in reserve, or a total of 70,870.

Germany, with a population of 77,000,000, has an army of 3,900,000 and, according to the best figures we can get, she has 206,000 in the active air corps and 20,000 reserves, making a total of 226,000.

Italy, with 44,556,968, has an army of 7,412,168, an air corps of 103,555, with 331,428 reserves, or a total of 434,993 in the air corps.

Japan, with 72,052,800 population, has an army of 6,248,000, an air corps of 21,500, a reserve of 26,100, or a total of 47,600.

Russia has a population of 170,000,000, 18,000,000 in her army, 80,000 in her air corps, and no reserves.

As against all this the United States has today a population of 130,714,953, with an Army of 183,447, with a National Guard of 210,484, or a total of 393,931; an active Air Corps of 20,341, a reserve of 5,544, or a pitiable showing of 25,895.

I present these figures for the consideration of the membership to emphasize the necessity for this expansion of the Air Corps.

Now, in connection with the remaining sections of the bill I should like to call your attention to the report and invite you to read it, because it gives you an analysis of the bill, as we understand it and as it is understood by the War Department.

Someone has asked us, and you often hear the question propounded, why all this preparation for war; why this expansion of the armed forces of the United States? Well, it is perfectly apparent to everyone of us that we have the most priceless heritage to protect. This Nation was the result of a revolution for liberty and man's inalienable right to be free and oftentimes you will hear some one remark, "Well, what is the danger of invasion by a foreign foe?" Frankly, I would say that at this time there possibly is no particular danger, but developments throughout the world are convincing to the effect that the time is not far distant when such a thing is possible. I would answer that by saying that if we should continue to sleep and to procrastinate in the matter of putting our own house in order, we might be caught napping at some time when it was least expected. No nation in the world is going to give us a year's written notice or even a 60-day notice of their intention to attack us.

Today we know there are only two democracies left in Europe. Today we know there is a conflict on throughout the world between autocracy or dictatorship on the one hand and democracy on the other, and if ever the time should come that these two democracies should fall, then they would undoubtedly fall to the dictatorships, and if they did, then the mobilization of the navies of the world and the mobilization of the armed forces of the world, as I have detailed them to you here from only five of the great nations of the earth, would probably be able to establish, by some kind of trade agreement or treaty obligation, or some other method, air bases in the Western Hemisphere, and in order to protect ourselves against that kind of eventuality we are providing for an armed force for protective purposes only. I may say to my colleagues there is no aggression in this program and no desire upon the part of anybody connected with our Military Establishment or on your Military Affairs Committee to provide for any aggression upon any neighbor. But we are determined that with the help of God and the power of the American people no other Nation shall transgress our liberty.

May I now call attention to the fact that when we talk about defense of our country we ought to think about the things that we are to defend. First of all, we are to defend one of the few countries upon the face of the earth in which it is yet possible for men to enjoy the precious privileges of freedom of religion, freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press. This is the first great heritage that this program proposes to protect.

It then will be able also to protect life and property of our citizens, and when I refer to property associated with life and liberty, I am just one of the old-fashioned fellows who actually believes that neither life nor property would be worth much in this country unless we had liberty to enjoy it, and I am sure that neither life nor liberty would be worth very much if we did not have property or the privilege of acquiring property with which we could enjoy that.

Now, let us see where we are. It is a well-known fact that America has the longest seaboard and the most extensive coast of any country in the world. We have it on the east and on the west, and then we have our outlying possessions in the oceans. We have Panama, miles away from the homeland, and undoubtedly nobody upon the floor of the House, or nobody in any other body connected with the Congress will contend that it is not the duty of the American Government to still contend for and protect the principles embodied in the Monroe Doctrine, which means the protection of the Western Hemisphere from infiltration into our citizenship and our theories of government of foreign, militaristic notions that will ultimately destroy the liberties of the common masses of our people.

With this idea in mind, we have brought you this program that brings our Regular Army up to approximately 190,000 and our National Guard to 210,000 as the initial protective force in our Military Establishment approximating 400,000 men in all.

That is a small army as compared with the figures of the armies I have just read to you, and the armies maintained by many governments that are less capable and able to maintain them than we; but, having pursued for 150 years the policy of peace with all nations and entangling alliances with none, and having pursued that kindred policy of maintaining only a small standing army in order to avoid the expense of a large standing army, it is perfectly proper and right that we should bring you a measure providing only for the necessary and adequate defense of our own homeland and our outlying possessions.

With that idea in mind, I call attention to the fact that according to the best figures that we are able to obtain—and these are not accurate by any means, particularly as to one country—Germany today has 9,800 planes; Great Britain, 7,100 planes; Russia, 5,550; Italy, 4,000; the United States, 3,500 planes. Therefore we are in the fifth place in the list of nations that claim to have air power.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to ask the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky a question. How many people in Germany are engaged in the manufacture of aircraft at this time, and how many are engaged in that pursuit in the United States?

Mr. MAY. We do not have the figures, or at least I do not, as to the number of people Germany employs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand it is around 165,000, and about 30,000 in this country. Are those figures approximately correct?

Mr. MAY. I am not certain, but I think they are near it. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER] has those figures.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes. I believe the gentleman from Ohio can probably answer that question, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. I believe I can answer that. The best information that we have from the source of the industry itself indicates that there are 200,000 engaged in the production of aircraft in Germany, as against 27,000 in the United States.

Mr. HOUSTON. What is the potential production of aircraft in Germany, comparable to the production in the United States?

Mr. MAY. The present production of aircraft in Germany, as we understand it, is 1,200 per month, and in this country it is probably 10 or 15 per month, or perhaps 30, of the flying fortress type, and of all types and kinds around 200 per month.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. First let me proceed with this a little further. In connection with this program I call attention to the fact that not long ago there was published in the United States News what is known as the new aviation map by hours, which shows the possibility of bombing the cities of this country by foreign air fleets.

According to that map it is exactly 12¼ hours from Oslo to New York City by air; it is 13¼ hours from Berlin to New York; it is 11½ hours from London to New York; it is 12 hours from Paris to Washington; it is 14¼ hours from Rome to Washington; and it is 13¼ hours from Gibraltar to Washington; and from the Azores to Washington, 8¾ hours. So that in these changing times of speed and air flight we are not at all immune from attack, and if the unfortunate situation should ever arise that the democracies of Europe that still stand should fall, and it then is possible to mobilize the navies of the European countries at present with airplane carriers, even without an air base on the Western Hemisphere, it might be possible and it is entirely probable that they would be able to marshal an air force and airplane carriers within such distance of our shores as would enable them to inflict great damage to our great cities.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman has just called attention to the short number of hours in making a trip to the United States from some other countries. Would we not have to take into consideration the fact that these bombers, or whatever they may be, would have to make the return trip?

Mr. MAY. They would either have to return or never go back. That is what we are preparing for, to see to it that they do not go back.

Mr. REES of Kansas. So that in calculating the number of hours we must take that into consideration?

Mr. MAY. Yes. And also take into consideration the weight of their load, but if anyone ever undertakes to bomb New York City with its $65,000,000,000 of wealth, as the great financial and commercial center of the country, we do not expect to let them in long enough to drop their loads, and especially if they do come in and drop anything, we will see to it that they do not get back.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am very much interested in the statement the gentleman is making, and this thought occurs to me: What is the significance of a comparison of the air power, say, of Germany and other nations that are lying close together, like Germany and Italy and France, and the air power of the United States? It seems to me that there is really no significance in comparing those countries and their air power with our own, because those contentious countries are lying as neighbors, whereas we are at a distance of 3,000 miles removed from any of these countries that might have designs upon us. Moreover, let us assume some airplane comes across from some nation that has it in for us for some purpose. How are we going to be able to tell from the approach of that plane whether it is an enemy or friendly plane until really after the damage is done through this suicidal trip, because that is what it would amount to?

Mr. MAY. We will be able to ascertain the direction from which it comes, and we have detectors now in our Coast Guard and in the Navy and in the Army. The purpose of this bill is not merely to strengthen the Air Corps alone, but it takes care of coast defenses, provides housing for the Panama Canal, and additional personnel of about 20,000 for the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I would like to emphasize the question which the gentleman has propounded by making this statement: That under the well-recognized law of self-defense if an antagonist is located in a position of protection and he has a second base to come to and a third base, until he can get closer and closer to the person or nation he is attacking, would not the person being attacked be justified in taking action when he left the first base and before he got to the second, or at the second and before he got to the third, and thus ward off danger. In line with that idea, England, of course, is within 2 hours of the air bases of Germany. Its whole industrial, economic, and financial life is bound up in an area in the city of London, measured by the radius of a circle 25 miles in length. Its shipyards, its ship landings, its commerce, its power stations, its railroads, and every source of activity in the British Isles, might be blown off the map overnight if they were not provided with a comparable fleet to make proper defense. If that happened, then they might mobilize the fleets of England and other countries and attack us. We are certainly within our own rights to give aid, by all lawful and peaceable means, to other democracies which may become our shock absorbers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has emphasized just the reason I stated, that a comparison of the air power of Germany and England with the air power of this country is really of no consequence, because they lie so close to each other, whereas we are so far removed.

Mr. MAY. It only emphasizes the possibility of taking away from us our last line of defense; and, in all probability, a vital one.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I ask the gentleman one other question, because I am intensely interested in this matter?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would like to have the gentleman give the House the benefit of his views as to just how far this defense program is going to carry us; just what it means. In other words, how far are we going to defend ourselves?

Mr. MAY. We are going only as far as is necessary to defend the Western Hemisphere and our outlying possessions, particularly the Panama Canal Zone. That is the life line between this country and any attacking foe from any other quarter. We provide adequately for that; but no man can foresee just where the conflict, if one should come, may be.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, we have no design to go beyond taking care of the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. MAY. I have made that statement previously, and I repeat it, that this is not a program of aggression but a program of self-preservation. But, finally, let me say that the sooner we let the world understand that we not only want and will strive for "peace with honor" but that we are neither cowards nor afraid to die if need be for the preservation of the honor and dignity of our country. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, national defense is in no sense a partisan issue; but it is a large concern of national policy which touches directly the welfare, prosperity, and security of every home in the land. In this respect of the discussion, the Republican members of the Committee recognize a great responsibility to the American people to the end that we shall exert every proper influence on the side of orderly and deliberative legislative procedure.

In an extended executive session on January 20 the members of the minority surveyed the whole field of foreign relations and defense, and agreed upon three principal concerns of Republican legislative policy, as follows:

First, to invite a clear definition of the fixed foreign policy of the United States, as a measuring rod for the whole scheme of defense;

Second, to insure a sound integration of the land, naval, air and industrial segments of the defense program in the interest of maximum efficiency and economy; and

Third, to make certain that the projected rearmament program shall be directed exclusively to the defense and security of the Nation, rather than toward dangerous intervention in the international frictions and discords of other peoples.

With this in mind, the minority leader [Mr. MARTIN] appointed a committee on our side to study this important question, with my distinguished colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] as its chairman. Before going into details of this measure I now yield, out of my own time, to the gentleman from New York for such statement he may wish to make at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy extended to me by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], and I shall endeavor to restrain my loquacity to such an extent that it shall not keep the Committee of the Whole too long.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] has stated that at a meeting of the Republican Members of the House held on last Thursday an agreement was reached with respect to a statement concerning the national defense. At the risk of repetition, at least so far as many Republicans now on the floor are concerned, and solely with the purpose of bringing to Members on the Democratic side of the aisle this expression of opinion from the minority, I beg leave to consume about 6 minutes in reading that statement.

Before I do so, I think I can say that you will find no evidence of partisanship in it. Furthermore, you will find no note of belligerency contained in it. We were not concerned with parties or their fortunes, nor were we concerned with any foreign nation in its relation to ourselves at this moment.

The statement is as follows:

In the foreign policy of the United States, which has been consistent and has developed naturally with the years, there has been for over a century but one principle which has remained definite and unchanged—the principle known as the Monroe Doctrine. The famous declaration of President Monroe informed the nations of Europe that the United States would regard any attempt to extend European domination in the countries of Central and South America as an unfriendly act. It is not a treaty, nor has any foreign power ever approved it. It is, in truth, a "no trespass" sign posted around the entire area south of the Rio Grande, and as the years have passed we have made it plain that the warning is addressed to all foreign powers, no matter where situated.

While the doctrine may be of advantage to the nations of Latin America, fundamentally it is our doctrine and ours alone. We adhere to it because we are convinced that our safety is dependent upon its enforcement. It is a policy of defense.

The United States may from time to time adopt new attitudes and pursue new policies relating to other matters in this ever-changing world, but there can be no lessening of its devotion to the Monroe Doctrine because this, more than any other single aspect of policy, involves the safety of the Nation and its vital interests. Especially is this true now that, by an act of Congress we are withdrawing from the Philippines and shall not be expected to defend those islands.

Obviously, our Military Establishment must be adequate to carry out the obligation so clearly implied in the Monroe Doctrine—the obligation to prevent the extension of foreign political domination through military action in the Western Hemisphere. This may well be considered as part of the supreme obligation to defend the continental United States. We thus envision our whole defense. Without the Panama Canal we should be sadly handicapped. It is our life line and must be maintained.

For our defense in the Pacific we believe the mission of our Military Establishment is the maintenance, impregnably, of the line following roughly the one hundred and eightieth meridian, commencing at the Alaskan Islands, passing somewhat westward of Hawaii, and thence generally southeastward to include and cover the Panama Canal. With comparatively slight additions our presently authorized military strength, both Army and Navy, is equal to that particular task.

We conceive the disposition of our military forces in the Atlantic and the Pacific as having a common objective—the enforcement of our defense policy. We should look upon Oahu as an outpost not only of our Pacific coast, but of the Canal. We should look upon Guantanamo and Puerto Rico and our naval and aviation establishments along our Atlantic coast as likewise outposts of Panama. Everything should be done to extend and strengthen such outposts in the areas of defense, whether they be in the hands of the Army or the Navy.

As for Panama itself, there is great need of a substantial increase in the strength of the garrison, in order that the armament now there or shortly to be installed may be manned with at least one shift; and we must add certain equipment vital to the conduct of its defense.

If we control the sea and the air over a wide radius from the Canal it will not be easy for an enemy to reach it from the sea. Likewise, if when the need arises, we take instant measures to prevent the establishment of hostile bases in Central or South America, we shall have gone a long way toward closing the door.

With our defense system made effective far out in the Pacific and far out in the Atlantic, with hostile military infiltration promptly prevented, and with the Canal itself fortified to the utmost degree of effectiveness, we shall be secure in the Western World. Such should be our military policy; such must be our defense.

Proceeding to a discussion of certain provisions set forth in pending legislation having to do with the strengthening of our defenses, we make certain recommendations.

We believe that the item of appropriation which, if adopted, would go far toward perfecting our Panama defenses is sound.

Likewise, the item providing for the placing of educational orders by the War Department is equally sound. In fact we believe that a state of reasonable industrial preparedness while not as dramatic, is fully as important as preparedness in the purely military sense.

Again we find ourselves in agreement with proposals contained in pending legislation looking toward the addition and strengthening of naval aviation and submarine bases in the Atlantic, as well as the addition of similar bases in the vast Pacific area bounded roughly on the west by the one hundred and eightieth meridian.

We entertain serious doubts as to the necessity or wisdom of extending our line of defense as far to the westward as the Island of Guam.

Coming to a consideration of our air forces, we believe that our vital interests demand the procurement of additional planes for the Army which, when added to useful planes now on hand and to planes now in course of manufacture, shall bring the total to a maximum authorized strength of 5,500—all obsolete planes being eliminated.

We suggest, however, that instead of acquiring additional planes in substantially a single increment, it would be wise to manage our production so that our maximum authorized strength will be reached by annual increments over a period of 3 or 4 years.

By such a program the problem of training new pilots and the organization of new tactical units in the Army Air Corps would be greatly simplified, and, further, the ever present problem of obsolescence in the planes themselves could be met from year to year without impairing the fighting strength of the Air Corps, as might be the case if obsolescence of a large proportion of our planes should overtake us at recurring intervals.

By thus spreading the effort the financial strain to be reflected in the budgets of 1940 and 1941 will be lessened.

In any event, with an Army Air Corps at a maximum strength of 5,500, with additional Army personnel trained for its operation, coupled with a naval air force approximating 3,000 planes—

And I interpolate here: That is the number now authorized—we believe the air defense of our country will be adequate.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the statement agreed upon by the members of the minority on last Thursday afternoon. I am not sure that it is expected of me at this time to continue very far with this discussion of national defense. Perhaps I will be allowed to make some observations and suggestions concerning the Air Corps and the function of aviation generally in warfare.

As has been suggested by questions propounded by the gentleman from Montana, I think we should approach the solution of our problem of defense in the air in a somewhat different way than it is approached in Europe. Every great industrial center in Europe, and every great political capital in Europe is today subject potentially to mass bombing. The air force of any one of those countries can, upon a moment's notice, deliver at least one attack upon the capital or the industrial center of almost any of its neighbors. The stories which have emanated from Spain and from China having to do with the loss of civilians and the destruction of private property have, quite naturally, made a deep impression upon the inhabitants of the capitals of Europe. I think without doubt the fear of mass bombing in that section of the world has had an enormous effect in the psychology of those peoples. I do not say that mass bombing, if inflicted upon London, or Paris, or Berlin, or some other great center of population, would result in the winning of the war by the side which did the bombing. In all probability the world has yet to learn whether mass bombing is actually effective from the military standpoint to the extent now dreaded by people on the other side of the water, but that mass bombing is dreaded and dreaded most acutely by millions of people in Europe cannot be denied. This fear accounts to a considerable degree for the immense importance placed upon war in the air.

I cannot escape the conclusion that at least so far as the art has progressed to this moment and so far as it bids fair to progress within a year or two, or three or four—no one knows just how long the period—no population center of the United States need be in acute dread of mass bombing by an enemy. So I am not quite as panicky as are some people about the menace to continental United States and her centers of population from air attack, although I would not contend that a sudden raid could not be inflicted from a hastily approaching airplane carrier or a secretly established air base. So it seems to me that the mission of our Air Corps in the Army and to a considerable degree the Air Corps of the Navy is somewhat different than that expected to be performed by the air corps, respectively, of great European nations.

As this statement endeavors to set forth, the military policy of the United States is to protect the Western Hemisphere or any part of it from domination by a European or an Asiatic power. This we regard as essential to our national defense, because, if a European power of the aggressor type should secure domination over some country of this hemisphere and from that country launch an attack upon us, then the story would be very different.

We need an air corps not so much to help in the defense of the city of New York or the city of San Francisco, which I cannot conceive to be in dire danger, as we need it to help in the defense of our life line, which is the Panama Canal. It is highly important that we develop an air force which, supplementing the Navy far out at sea, shall prevent an enemy reaching striking distance of the Canal, and then in turn supplement that far-at-sea defense to defend the Canal itself with such effectiveness and thoroughness that even should an enemy break through for a moment it could be repelled.

From the military standpoint that is the suggestion which comes to the House from the minority. May I say a word with respect to our disagreement in the matter of the production of airplanes? As the chairman of the committee has stated, it is the intention of the War Department, should this measure pass in its present form, to embark immediately upon the manufacture of 3,000 new planes. I think testimony before the committee was to the effect that should this legislation pass, the Department would place orders with the industry based almost entirely on present last-approved design—perhaps the phrase "frozen design" was used in the hearing.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman understands, does he not, that the testimony before the committee discloses that the plan of the War Department will not even complete the implemented planes before 1941, and perhaps not then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do; that is perfectly true. Nevertheless, let me say that if the War Department starts immediately to design the plane and place the orders, while it may be that the last of those planes will not actually be delivered for use to the Army until 1941, nevertheless, the planes will be of date 1939, and that is what I dread, that we place all our production in a single increment; 1940, 1941, and 1942 will come along and each year mark a tremendous change, a tremendous improvement in power, speed, and effectiveness of planes. Not a year goes by without producing enormous improvements, and we propose to you in all good faith that we do not put all our eggs in the 1939 basket.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I challenge the gentleman's statement that there was testimony before the committee that the Department plans to place all of these planes under order. The gentleman, of course, recognizes that no such thing could be done until this House had later authorized funds for such orders.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true, but in itself will not change the construction program. It will merely postpone it until the Committee on Appropriations gives them the money.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The gentleman realizes that the existing authorization is over twice the number of planes now on hand or on order. The existing authorization covers over 4,000 planes, and we have less than 2,000 now on hand under that authorization which has been in existence for some years. This limitation would operate for this year at least, and probably for next year, to actually cut down the existing authorization.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not understand that amendments will be offered to that effect.

Mr. Chairman, I have already consumed nearly all of the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], and I prefer to turn back to him the balance of his time and apologize to him for consuming so much of it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes in addition to what I now have remaining.

Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to complete my statement without interruption, and I will leave sufficient time for questions to be asked either the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], or myself at the conclusion of the statement.

Proceeding to the provisions of the bill now before us with an amendment to section 1, which I will outline—the minority believe this to be a reasonable and sound program having to do with the proper defense of what we look upon as the continental United States, referring to the general area Alaska, Hawaii, the west coast, Panama, the Caribbean, and our eastern seaboard. Appropriations under these authorizations would have only to do with the Regular Army, including the Air Corps, with some additions, and the National Guard; in other words, what is termed by the military as our initial protective force of approximately 400,000 men, Regular Army and National Guard.

With your permission, I will give you a summary of the major units of the Regular Army and National Guard in the continental United States, and in our foreign possessions. Practically all Regular Army units in the United States are far below peace strength and many of their components are inactive. In general, units on foreign service are maintained at peace strength.

Regular Army, continental United States: 28 regiments Infantry, 9 tank units, 12 regiments Cavalry (horse), 2 regiments Cavalry (mechanized), 24 regiments Field Artillery, 13 regiments Coast Artillery (harbor defense), 5 regiments Coast Artillery (antiaircraft), 99 squadrons Air Corps (41 combat and 58 base, headquarters, and miscellaneous).

The greater portion of the Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery regiments are organized into nine Infantry and three Cavalry divisions. They are, however, lacking in many important units, with the result that no one division is complete.

Panama Canal Department: 2 regiments Infantry, 1 battalion Field Artillery, 2 regiments Coast Artillery, 11 squadrons Air Corps (6 combat and 5 base and headquarters).

Hawaiian Department: 4 regiments Infantry, 1 tank company, 3 regiments Field Artillery, 4 regiments Coast Artillery (harbor defense), 1 regiment Coast Artillery (antiaircraft), 13 squadrons Air Corps (8 combat and 5 base and headquarters), 1 division which includes the Infantry and Artillery units shown above.

Puerto Rico: 1 regiment Infantry.

Alaska: 1 battalion Infantry.

Philippine Department: 1 regiment Infantry, 2 regiments Coast Artillery, 5 squadrons Air Corps (3 combat and 2 base and headquarters), 1 division Philippine Scouts which includes 2 regiments Infantry (Philippine Scouts), 1 regiment Field Artillery (Philippine Scouts), 1 regiment Cavalry (Philippine Scouts), 2 regiments Coast Artillery (Philippine Scouts).

This comprises the present Regular Army of approximately 165,000 men and at the end of the fiscal year 1939, 12,760 officers.

National Guard, continental United States: 83 regiments Infantry, 18 tank companies, 19 regiments Cavalry, 62 regiments Field Artillery, 14 regiments Coast Artillery (harbor defense), 10 regiments Coast Artillery (antiaircraft), 19 squadrons Air Corps (observation).

The greater portion of the Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery regiments are organized into 18 Infantry divisions and 4 Cavalry divisions. The Cavalry divisions are far from complete.

Hawaiian Department: 2 regiments Infantry.

Puerto Rico: 2 regiments Infantry.

Coming now to the very important question of airplanes for the Air Corps, I think I may safely say that none of the minority members of our committee are panicky or apprehensive as to the possibility of attack by bombings of important localizations on our western or eastern seaboard.

To be sure, we were privileged in committee to hear the expert testimony of our Ambassadors to Great Britain and France and of the high ranking officers of the War Department and the Air Corps. We were not, however, permitted to receive any information from our Ambassador to Germany, who is in this country, nor was our request to hear the testimony of the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Johnson, granted.

I refer to the latter particularly because through the press and otherwise he is reputed to be the public exponent of the President's original proposal for rearmaments, insofar as planes are concerned. This was looked upon up to as high as 10,000, 15,000, or even 20,000 additional planes. Moreover, there have been and still are current rumors that within this plan was a proposal to take over all aviation manufacturing plants; furthermore, that some of them be relocated or that additional plants be built in other sections of the country. Suffice it to say that we have never been able to obtain an accurate report of the original urging. I believe it may be truthfully stated, however, that in connection with this entire program we find the War Department manned by professional soldiers asking for less than the Executive head of the Government, a civilian. In other words, the figure for airplanes, many of which are to be in reserve, probably represents some compromise.

Referring to the specific provisions of this bill: Therefore, in committee we supported an amendment, which was adopted, reducing the authorization from 6,000 to 5,500 planes as this provision of the bill now reads. Transmitted into appropriations this reduction means a saving of over $31,000,000.

We are not, however, in agreement with that provision of section I having to do with the authorization permitting the immediate purchase of all the airplanes. Therefore, we submitted in committee the following amendment on page 2, line 3, after the word "therefor," to insert the following:

Providing that other than airplanes now on order, or to be on order under the provisions of the War Department appropriation for the fiscal year 1939-40, not more than 1,000 airplanes may be contracted for during any one fiscal year, except in the event of the declaration of a national emergency.

This amendment, which I will offer on the floor tomorrow, was defeated in committee by a vote of 14 to 11.

Pertinent to a consideration of this amendment, we call to your attention the following figures covering the situation having to do with airplanes for the Air Corps—these based upon testimony of Brig. Gen. W. G. Kilner, Assistant Chief of the Air Corps and from other sources:

Number of airplanes
Authorization for airplanes prior to June 24, 1936.....	1,800
Public, No. 785 (74th Cong.), approved June 24, 1936, increase in authorization.....	2,320
Total authorization present time.....	4,120
With the passage of H. R. 3791, authorized.....	5,500
Airplanes on hand Dec. 31, 1938.....	1,797
To be rendered obsolete or unserviceable by the Secretary of War.....	351
Total net.....	1,446
On contract Dec. 31, 1938.....	558
To be on contract current War Department appropriation bill 1939-40.....	464
Total on hand, on order, or to be ordered.....	2,468
Balance to be ordered under authorization, this bill.....	3,032

The amendment outlined above would in effect limit the number of this balance of airplanes to be ordered, 3,032, to not more than 1,000 in each fiscal year and would, it is carefully estimated, stretch the contracts, labor load, production, and acquisition program for this number of airplanes over 3 years instead of ordering them all immediately. This limitation would have nothing to do with those airplanes now on order, or those to be on order in the coming regular War Department bill and those which from time to time may be rendered obsolete. Even with the adoption of this amendment the War Department would be able to secure an appropriation for and order 2,022 planes this year, with orders in each of the subsequent 2 years for 1,000 more.

We quote herein from the testimony of General Craig:

The number to be procured is 3,032. Of the final total of 5,500 planes that will be on hand in 1941, under present provisions of the bill, 2,163 are to be in reserve. One thousand three hundred and thirty-five of these reserve planes will be combat, and I must call attention to the fact that for these particular planes there will be no trained personnel.

We stress the importance of our suggested amendment because of the ever-present problem of obsolescence. Its adoption would increase opportunity to take advantage of research and experimentation within the Air Corps and otherwise. Unless the amendment is adopted it is the testimony of the Air Corps that the entire 3,032 additional airplanes would be ordered this year under frozen specifications.

It has been frankly admitted by officials in authority before the committee that one of the reasons for the program is to stimulate activity within the general airplane industry. Moreover, it has been indicated that the general attitude of the Air Corps and industry as well is to take as much as they can get now in the thought that within another year or two it might not be possible to secure the necessary appropriation for another thousand planes.

In connection with the desire to stimulate our aviation industry, may we point to the large current increases being made in their purchases in this country by France and Great Britain. Moreover, a report to the Congress by the Secretary of State for the Bureau of Munitions Control confirms the fact that at the present time the American aviation industry to the extent of approximately 40 or 50 companies have foreign contracts for planes, motors, or parts with upward of 50 foreign governments. In addition to France and Great Britain, among these may be listed: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Finland, and many others. Even Germany and Italy have been on our lists for some parts. Also, the Navy Department is placing orders.

We feel sure that most of the industries involved would favor an insured 3-year program of activity with resulting steadier employment of labor rather than what would ensue under the present provisions of the bill. Obviously the suggested amendment would make for less strain on the annual budgets, a very important consideration, each 1,000 planes representing an expense of $56,000,000. In addition it would be of tactical advantage in what will have to be a rapid training of personnel. May we also call attention to the fact that in the great scientific field specific new metals and alloys thereof are being developed in both this country and in Europe, which is bound to result in great improvement and even redesign of airplanes. At the present time advantage of such developments is being taken by several foreign governments.

It is essential that our Government keep itself in position to take full advantages of scientific research from year to year rather than commit itself to the production now under frozen specifications of the balance of the 3,032 planes in this authorization and I commend the proposed amendment for you favorable action tomorrow.

In conclusion, the Republican Party is committed to the proposition that the American people are determined to direct their energies, not toward war but toward peace.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is there any provision in the bill which will protect the mechanical secrets of our War Department from people who come here from foreign governments trying to learn these secrets?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think that is covered by the provisions of the National Defense Act, under the authority of the War Department. There is nothing specific to that effect in this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman believe it might be advisable to offer an amendment to further safeguard the mechanical secrets of these airplanes?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think it would be unnecessary.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In connection with a statement in the report of the Special Committee on National Defense, of which the gentleman from New York is a member, since he is the ranking minority member on the Military Affairs Committee, may I ask him with respect to this particular statement in that report? It is stated:

We entertain serious doubts as to the necessity or wisdom of extending our line of defense as far west as the island of Guam.

Is there anything in this bill having to do with the fortification of Guam in any respect?

Mr. ANDREWS. There is nothing in this bill that would have to do with that question, which is one entirely for the Committee on Naval Affairs at the present time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman tell the Committee what it will cost to service these 5,000 planes on the ground and in the air? Can the gentleman give us an estimate of what that might cost annually?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am unable to give the gentleman an accurate statement on that.

Mr. CULKIN. I have seen the figures stated as $1,400,000,000. Does the gentleman know whether that is correct or not?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not. We have been unable to get a definite statement with reference to what the increased cost of maintenance for this program will be.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. General Arnold testified before the War Department Subcommittee on Appropriations on my questioning that it will cost $230,000,000 a year to operate, maintain, and replace an air force of 5,500 airplanes, 2,200 in reserve and 3,300 in service; that it costs $50,000 a year to keep each airplane in the air, not including replacement cost.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In connection with the cost of maintenance of aircraft for defense purposes, it may be well at this time in the debate to point out that the cost of maintenance for a single battleship of this Government is more than two and a half million dollars each year, so, comparatively, the cost of maintenance of aircraft is not out of line with the cost of maintenance of battleships.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain tables giving the sizes of the armies of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs for more than a month has sat nearly every day except Saturdays and Sundays in the consideration of this bill. Judging from the comparatively small number of Members on the floor, as well as the lack of controversial issues in the bill, it seems almost everyone expects to support the bill. This also seems to me to furnish very good evidence that this is a matter of patriotism rather than of politics. I believe, on the whole, this is a very fine bill or it would not be receiving such unanimous support. It is sane, conservative, and reasonable.

I am always interested in what the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has to say on any issue, and I am happy, too, that my other friend from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], who is the ranking minority member of the committee, and the other members of the minority on the committee, have come to the viewpoint of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the majority members of the committee on this national-defense program because, as far as I know, except for the staggering of the airplane program, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has but expressed the views of the majority almost from the introduction of the bill. I am glad the Republicans have at last agreed with the Democrats about something.

It may be that when the bill is taken up tomorrow for reading under the 5-minute rule amendments will be offered either to strike out or change some language or to add language, but boiled down to its essence I know of nothing controversial left in the bill except the question of whether or not we are going to have 5,500 airplanes within the next 2 years or within the next 3 years.

At present we have a total authorization of 4,120 planes. Of course, we had an authorization last year of approximately 2,300 planes. As I understand, there are now about 1,800 serviceable planes and there are on contract and not yet delivered—although they will be delivered by July 1, 1940—an additional 558 planes. This means that when the present authorization is met we will have under that authorization 4,120 planes; thus we are increasing the program by only 1,380 planes over the next 2 years in addition to what is now authorized. It seems to me comparatively unimportant whether or not you have these additional planes within the next 2 years or the next 3 years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has not the gentleman omitted from his calculation the obsolete and obsolescent planes, which would be dropped out?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This would make necessary the manufacture at some time or another of 3,000 new planes and not 1,300.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; in the course of time. At present, as I understand from the testimony before the committee, there are 351 obsolescent planes.

Let me tell you how I feel about this matter. I am not an Army man and do not profess to have unusual knowledge on the subject, but I am willing to accept the advice of experts. I was a little bit sorry to hear my other friend from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], whom I esteem highly, inject into this discussion just a little note of what appeared to me to be politics. As far as I know, the committee as a whole has been inclined to follow the recommendations of the War Department. There have been no politicians before the committee. If you will read the hearings carefully you will find the testimony on this bill comes almost exclusively from Army officers on the General Staff, and also the Chief of Staff.

I may say in passing that I believe I voice the sentiment of the House Committee on Military Affairs when I say there is no man in this country, in or out of the Army, who is held in higher regard by those who know him and whose judgment is more highly respected on military affairs than General Craig, the Chief of Staff. [Applause.] The testimony you will find in the hearings is not only by the Chief of Staff and his deputy but by the other members of the General Staff.

In this connection I am going to give you what I know are the views of the War Department itself, and the representatives of the War Department, I believe, are the ones we should follow in this important matter. They have no profession but the Army and are only interested in the necessary defense of our country.

On the question of whether or not we are going to have contracts let and these planes manufactured within the next 2 years or the next 3 years, let me say that the question of procuring 3,000 airplanes within a specified time depends upon several important factors:

(a) Initial cost; (b) the effect on the aeronautical industry; (c) the purpose of this program; and (d) maintenance.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I am sure I voice the exact sentiments of the War Department on this very important question.

The initial cost. The cost of an airplane is materially reduced if bought in large quantities. If the order is placed initially for all required of a particular type, a production program will be set up for this amount. The same number, if ordered in 3 separate years, would result in three separate and smaller production schedules. The additional cost would be 25 percent, all factors being taken into consideration.

As to the effect on the aeronautical industry, the capacity of the aeronautical industry to produce airplanes after "M" day is a major and vital factor of our war reserve. If we buy 3,000 airplanes at one time, such an order will require the aeronautical industry to adopt quantity-production methods of manufacture and should put all idle aircraft factories to work. The industry is capable of producing these airplanes within the 2-year period, which fact was testified to by all of the high officers in the War Department.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. The airplane industry is credited with being able to turn out 5,500 planes a year at the present time. Does the gentleman realize how many planes would be on order if we were to order only 2,200 planes this year, in view of the number of planes that would be on order for the Navy and that are on order by foreign governments?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not know the exact total, but I have the feeling that in view of world conditions today there is a peculiar psychology in this matter in addition to the speeding up of industry and the setting up of proper machinery for mass production of airplanes. We should follow the advice of the War Department, because I believe they know more about the matter and look at it more expertly, although no more patriotically than the rest of us. However, they certainly know what it is all about, as you will find if you attend the executive sessions of the committees dealing with military and foreign affairs. They are in a better position to know world conditions than we, and I am sure we are all agreed that our house should be put in order.

The purpose of this program as announced by the War Department is this:

The proposed 5,500 airplane program is intended to insure the establishment and equipment of an adequate air arm as soon as possible and provide for the essential war reserve. A true war reserve for the Air Corps does not consist of airplanes alone—

And I would like to impress this upon you—

In addition to reserve personnel, it requires an adequate research and development program and an industry which can produce aircraft in quantity.

Maintenance: It is planned that all combat units will be formed within the 2-year period of the program. The airplanes should be available, therefore, to maintain these units at full fighting strength. The additional cost of the reserve combat airplanes will be offset to a large degree by the lower cost of the airplanes initially and by decreased maintenance costs resulting from the rotation of the reserve airplanes through the combat units as spares.

If you listened to the statement made by the chairman of the committee about the number of airplanes that some of the European countries have, plus the testimony that has been provided before the committee that Germany is capable right now of turning out 1,200 planes per month, I say it is high time that we accept the suggestion and advice of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that we be prepared to meet this condition.

Of course, nobody wants war, and I am sure most of us hope and believe we are not going to have any war, but we are not preparing for war, we are preparing against war.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman tell us the number of planes these other warring countries have at this time?

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], I believe, has provided those figures, but if the gentleman will bear with me a moment, I have them here.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The gentleman can put them in the RECORD later.

Mr. THOMASON. I can give them hastily to the gentleman.

Germany right now has 9,800, and I believe I am quoting official figures on this. Great Britain has 7,100, Russia, 5,500; Italy, 4,000; the United States, both Army and Navy, 3,500; Japan, 3,100; France, 2,700; and I may say, too, that while the United States only has 3,500 and Germany today has 9,800, with Germany having the capacity to turn out 1,200 a month, while we are turning out about 200 a month, how do you expect the industry to get keyed up for mass production if we do not let contracts or let them know by some positive evidence that they are going to get contracts big enough to justify them tuning up for mass production?

I do not know that we are facing a crisis just at this moment, and I hope we are not going to face one, but if we expect to let the other nations of the world know, not that we are preparing for any aggression, because ours is purely a defensive program, you have got to show it by your works and you have got to authorize the building of sufficient airplanes and other munitions of war so that they may know we mean business if any one wants to come over here and attack us.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Our friends across the aisle certainly seem somewhat concerned about the matter of obsolescence. If our new planes should become obsolete, is it not equally true that the enormous quantities that the other countries have will become obsolete at the same time?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes, I think the same rule would hold in all parts of the world.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am sure the gentleman will pardon the little realm of doubt we are in, in view of the enormous number of planes some of the foreign countries have, whether any of them are manufactured under specifications which would allow them to come over here and bomb us and then go back again.

Mr. THOMASON. While I do not speak with authority on that subject, I will say that they do not have them now, in my judgment, but at the rate at which they have been increasing their speed and power, I, like the gentleman from New York, do not know what we may expect. So I think we ought to build so that we may be able to meet any emergency.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. In answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I may say that General Arnold testified before the War Department Subcommittee on Appropriations that while Army bombers went down to Brazil they traveled stripped. He also testified upon my questioning that there is not a bomber built today that can go over 800 miles, locate its target, drop its load, and return home. This is the testimony of General Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps. In face of these facts and in view of what has been said with regard to an unbalanced program, upon what ground can the gentleman justify the building of 3,000 planes within a 2-year period?

Mr. THOMASON. I know General Arnold wants these planes as soon as he can get them.

Mr. ENGEL. It is in the record. This testimony was given before the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, and it is a matter of record.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not dispute that, and I hope it is true. I hope the time never will come when they will develop planes big enough, fast enough, and powerful enough to fly across either one of the two oceans that constitute our boundaries and bomb us and return to their base. We are very fortunate in having the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans on our two sides.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman would not question the word of General Arnold?

Mr. THOMASON. Of course not. I think he is one of the finest and ablest men in the Army; but I know that he said to our committee that in his judgment this very airplane program and the building of those planes within the next 2 years is absolutely necessary for the adequate proper defense of this country. That is what I am pleading for, and I hope you go along with us. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] on the question of cost and economy, it will be regulated by the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from Michigan is a member, in the end, will it not?

Mr. THOMASON. I am sure that the gentleman from Michigan will have a lot to do with it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am with the gentleman, and of course I am for this, but I must realize that he used the proper term when he spoke of this "peculiar era of psychology" that we are in. This is not exactly practical, but it is psychology.

Mr. THOMASON. I admit to the gentleman that there is an element of the dramatic about this airplane situation and I do not think we ought to get hysterical, but in answer to the gentleman will say, I do not believe that we need any 10,000 or 15,000 planes, and when men like General Arnold and General Craig appear before the committee and say that they have made a study of world conditions and know how inadequate our Army is, I am willing to follow them, because I have not forgotten the fact that when General Pershing took our boys across the sea to engage in a world war, about the only munitions they had was some rifles, and they had to wait 17 months before he could get the American troops into action. I am one of those who do not want to see that happen again. [Applause.] The only way to do that is to provide, first, the munitions of war, as I view it. And while I am for the airplane program, yet I am one of those who believe, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] said, that airplanes have a terrifying effect upon the populace, but if airplanes bomb a city, somebody has to hold it, and, boiled down to its last analysis, that is done usually by the doughboys. I want to stress the munitions and matériel part of this program.

Mr. GIFFORD. And there is no lack of a certain idea in some quarters that we better build these planes because France and England could use them.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; I believe in selling them to France and England—all they can buy and all we can manufacture. Let them come and get them and put the money on the barrel head.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I was very much interested in that portion of the President's message of January 12, in which he recommended the appropriation of some $10,000,000 for training some 20,000 civilian air pilots in our colleges. I recognize that this bill does not cover that particular item, but I would like to know if the gentleman, who is more familiar with the program than I am, feels it would be well for Congress to follow the recommendations of the President and appropriate some $10,000,000 a year for the purpose of carrying on that student program in our colleges.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; I am for that program. I must say, however, frankly, that there is nothing of that kind in this bill, and that is a matter we must leave for later consideration, when we consider the activities of the Civil Aeronautics Authority or whatever agency may be in control of it. I agree with the War Department about that, if I may digress a moment from what I intended to say in completing my remarks about the airplane situation as I view it, and that is that you will find in this bill, if you read it carefully along with the report, how the War Department expects to obtain its personnel for the manning of these additional airplanes, and it does offer a lot of encouragement to the deserving and competent young men of the country, not through the Civil Aeronautics Authority but through accredited schools of the War Department.

I know in a general way from the press and, perhaps, from the message to which the gentleman referred, that there has been an intimation that the Civil Aeronautics Authority designates certain colleges throughout the country for the initial training of some pilots, but when it comes to this program here itself, this additional personnel is to come from the air schools already accredited or soon to be accredited by the War Department. These are schools, however, that are already equipped for the training of aviators and mechanics.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. In a moment. The new officers under this program are to come from young Reserve officers and the Army Flying School at Randolph Field. There is going to be an increase in this program, along with the planes that have been mentioned, of a little more than 2,000 officers in all branches and perhaps some 25,000 enlisted men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. Has the gentleman any evidence before his committee showing how many of these French and British planes are modern, up-to-date, effective planes?

Mr. THOMASON. No; but my information is comparatively few.

Mr. ENGEL. Has the gentleman any idea at all?

Mr. THOMASON. No. I cannot give the gentleman authentic information.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. With reference to the World War analogy which the gentleman used a few moments ago, is there any purpose, secret or otherwise, which is not being disclosed here, that this is preparation for another expeditionary force in 17 months or in any other time?

Mr. THOMASON. Absolutely not. There is not the slightest justification for any such inference. If the gentleman will read the hearings before this committee, he will find that except when a high Army officer said, "No; that might involve a military secret, and I prefer to give it in executive session," there has not been one word given in secret in the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs. I hope the gentleman will carefully read the hearings. I will add that I would not be surprised to see war in Europe in the next 17 months, and with some wild men running loose, I want this country prepared for any emergency. It would be the best life-insurance policy I know anything about.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I would like to have a little enlightenment in view of the remarks that have been made here about frozen plans for battleships or airships. Do I understand it to be the practice of the Department, if it wants to get an authorization for 100 airships in 1939 and those ships are not completed and delivered until 1941, that we have got to take an airship of the model of 1939?

Mr. THOMASON. No. I am quite sure not.

Mr. MASSINGALE. That is the impression I have received.

Mr. THOMASON. Of all the progressive industries, I think the airplane industry is the most progressive. I think it is safe to say that if they have orders as of 1939 for the building of 100 planes, as the gentleman suggests, and the planes were not even under construction in 1940 or early in 1941, and some new patent had come out and some new device that would make a better plane, I assume that upon the request of the War Department they would certainly adopt the most modern plane. We must take our chances on that, but the War Department is efficient and can be relied upon to do what is best.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Well, I would think so.

Mr. THOMASON. I think that is the common-sense view of the situation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Was there any testimony on the part of the industry as to the speed with which they could step up their production?

Mr. THOMASON. No direct testimony from anyone speaking for the industry, but the substance of General Arnold's testimony was—and that is one of the objects of authorizing the construction of these planes within the next 2 years, so that the orders would be big enough to justify them to tune up and get their plants in proper condition for mass production if that is necessary. I think the committee unanimously agreed that was a wise conclusion. General Arnold has surveyed the industrial situation and knows what he is talking about.

There are one or two other things I would like to mention. One is in connection with personnel, another the Panama Canal, and another the educational orders. The last subject, educational orders, I am going to leave to our colleague from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH], who has done more than any other one person that I know of to build up this sentiment for educational orders. I hope the people in New England and in his district appreciate the very fine and constructive work he has done in this matter of educational orders, of jigs and dies and things like that, so that we will be prepared in the event of any kind of an emergency. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has also stressed the matter of the importance of the Panama Canal, but along with the Panama Canal, which, of course, is our life line, as he calls it, and we also need a great deal more munitions, coast artillery, and especially anti-aircraft. That is all provided for in this program.

I come back for a minute to this question of personnel. I believe the committee feels deeply on the subject of giving these young Reserve officers of the country an opportunity to get into the service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. THOMASON. The present set-up is to take graduates from the United States Military Academy at West Point, and then from the enlisted men and warrant officers who can meet the requirements. In addition to young Reserve officers, under an act that happens to bear my name, we provide that honor graduates of the senior R. O. T. C. schools of the country are eligible for permanent commissions. We are all proud of West Point, but everybody cannot go to West Point. In the past about the only way a man could get a commission and get into the Regular Army was to go to West Point. I want to enlarge the opportunity for young Reserve officers and R. O. T. C. honor graduates to get permanent commissions. The Reserve officers of the country constitute in themselves a great peacetime army.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman will recall that General Gasser, who has more information with regard to the personnel than any other man in the War Department, said it was the purpose of the War Department to select the best men from all those sources.

Mr. THOMASON. Oh, yes. That seemed to be the unanimous opinion of the War Department and of the committee. General Gasser is the best authority on this subject that I know and is also one of the best officers in the Army. He has been of great help to our committee.

So I am happy to say, Mr. Chairman, that there seems to be no opposition to this bill. I do, however, hope, in view of the specific request, not only as covered by the testimony but as followed up by the War Department, that if we are going to put on this airplane program we will not quibble over whether it is 2 years or 3 years, and they want it in 2 years. Give the War Department what it says it needs and they will defend this country against all enemies. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, this bill which we have before us today is the result of careful study by the Military Affairs Committee of the House on the recommendations contained in the President's message of January 12, 1939, on national defense. As a member of that committee I am vitally interested in this piece of legislation and its passage. Our whole approach to this bill must and will be, I trust, considered entirely from the angle of providing only for an adequate national defense. I do not think that it should become necessary for any Member of this Congress to question any other Member's patriotism or loyalty to country if he to a degree has an honest difference of opinion as to how we might best arrive at gaining the objectives of this plan. Neither should anyone be condemned for calling attention to the pertinent fact that what we do now will be our guide for the next few years.

It might be interesting to the House membership to know that practically all the evidence brought before our committee was through witnesses from the War Department. In these gentlemen we must and do place our greatest confidence. However, at the very beginning it is significant that the Ambassadors to England and France were sent, and I say that advisedly, to appear before a joint session of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and House. Although this meeting was supposed to be executive, the greater part of the testimony appeared in the press the next day.

It is sufficient to state that these ambassadors painted a gloomy picture indeed of the situation which exists in France and England now. Immediately the thought struck me that here again was another case of both England and France "missing the boat" and by getting this information to us, as outlined by the Ambassadors, they would be anxiously awaiting what America's reaction might be to their own deplorable conditions. Strange, it seems to me, that our present Ambassador to Germany, Mr. Wilson, who now and at the time of the hearings was in or near Washington, was not permitted or sent to appear before our committee. Neither was anything offered to our committee from our representatives in any other foreign country as to our need for rearmament. Where was the Honorable Louis A. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, who runs all over this country talking on national defense? Why did he not come before our committee, on invitation, to give us the basis of his many arguments on why America needed this program immediately? I for one never heard a single bit of testimony before our committee, and I attended all the sessions, as to the basis or foundation of the line of reasoning which caused this bill to be brought up so speedily. My conclusions as to why we need to spend this money now are based on my knowledge of world affairs as they exist at the moment, this knowledge gained through reading of articles of all descriptions, following the day-by-day maneuverings of the East and in Europe, my conversations with the officers of the War Department, and the frank knowledge that at this very moment we are sadly lacking in supplies, matériel, and implements of war of most every description to even sufficiently man and equip our present peacetime authorized strength of 165,000 enlisted men and 12,760 commissioned officers. Among the major powers of the world our military establishment, as to numerical strength, is way down the list. But back of this I would like to know if there might possibly be some other intent or purpose, some thought that we might be preparing for more than a mere adequate defense. Are we sure that is all we are doing?

All indications at the moment force us to the conclusion that the majority of the American people feel the present request for national defense is a reasonable one and might well be undertaken, providing that the Congress use its own best judgment. The country wants all hands above the table when the defense cards are being dealt. They want the whole Congress to sit in on the game and each one take his turn dealing. The American people have a right to know what dangers are threatening our national security and to know just how far our Government is committed to foreign nations. More light should be thrown on the subject, with less heat and loose talk.

The newspapers of a day or so ago carried a picture of one of 250 of the latest type airplanes being shipped from this country to England. True, American airplane manufacturers may sell their products abroad under certain conditions, but is our own national defense in any way being jeopardized or are we in any danger of becoming involved in Europe. The recent crash in California of one of the latest type military airplanes, in which a French representative was involved, brings to mind that perhaps we do not have any military secrets worth protecting. The American people are paying the freight, and on Congress rests the duty of how and when expenditures for national defense should be made.

There can well be differences of opinion in this body on some of the methods of procedure under this bill. As one who signed the minority report, I have no desire to oppose or delay our getting under way the necessary steps to build up needed defense. I do feel, however, that we might well consider the slowing down to a certain degree the procurement of the total number of planes contemplated in this bill, to expand that program over a period of 3 or 4 years, and I am not motivated by a desire to hamstring, cripple, or delay the War Department in any manner or form. On the contrary, it is an honest and sincere wish on my part to have at hand at the conclusion of any such program as this, airplanes of the latest type and design, made possible only through further research, experimentation, and study. Airplanes can only be procured at a certain rate per annum under conditions now existing in the airplane industry. Stretching this program out over a longer period will afford the manufacturers the necessary time to equip themselves to turn out better and even better planes without the necessity of seeing specifications frozen, were all new planes ordered at once. Some day every last one of these planes will be obsolete and will have to be replaced. Are we then going to replace them all at one time in order to maintain the strength that our military experts tell us is so necessary. For my part I would like to see more of the money to be authorized under this bill set aside for additional research and development of the airplane.

I agree with the statement of Mr. Hull, Secretary of State, that—

The American people are convinced there are no international differences which cannot be settled, with far greater benefit to all concerned, by mutually fair and peaceful adjustment than by armed force.

Also I concur in what Mr. Lippmann writes:

For my own part, I do not believe that war is inevitable, and, from what I can learn, this is the view of the men here and abroad who have the best means of knowing the actual situation in the world. If the governments, with the backing of public opinion, are sufficiently cool, clear-sighted, and resolute, the peace can still be saved by diplomacy.

Notwithstanding strong talk on the part of some of the dictators, I doubt seriously if they have any intentions of casting covetous eyes in our direction, I cannot subscribe to a policy of warning totalitarian powers that we will meet any attack upon our national and international interests by a determined defense and resistance. Of course we will resist and defend; but what is the use of shouting to the housetops that we will do so? To my mind that is not diplomacy. Every country in the world capable of defending itself, will never willingly submit to the usurpation of its rights and territory by another. Let us slow up in taking sides and making loud talk with an accusing finger pointed here or there.

Due to our many advantages, chiefly our geographical location, I do not feel that it should ever become necessary for America to find herself drawn into another war. Much, of course, hinges on our attitude toward and carrying out of the ideas embodied in the Monroe Doctrine of December 1823. I have only recently read and reread that doctrine, and I wish every Member of this House would do likewise. Let me quote a little part therefrom:

Our policy in regard to Europe, which was adopted at an early stage of the wars which have so long agitated that quarter of the globe, nevertheless remains the same, which is not to interfere in the internal concerns of any of its powers; to consider the governments de facto as the legitimate government for us; to cultivate friendly relations with it, and to preserve those relations by a frank, firm, and manly policy, meeting in all instances the just claims of every power, submitting to injuries to none.

But in regard to those continents, circumstances are eminently and conspicuously different. It is impossible that the allied powers should extend their political systems to any portion of either continent without endangering our peace and happiness; nor can anyone believe that our southern brethren, if left to themselves, would adopt it of their own accord.

It is equally impossible, therefore, that we should behold such interposition in any form with indifference. If we look to the comparative strength and resources of Spain and those new governments, and their distance from each other, it must be obvious that she can never subdue them.

It is only when our rights are invaded or seriously menaced that we resent injuries or make preparations for our defense.

We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amiable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

It is still the true policy of the United States to leave the parties to themselves in the hope that other powers will pursue the same course.

In building our national defense let us keep free from all tangling alliances or secret agreements. Let us attend to our own business at home, concerning which at the present time there is plenty for us to do. Let us not be drawn into another war by an empty cry to again "help make the world safe for democracy," realizing as we do today that in the short space of 20 years we have less democracy existent in the world than at any time in the last century. Let us not forget that those who would have us ally ourselves with them divided the spoils of the last war, while America, fighting for what at that time was clearly considered a sincere and honest principle, finds today that the very countries who were our allies only gave us a debt which they now fail to recognize. Let us not forget that these years of depression, need, and want found their inception in the World War, and today we are paying the price, with the end not yet in sight. Let us face the bare truth, that we might not be able to withstand another world war; and in the end, though win it we would, we might find liberty, freedom, our economic system, and even civilization itself destroyed. We can save our democracy and liberty in America regardless of what results eventually materialize in Europe.

In conclusion, let me call your attention to the following facts: When we entered the World War we had a national debt of approximately $1,000,000,000. Today we have a $40,000,000,000 debt. The last World War in money cost the United States over $40,000,000,000. Add the cost of another and more expensive war to our present financial set-up, and we find we might easily be in debt to the tune of seventy-five to one hundred billion dollars. Such a circumstance might be the beginning of the end of our great country.

In our endeavors to equip ourselves with an adequate national defense, let us keep our feet firmly on the ground and avoid all the dangers and pitfalls made possible by having placed in our hands, for defense, such instrumentalities of defense which this country has never known before, and which, pray God, this country will only and always use as a means to avoid, and as a deterrent to, any future war. I cannot forget the story of the three men: One who traveled about without weapons of defense, for he was not thinking about trouble. The second man carried one gun, for he thought he might encounter some difficulty and would be ready. The third man carried two guns, and feeling ready and strong, went out looking for trouble.

Somewhere I read the following four short lines in verse, which are so apropos to our situation at the close of the last war, in which position we never again want to find ourselves:

Disillusion came at dawning
When we paused to count the dead,
When we stood to view the wreckage
And beheld the clouds ahead.

Our duty to our country is to adequately prepare for defense, keep from foreign entanglements and alliances, mind our own business, procure plenty of powder, keep it dry, and keep it at home in the event of the coming of any nation who might not be aware of the fact that we are a great country, adequately prepared to defend ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 27 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this happens to be St. Valentine's Day. If this House is about to send valentines to Herr Hitler and the other dictators of Europe, I believe its message with reference to the Western Hemisphere will be much more effective and more definitely understood if we follow the recommendations of the majority and authorize the entire air program at once.

The immediate objective of this bill is national security. Your committee brings this bill to the House after the receipt of the President's messages, after hearing first-hand from our Ambassadors to England and France of the situation in Europe, and after detailed testimony from responsible heads of the War Department and the Army. No war hysteria has motivated your committee or will influence this House in the passage of this bill. We are all going to keep our feet on the ground, look this problem in the face, and give sober and serious thought as to the very best way in which we can implement the Nation and preserve it from exterior force. None of us ever want the United States to be placed in a position where she must pay tribute or through fear of force be compelled to make an unconscionable settlement of international issues. We are resolved that our manhood shall not be utilized in fighting anyone else's war, nor shall we engage in any war of aggression.

When we talk about national defense and our plans for the protection of this country through our armed forces, we mean just what those words imply. With us defense means defense. The authorizations contained in this bill are what might be called the irreducible minimum of what should be done at this time. I need not tell you air power was decisive at Munich. For the first time in the history of the world nations with the most powerful armies and navies backed down to that nation having air supremacy. As a member of your Committee on Military Affairs I visited the Panama Canal and realize its defense needs. I have taken time to see many Air Corps fields and installations, the training center at Randolph and Kelly Fields, Tex. My inspection has taken me in the past 4 or 5 years to many of the plants of the aircraft industry—factories where planes, engines, propellers, and instruments are being produced. I have visited the laboratory at Langley Field of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

This bill is the legislative reply to the President's recommendations upon national defense to this Congress. It is our answer to the insistent demand of the people of the United States that we put our house in order. The great majority of Americans are disturbed over recent happenings in Europe. They are uncertain as to what is going to occur there and are concerned over what we should do. There is no question about their desire to stay out of the quarrels of Europe. They are opposed to any alliances of any kind that might make it necessary for us to go to the assistance of some European power.

They do believe in maintaining the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere. They fear the totalitarian states will endeavor to establish themselves in the Americas. They view with alarm the situation abroad and are skeptical of the ability of our Government to keep this country from becoming embroiled in a war of major proportions in Europe. Our traditional plan or theory of national defense has in no way changed since the early days of the Republic. Our geographical position remains our greatest national-defense asset. Today our defense plans must be molded to the modern pattern. A new arm has been added to the offensive and defensive power of nations. Aircraft are of ever-increasing importance in warfare. Their speed and range annihilate space and distance, and they have become a horrible menace to the noncombatants as well as to the military forces of nations engaged in armed conflict. Spain and China are examples of the havoc and suffering of civilian populations under bombardment from modern aircraft. It will not be possible for me, in the short time I have, to discuss paragraph by paragraph the details of this measure. Suffice it to say that the two principal phases of national defense which your committee considers most important are covered by this bill.

First. There is the increase in the authorized air force of the Army. An authorization of only some 1,400 planes over the number formerly specified, although prior legislation limited acquisition of those authorized to 2,320 planes. It was expected that this program would be fully completed by June 30, 1940. Now we propose to increase the Air Corps by additional planes so that we will have not to exceed 5,500 planes by midyear of 1941.

The second principal objective of this legislation is to arm with modern equipment what is considered the initial protective force. This consists of the Regular Army and the National Guard with a peace strength of approximately 400,000 men and a war footing of something over 700,000. The authorizations included in this bill will not provide for this force when mobilized on an emergency basis, but will help materially in properly equipping the 400,000 men that would be immediately available. In view of the tremendous expenditures that have been made for national defense in recent years, it hardly seems possible that we are so lacking in modern equipment. Yet when we take the principal items included in last year's War Department appropriation bill for military purposes, we find the bulk of Army expenditures are for other than armament and munitions. For instance, appropriations for this fiscal year include $40,000,000 for pay of civil personnel, $168,000,000 for pay of the Army, $30,000,000 for subsistence, nearly $13,000,000 for transportation, including purchase, maintenance, and operation of equipment; $13,000,000 for clothing, $10,000,000 for new construction; $12,000,000 for maintenance and repair of posts and stations, $1,000,000 for medical purposes; $89,000,000 for aviation and munitions, $6,000,000 for sea coast defense, $61,000,000 for cost of civil components exclusive of the item above of pay of civil personnel.

These items of more than $440,000,000 of the total appropriations of $460,000,000 have in the main little to do with increasing our armament with, perhaps, the exception of the Air Corps appropriation. We have few anti-aircraft guns. Only about half of our field guns, 75-millimeter, are equipped with modern mobile carriages. We have scarcely any anti-tank equipment, and our small arm is the Springfield rifle brought out in 1903.

This bill envisions bolstering our coast defenses, spending considerable money at Panama, including quarters for an adequate garrison. Most of us realize that it is the duty of Congress to make the Panama Canal impregnable. We must keep our defense lifeline between the oceans open.

The Monroe Doctrine has become once more a very important policy of the United States. Hemisphere defense necessarily is a selfish doctrine with us. Its prime modern consideration is the successful defense of the Panama Canal and the prevention of the establishment of military bases in the Americas by hostile powers. Our ability to utilize the Panama Canal at all times means that we can defend twice as much coast line with half as many battleships. It enables us to concentrate all of our attacking naval force in either one of two directions, an advantage that no enemy of ours or any combination of enemies could ever have. One has but to glance through the pages of our history to realize that the American people have never believed in any considerable standing Army, nor do we now need a large Army for defense. However, we have continuously through the years neglected our small land forces and their preparation and equipment has never been adequate at the outbreak of any of the major wars in which we have engaged. We do not need to worry today about personnel, the men and officers that constitute our Regular Army and likewise the National Guard. We have, also, under the wise provisions of the National Defense Act, established the organized Officers' Reserve, the volunteers who now number nearly 100,000, and who give unselfishly of their time and effort and who will be available for the training of any civilian army that might have to be formed in the future. Their ranks, as you all know, now consist in large part of the graduates of our colleges and universities, who have had the advantage of advanced Reserve Officers' Training Corps instruction. In the event of any major national emergency we shall depend, as we always have in the past, upon an Army recruited from the young manhood of our country coming from civil life. We do need to worry, however, about the equipment of our initial protective forces, which would have to be utilized in defending the United States until a civilian army could be gathered together and equipped. At present the fire power and mobility of our small Army are most deficient. We have models of weapons that are said to be very efficient as far as world standards are concerned, and in this connection we refer to mobile carriages for guns, the automatic rifle, anti-tank guns, mechanized equipment, including tanks and other modern equipment, but we have scarcely any of these articles. Our Atlantic coast defenses are most deficient. We are providing minimum needs in anti-aircraft guns, together with searchlights and fire-control equipment, and other tremendous steps forward will be taken when appropriations are made under this authorization. The placing of experimental orders with scores of firms in private industry, so that important factories will be equipped to turn out in increasing quantities those articles which are most needed in time of war will help our Army greatly. Much highly developed equipment is so complex, so delicate, and made with such precision that without experience it is most difficult even in a thoroughly industrialized country like America to hastily change from the arts of peace to the necessities of war.

You will find in the copy of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, beginning on page 4, the statement of Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff; his detailed explanation of the expenditures contemplated by this authorization is both clear and convincing. I am sure that you will be well repaid by reading General Craig's testimony.

Personally, I would like to see more money spent upon aeronautical research. The President's recommendation of utilizing the facilities at Sunnyvale, Calif., as well as the laboratories at Langley Field for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, is promising. One of the most important factors in Germany's bid for military air supremacy has been her devotion to the cause of scientific aeronautical research. Tremendous physical facilities have been made available to German scientists and many of them have been engaged in research of this nature since Germany started its air program in 1933. If we are to keep abreast of the most modern developments in aircraft, we must make ample provision for research. Let me return to a discussion of military aviation, because doubtless in the minds of the American people this is the most important part of this expansion program. There are many in this country who believe that all we need for national defense is a super and superior air force. They think any war could be won through mastery of the air. Knowingly and unknowingly they are the exponents of the great Italian general Giulio Douhet, who argued most convincingly that any war could be won through the air. To accomplish this Douhet maintained that an air-minded nation must not have mere temporary supremacy in military air operations but have such mastery of the air through its military aircraft that it could speedily bring about the complete destruction of all enemy aircraft, their plants for aircraft construction, their bases and sources of supply, their public utilities, and their industrial establishment, thus bringing the enemy to his knees in short order. Douhet's theory of warfare might well apply to Europe with nations in close proximity to each other. Who knows but that Douhet foretold what was to occur at Munich by reason of Germany's excellent air strength. However, we in the United States are not crowded in among the nations of Europe. Thousands of miles of ocean separate us from our nearest enemy and to operate successfully an air force of the size and strength sufficient to subjugate this country would mean the establishment of aircraft bases in the vicinity of our territory, which we should be able to prevent. A military base is not a mere landing field. There must be ample camouflage storage for hundreds of planes, tremendous supply maintenance and repair installations.

This brings me to a question which doubtless we shall have to face in the future under our system of separate administrations of the Army and the Navy, each with its independent air force, which is a necessary complement of other branches of the respective services. The Army is charged with coast defense, with the fortification and defense of the Panama Canal. Its planes are land-based planes, and I believe that it needs little argument to demonstrate that land-based planes can have greater range, greater striking power, and far more mobility than aircraft carrier-based planes. Let us largely confine long-range bombing missions to the Army Air Corps. It is quite apparent from the world figures upon the capacity of aircraft carriers that any nation or group of nations would have an insurmountable task in attacking this country through the medium of aircraft based on carriers. This presupposes that our fleet is not completely annihilated and that we maintain an air force of sufficient size and power.

At the present time the aircraft-carrier capacity of the leading nations is as follows:

Great Britain: 6 carriers with a total capacity of 225 planes; 5 carriers building with total capacity of 300 planes.

Germany: 2 carriers under construction, capacity of 80 planes; none available now.

Italy: No airplane carriers.

France: 1 carrier, capacity of 40 planes; 1 carrier under construction, capacity unknown.

Japan: 6 carriers with a total capacity of 240 planes; 1 carrier building, capacity unknown.

While I have already covered the major questions of policy which indicate the need for the expansion of our air forces, I think I should devote some time to the reasons which have led your committee to recommend that the total authorized strength of 5,500 planes should be set as an immediate goal, and that we should build up to this authorized strength as rapidly as possible. Some of my good friends across the aisle, who are ready to say that we need an air force of 5,500 planes for our Army, still seem to think that we should take 3 years to build these planes. Mr. Chairman, I cannot stand here on the floor of this House and tell you how many planes we will need 3 years from now.

I cannot tell you that in that period of time the aggressor nations of the world will have found a way to live at peace with other nations. I cannot tell you that within that period we will not be embroiled in a fight to the death for all that we hold dear, nor can any man stand before this House today and tell you that the part the United States must play in every move to continue peace and prevent war within the next 3 years will not be strengthened by a manifest and determined effort, started now and prosecuted with the utmost vigor, to make our air power so strong that no nation can believe that it has the power to defeat us in conflict or force our submission through threats.

Air power is one of the most elusive forces on which peaceful nations must depend for their protection. Compared to other component parts of military strength, air power is a fickle mistress, whose affection cannot be won overnight or relied on unless constantly cultivated. Eternal vigilance, eternal research, eternal strengthening of our manufacturing facilities, and eternal training of personnel, each form a part of the price we must be prepared to pay for that superiority in the air which is our best guaranty of peace in this hemisphere.

Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, United States Army, in an address to the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense here at Washington on January 25 this year, made some very pertinent remarks upon the necessity of prompt action upon an increase in our aerial forces. General Arnold said:

One commentator who has been quoted widely of late has said that a nation should not build up an air force until it knows when it is going to war. My answer to that is that it is comparable to saying that no man should insure his house except in the year it is going to burn down, or no man should insure his life except in the year he is going to die. Our contention is that modern air forces of suitable size are the best national insurance against unwarranted aerial attack by ambitious aggressors. Since we cannot be definitely sure when those attacks are to come and when that aggression is to head our way, wisdom decrees that we take out that insurance with the least possible delay.

What would seem a well-founded objection to building an air force today is that it will be obsolete tomorrow because of the rapid changes that the aviation industry is making in airplane types. Our flying fortress was designed more than 4 years ago. We have had them in service for more than 2 years. They are still the best bombing airplanes in the world, and there is no prospect that anything being developed abroad will make them obsolete for several more years. Our present formula, and it is based on world experience, is that our fighter craft will remain efficient, usable, and entirely satisfactory for from 4 to 6 years. Our bombing planes developed to date will remain up-to-date and efficient weapons for at least 5 or 6 years, or perhaps longer, while our miscellaneous types, such as training and cargo, have a much longer useful life of from 8 to 10 years. Roughly, therefore, in order to keep our 5,500-plane program modern and up-to-date, we will need to replace not more than one-fifth of the planes each year, and those 1,000 airplanes should be procured annually in order to keep in being the aircraft industry, one of the most essential parts of our war reserve. You can see, therefore, that air forces do not of necessity present an alarming obsolescence rate; and bear this fact well in mind, that this obsolescence rate on our own air force is no greater than that of other air forces in the world.

We dare not wait to build up an air force until we can standardize on the best possible airplanes, for if we did we would never build an air force at all. When we go into production on any given airplane, there is a better airplane around the corner; there is always on the drawing board or in the laboratory undergoing test an experimental plane of superior performance to that which we are buying in quantity. Remember, though, that an experimental airplane is always at least 2 or 3 years away from production quantity, and remember this: Experimental airplanes, or drawings of superior airplanes, did not win for the Germans at Munich. The air forces which affect international negotiations consist of airplanes in being with combat and maintenance crews available and air bases in existence from which to operate them. It is also of importance to note that it requires about 2 years to select and train those highly technical men who make up combat and maintenance crews.

Speaking before the annual meeting of the National Aeronautic Association on the 16th of last month, the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, Gen. Frank M. Andrews, made the following significant statement:

No one knows better than you gentlemen that air power is not a commodity that can be procured in the open market, no matter how much gold and silver may be available. Money will not buy it; desire will not create it. Timely foresight, based upon an intelligent conception of the potentialities of air power and its effect upon the destiny of nations, is the only formula that can assure its development.

The ability of a nation's industry to build airplanes and the existence of superior manpower available for training as pilots, navigators, mechanics, etc., do not make air power. They do constitute potential air power. However, it must be realized that it takes time to build a force of modern military aircraft, and further time to train the men to fly those airplanes and maintain them on the ground.

The existence of potential air power is important if it is utilized to create actual air power before the necessity arises to use it. The most fertile agricultural regions would be of no value to save a people from starvation unless they were sown with crops and those crops harvested before the spectre of famine presented itself.

So it is with potential air power. Unless developed before the emergency occurs it will be of little value afterward; not only because of the time factor involved, but also because aircraft factories and engine factories are early objectives of a hostile air force.

I repeat, adequate air power cannot be created after the necessity for its need has arisen. Like a navy, it takes years to build an air force.

I quote again from General Andrews:

As we study the development of air power today, and as we project ourselves into the very near future and realize its possibilities, it seems to me that there can be little doubt in the minds of any citizen of this country that the United States must lose no time in building up an air force.

As much as all of us would like to find a formula for universal peace, history has proven beyond doubt that the ability to defend one's self has always been the deciding factor in the security and life of a nation.

Air power is imperative for the security of this Nation and its policies. Its possession by this country, in adequate decree in our military organization, will constitute strong insurance that no hostile army will ever approach either coast for the purpose of landing on our shores; and that no hostile nation will ever establish air bases in this hemisphere. It will provide additional freedom of action to our Navy.

With the passing of each year, air power will become more and more vital in the shaping of the policies of nations.

These words come from one of our keenest students of military tactics. General Andrews knows that the present relative weakness of England and France in air power is due to the fact that these countries did not start soon enough, and did not have time to properly plan the development of their aircraft manufacturing programs. For us to make the same mistakes, which have cost them so dearly, would be tragic, and would provide the most tangible form of encouragement to dictators who already boast that democracies are too inefficient and disorganized to provide for themselves the necessary forms of self protection in our modern world. On the other hand, the successful accomplishment of the program which our committee has recommended, will do more than any other single thing to show enemy-watching nations that we mean to defend ourselves and our liberties against any and all threats, and that we are ready, willing, and able to do so.

A few moments ago I stated that no man could tell this House what air power we might need to command for our protection 3 years from now. To say that we will take 3 years to fill the needs we know exist today is to admit that 3 years from now we will still be far behind. It will likewise be interpreted by unfriendly nations as an admission that we are unable to repair our weaknesses at a more rapid pace.

Mr. Chairman, our responsibility for the safety and security of this great Nation cannot be discharged by building only 1,000 planes a year for the next 3 years. We are faced with a situation in which we must use every bit of available trained manpower and every tool and fixture in every airplane manufacturing plant in this country, and we must stretch every sinew in our aircraft industry to build and make ready for use the full measure of air power provided in this bill. Potential air power is not enough. We must provide actual air power in the form of modern fighting aircraft and all necessary personnel and bases. I anticipate considerable criticism through lack of understanding of the planes which are to be placed in reserve. These will number in excess of 2,100. One thousand three hundred and thirty-five of those in reserve will be various types of combat planes. These reserve planes will be distributed to depots and tactical units. They constitute in reality a rotating reserve. For instance, the reserve planes with tactical units will be placed in operating commission at any time any operating plane is undergoing repairs at the station of the units. Likewise, those planes in reserve at depots will be ready to instantly replace airplanes of the operating forces that are sent there for major overhaul or in event the planes are washed out. In other words, these reserve planes will be ready for instant service in creating new units in event of emergency, and in peacetime as a constantly rolling reserve in replacement of damaged or washed-out planes.

Several hundred of these planes in reserve will be used by National Guard units and for the training of Air Corps Reserve officers of inactive-duty status. There are 25 stations where Army Reserve pilots may fly in such a status. There are but 124 planes in the 3,000 active planes in this program or but 5 per station; the remainder are in the reserve of 2,000 planes. Thus it is clear that the elimination of the planes in reserve in the program will eliminate much of the training at our reserve stations scattered widely over the country—one of the strong links in our defensive structure. These reserve planes are to be used also to replace losses in National Guard plane strength. The air elements in our civilian components will suffer irreparable damage by the elimination of these planes listed as in reserve in this program.

In reality they constitute not more than a safe reserve, which is recognized as approximately 50 percent of operating planes, and that ratio is maintained today by the Navy in recognition of its mission, which requires instant readiness for service.

Fortunately for this Nation, we have an aircraft industry that is ready to undertake the program authorized in this bill and carry it forward to completion with a minimum of delay. The Air Corps and the industry have developed planes that will fill our needs and are ready to be put into quantity production. The industry as a whole is now using only about one-third of its available production capacity, which means that idle men and idle plants will be put to work in this program, and we will be providing employment at the same time we are providing air power for our security. Before I conclude these remarks, may I emphasize again the great importance of carrying out this program in strict accordance with the recommendations of your committee. One thousand planes a year will not accomplish the objective we have sought. We have recommended a program we are sure the Air Corps and the aircraft industry can accomplish. We know that the completion of this program in the time allotted will not only greatly strengthen our air power but will show every other nation in the most convincing manner possible that we can and will protect our vital interests. We know also that should we be so unfortunate as to be forced into armed conflict in our own defense, our aircraft industry would be geared up to meet the heavy demands that would fall on it in such an emergency. Finally, we know that the per-plane cost to the Government will be at least 20 to 25 percent less than it would be under the 3-year plan.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I urge, with all the force at my command, that this program be adopted as recommended by your committee and set forth in this bill. Peace for the United States and for the Western Hemisphere under honorable terms which protect our liberties and vital interests is the objective we have sought, and which we believe this bill will go far toward accomplishing.

It is the duty of Congress to recognize its responsibility for protecting our borders and preserving peace. The struggle between our way of life and that imposed on an increasing number of Europeans is of tremendous proportions and importance. If our institutions are to survive, if we are to continue to exist as a nation wedded to those principles of government for which our forefathers fought and died, we are but doing those things which are most necessary in the passage of this bill.

Let us definitely remember that all of our military advisers from the Chief of Staff down, including the Chief of the Air Corps, advise the immediate purchase of the additional planes authorized rather than the staggering of their purchase over a 3-year period.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON].

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with any statement which I have prepared I would like to mention one or two things which have already been taken up in connection with this bill. The debate has proceeded on the assumption that there is no emergency under which we are acting. It is said that Gen. Malin Craig, the Chief of Staff, is anxious for this authorization to go through at once, but if you turn to the top of page 3 of the hearings you will see that he said that he urgently recommended that $50,000,000 of the $300,000,000 be made available at once for the purchase of military aircraft.

Many statements have been made this afternoon as to the productive capacity of our present aircraft plants. It is true, as pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDT], that not a single person connected with the industry has been before the committee. The chairman of the committee stated in answer to a question that the productive capacity is between 10 and 30 planes per month; other Members say it is from 30 to 40 a month. Right after the President issued his message in connection with his program, Leighton W. Rogers, president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, said in making public the results of a survey just completed—and this is taken from an article that appeared in the New York Times on Friday, January 13, 1939—that the aircraft manufacturing industry of the United States can double its current production with the present plant space.

Mr. Rogers' report stated that the industry could deliver 5,500 military planes a year with existing plant area.

The American factories—and there are plenty of them—are not so poorly equipped. As to whether they can turn out 30 or 40 airplanes a month, this statement shows that in 1938 the industry's production aggregated approximately 3,675 planes of all types. Of that production there were 150 transports, 300 private and business planes, 1,425 light planes, and about 1,800 military craft, including those produced for export.

He goes on to state that, contrary to popular belief, the industry is nowhere near capacity production and that some of our important plants have practically no business. The survey showed, Mr. Rogers reported, that the 1938 average of 150 military planes a month had been stepped up toward the close of the year to an average of about 200 craft.

He goes on to state:

Some plants which have heretofore produced only commercial planes would be available to participate in such a military program.

No important factory expansion will be necessary for either the military or commercial manufacturers, although there might be minor additions in some cases.

Mr. Rogers' report also stated that experience had shown that about 6 months were required for training labor and 8 or 9 months for tooling up and jig installation. This does not mean that 6 months would be required to start production, but deliveries of most models could start immediately because they are already in production on present orders. As the plants completed their tooling operations, deliveries would increase progressively until at the end of 8 or 9 months full production would be reached. According to him, that does not require much plant expansion.

Let us now turn to the testimony of General Arnold, Chief of the Air Corps, whose arguments are supposed to be behind this program. On page 9 of the hearings he tells us why we are getting this program at this time in one of his early sentences:

This present program has been made possible by the sympathetic attitude of the public, the change in the world conditions, and the message of the President to Congress.

I do not believe any of us think there was any other reason than the fact that the President was willing to have this program come forward at this time. Then let us turn to page 10. General Arnold there states:

The labor employed in American aircraft factories is somewhere in the neighborhood of 27,000. That figure is almost a constant figure.

He goes on to state that this "total has been almost standard at about 27,000 for the last 2 or 3 years."

Turning to the next page, we find the statement that if we put this program into effect, "the 27,000 men we now have will probably be doubled or even trebled." New labor that goes into these plants must be trained.

Then let us turn to page 17 and find out about this emergency proposition. No one so far has argued that there is any emergency, but General Arnold stated at that time in answer to a question by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON]:

In my opinion, it is a question of whether you think we have an emergency here confronting us. If we have an emergency confronting us, then we must use emergency measures during the period of the emergency to get maximum production of planes.

On the next page he says he thinks there is such an emergency.

The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] got down to the nut of the proposition when he asked General Arnold, on page 23, the purpose of this program. Major General Arnold answered:

It has a double reason. First, to get airplanes; secondly, to try for once—

He says "for once," remember—to see just what productive capacity this country is able to build up, and to build up a reserve in case of emergency of war planes as part of our reserve and to treat them as such.

I do not think a good program for this country is one that involves seeing how many planes these airplane factories can produce in any one year. Who is going to be left holding the bag? As I understand the situation at the present time, we have 1,797 planes, of which 351 are obsolete. We have 1,022 planes on order at the present time or to be ordered under terms of the current War Department appropriation bill. If we provide for 5,500 planes under this program, Major General Arnold or the War Department will be in a position to order 4,054 planes at once. That is, those already on order, 558, plus those in the current appropriation bill, 464, plus the 3,032 more provided by this program. We will then have 4,054 planes immediately on order, and to be delivered at staggered times, true, but 4,054 on order, and presumably all of them to be built in the next 2 years.

The Army will go to the airplane factories, some of which are busy on French, English, or other foreign or local machines. Their owners will see the picture on the wall and will not care to expand. They will then give these orders to the factories which are idle. What will be the result? We have only 27,000 men capable of producing airplanes at the present time. Everyone of them is presently employed and has been steadily employed, as a matter of fact, for the last 5 years. This being so, they are going to treble this force, according to Major General Arnold, and we will then have 75,000 to 81,000 men so employed. This is an addition of some 50,000 men to this industry.

These men will be employed right up until July 1, 1941, and perhaps for a few weeks or months thereafter, but from that date on they will be dropped. What is going to happen to the airplane manufacturers who have been busy with their expanded plants, with their new machinery, all ready for mass production to go right straight along, when they have to discharge 50,000 men out of their factories and close down, because on the face of the situation there will not be any more military work for them at that time? The answer, of course, is that back will come the Air Corps asking for the right to order 4,000 more planes to keep the plants going for an additional 2 years, or else the Navy will take its turn and ask for 4,000 planes.

I have a particular reason for mentioning this fact. I believe the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] in which he would require a limitation to be placed on the number of planes built in any one year, is a sound one. Major General Arnold, in his testimony, states that airplanes become obsolete in 5 years. In other words, he states that every airplane built 5 years ago is now obsolete. Perhaps some may be good for transport service, or some may be used for training purposes, but as fighting equipment every one of them has gone by the board. Having that for a background, we ought to go mighty slow and we should give a lot of consideration to the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Under the proposed amendment, to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], the Air Corps is not shut off cold by any means. It has on order at the present moment, or almost certain to be ordered, 1,022 planes and it can still go ahead and ask for 1,032 more planes, or a total of 2,054 planes and have them all on order by June 30 of this year or shortly thereafter. In view of the fact that General Arnold states that a 5-year program is the proper kind of an air program, I will ask anyone if it is not reasonable to assume that we ought to provide for a straight, steady program of 20 percent every year, plus replacements?

If we will refer back to the act of 1926, we will find that at that time a 5-year program was entered upon. A limitation was placed upon replacements in Army planes to 400 a year, so that what the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] proposes is not new. We are going to continue a provision of a law that is now in force, but we step it up from 400 to 1,000, with the exception that we do not allow the Air Corps to jump up to the maximum number at once. We do give them the right to build 2,054 planes this year, or at least have them on order, and then provide for 1,000 a year thereafter. So long as we have a program covering 5,500 planes as the maximum, I feel the program suggested by the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] is absolutely sound. If we do not adopt some such program, we are going to have a sick industry in 1941 when it is expanded to treble its present capacity, with no place to go after that time.

It is certain that France and Great Britain will be out of the market in 1941 unless they are engaging in a war then. By that time we know that both Great Britain and France will have built up their factories to their needed capacity and will have available an airplane fleet of such numbers that it will not be necessary for them to come over to the United States and pay high prices, putting American workmen to work in American-owned factories. It is not sound business, and it is not sound politics.

Mr. Chairman, when I started to speak I had in mind the President's program. Briefly, there were five phases to it, the first of which was that the War Department should have the right to expend $32,000,000 for educational orders to prepare industry to meet urgent wartime needs; second, $110,000,000 to equip our Regular Army and National Guard, our so-called initial protective force of 400,000 men; third, $6,539,287 for fortifications in Panama, Hawaii, and the United States; fourth, $27,000,000 to increase the permanent garrison of the Panama Zone; and, fifth, $300,000,000 for airplanes, men, and facilities for the Army Air Corps. This program requires authorizations in regard to only the first, fourth, and fifth numbers. Insofar as the $110,000,000 to equip the Army and the $6,500,000 for coast defenses are concerned, they do not come under this bill.

To me the most important item in the bill is not the airplanes, but the $110,000,000 to equip the initial protective force. During our hearings on this bill it has been stated again and again that airplanes will never win a great war. The victory falls to the ground forces. The initial protective force is small and inadequately equipped. The Air Corps is more spectacular than the other branches and too likely to receive undue consideration, so the Congress must keep an adequate check on its development.

This bill was drawn by the War Department and if it passes without the Andrews amendment it will take away from the House for many years to come the salutary effect of hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs which follow requests for authorizations. Thereafter the only check would be the amount the Committee on Appropriations would recommend, based upon the unlimited authorization under 5,500 planes contained in this bill, for any kind of an annual program the Air Corps might sponsor.

I believe we can afford to follow a reasonably slow pace at this time with our air force while authorizing 5,500 planes. A little more money might be spent on the coast defenses. The estimates for the coast defenses were cut $4,400,000 by the Director of the Budget. Or the money might be spent on artillery and other equipment for our ground forces so they might be able to fight on equal terms against a modern army. We should have learned our lesson from the World War. Gen. Malin Craig testified, as is shown on page 6—

That in the World War General Pershing was forced to procure practically every item of his matériel, except the rifle, from the French and English, and this for an army which did not concentrate on the battlefield until 17 months after the declaration of war.

That is the lesson of 1918. The question is, Shall we profit from it? [Applause.]

Friday night, I heard the commentator, Fulton Lewis, tell of an interview on that day with General Craig. As I heard it, he stated that Germany had more than 90 divisions in her Army, while we have parts of 4 divisions in our Army, and that our men have only 8,000 rifles. I presume he referred to the new and very effective Garand semiautomatic rifle made at the Springfield Armory. The American people should know that more than 2,000,000 rifles left over from the World War, which are in good condition, are immediately available. However, the Garand rifles should be placed in the hands of all our regular soldiers and members of the National Guard at once. The President's program provides for them. Mr. Lewis pointed out that we have a shocking lack of artillery. In the case of a general war on this or any other continent we would be many, many months in putting an effective Army of great size in the field, unless allies like Great Britain and France could again supply our men with matériel.

All of the items in the President's program, except the Army Air Corps, have not required any "build-up." Upon the clear, concise evidence given at the hearings by such of our Army experts as Brigadier General Tyner, Assistant Chief of Staff, and Maj. Gen. C. M. Wesson, Chief of Ordnance, on whom we have every right to rely, I am satisfied that the program as to these items should be fully carried out. Twenty years have elapsed since the last war. The equipment we had then is largely obsolete, or so deteriorated as to be of slight value. Therefore, these items are absolutely necessary insurance premiums on our adequate national-defense policy.

Our national defense has cost this country an average of more than $1,000,000,000 a year for the past 4 years. For next year it is proposed that we expend more than $1,600,000,000. Why this enormous increase? With that in mind it behooves us to look carefully at the program of the Army Air Corps and the reasons for it, a program which when it is carried out will require $230,000,000 annually to maintain.

On page 16 of the report a brief summary of figures which concern Army airplanes is set forth. On December 31, 1938, the Army had 1,797 planes, of which 351 are obsolete. At that time 558 planes were on contract, and under the appropriation bill for 1939-40, 464 more will be ordered, so that on June 30, 1940, the total number of planes on hand, on order, or to be ordered will be 2,468. The Air Corps is completing its present program during the coming year, under which they sought to have 2,320 planes. We are, therefore, starting out with a new program at this time.

By the act of July 2, 1926, the Air Corps was authorized to secure 1,800 planes—page 5 of the report—subject to the provision "that the necessary replacement of airplanes shall not exceed approximately 400 annually." Two thousand three hundred and twenty more planes were authorized under the act of June 24, 1936. Therefore, the number of planes which the Air Corps is authorized to secure at the present moment is 4,120. Without this supplemental program, and without unusual appropriations, the Air Corps expects to have 2,468 planes on June 30, 1940. That will still leave them 1,652 planes in addition to replacements which they can purchase or contract for at once under the present law, which is a far greater number of planes than they have ever secured in any one year since the World War.

If the authorization is lifted to 5,500 planes and no limitation is placed upon the annual increment, then the Air Corps, if it saw fit, could contract at once for 3,032 more planes in addition to all other planes now under contract, provided they can secure the necessary appropriations. I am willing to accept the opinion of the air chiefs that our program should be extended to 5,500 planes, but I am opposed to giving the Air Corps a blank check of authorization to build the additional planes in any 1 year or at any one time without first explaining to the Military Affairs Committee their reasons for so doing. The House operates on the proposition that the Appropriations Committee shall not legislate, but shall recommend appropriations. Once this bill becomes law the legislative check will have been removed for a great many years from the Air Corps. I believe that check is of vital importance. It was included in the act of 1926, when a limitation of 400 planes in any one year for replacements was set forth. The experts still maintain that our policy should be under a 5-year program, as in 1926. The authorization will have been increased from 1,800 to 5,500 planes under this act. Therefore Mr. ANDREWS by his amendment has raised the limitation to 1,000 planes.

While training planes and bombers may last somewhat longer than 5 years, General Arnold has testified in effect that airplanes built on 1939 specifications and ordered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, will for the most part be obsolete in 1944. If orders are placed now these planes could not be delivered for 2 years, at the end of which time, due to new inventions, new instruments, new alloys, and new discoveries, some of these planes might well be far inferior to foreign planes of 1941, if not actually obsolete. Therefore the Congress should by law limit the annual increase in the number of planes to prevent any unusual hump in new planes in any one year. Suppose the Air Corps should, on the plea of a great emergency in the world today, secure appropriations for all of these planes and actually have 5,500 planes on hand on June 30, 1941. Suppose that in 1941 some foreign nation again is a menace to the world and through some new invention known not only to them but to us has built an airplane far superior to any of our planes. The Air Corps will be right back with us demanding funds and authorizations for several thousand more planes to meet the 1941 menace. We must therefore go slowly and be ready to apply the brakes on any unnecessary expansion. We should remember that we are not going to stop building when 5,500 planes have been secured. Fifteen percent to twenty percent will have to be replaced each year thereafter, and the maintenance of the Air Corps on a basis of 5,500 planes will be $230,000,000 annually. Such a burden should be placed on our country only after great deliberation.

One can read the entire hearings without finding any reason whatsoever for undue haste at this time so far as defense of the United States and its possessions are concerned or, for that matter, the defense of the principles of the Monroe Doctrine. Unless we are to assume that this expansion from the present authorized strength of 4,120 planes to 5,500 planes is based upon some secret understanding with other powers and is for some purpose other than the adequate defense of territory of the United States and within the Monroe Doctrine, the amendment proposed by Mr. ANDREWS should be adopted in the interest of a sound Army policy.

If this increase is sought for some purpose not brought out in the hearings, the bill should be recommitted in order that further evidence may be submitted in support of the bill as written. We should not act upon a basis of possibilities or probabilities of a great war between nations, other than the United States, unless the House is fully advised of the needs of the Air Corps in the light of the testimony made available to every Member of Congress.

As it would be 3 years before the present 4,120 planes now authorized would be contracted for at the present rate of increase in the Air Corps, I have tried to figure out from the testimony the reason why this section of the bill has been brought up at this time. Three reasons appear:

First. A statement of General Arnold, page 17 of hearings, when asked about doing away with competitive bidding, to the effect that "it is a question of whether you think we have an emergency here confronting us."

Second. In order to maintain as many aircraft-manufacturing plants in production in the United States as possible, the Air Corps should be permitted to place orders for an unusually large number of military craft at this time, without the restriction of competitive bidding.

Third. On the policy of "take it when you can get it," page 17 of report.

Taking up the first reason, I might say that I was surprised that the foreign policy of the United States and the places where our planes might be used in the immediate future were matters not taken up at these hearings. No witness appeared for questioning who was competent to discuss policies. I tried to find out where the airplanes might be used, but without success. The hearings were inaugurated by the presence of Ambassadors Kennedy and Bullitt in a joint meeting with the Senate Military Affairs Committee. Perhaps the world tension which was so marked when they created much publicity, but produced no new information, according to one of the Senators present, will gradually taper off, if not subside. I found it most interesting to read Mr. Kennedy's denial that he had ever predicted a European war just before he sailed for England last Friday. The hearings disclosed that if we get the planes at once we have no air fields on which to base them. Likewise, we have not sufficient personnel to man them, and it will take years in order to train properly the large number of new pilots and mechanics needed for such an expansion of program. Instead of proceeding along in an orderly manner under the present authorized program, this "must program," written by the War Department and not by the committee, is dumped here before us today. Every time we put a plane in the air it is estimated that it will cost $50,000 a year to keep it there, which is another reason why I think Mr. ANDREWS' amendment should be adopted.

Let us track down this emergency further. These planes presumably are going to fly around the United States and its outlying possessions, or wherever the application of the Monroe Doctrine might take them. Does anyone believe that more than the number of planes we are now authorized to maintain, 4,120, will be required to ward off any attack during the next 3 years on the United States, or, for that matter, on any nation in the Western Hemisphere? If so, the facts have not been presented to the House Military Affairs Committee. If our enemy comes by sea, we would have an additional force of not less than 2,000 Navy planes to supplement the 4,120 Army planes to protect us. In figuring our needs we must not lose sight of the Navy air force, which must be turned aside before the Army planes would see much action from across the Atlantic or the Pacific. The President has recently stated our foreign policy in terms indicating that the United States has not entered into any foreign entanglements. On the evidence we do not need an increase in authorization at this time. To be on the safe side, in view of world conditions, I am willing to vote for authorization for 5,500 planes for the Army. That number, with the Navy air force, will adequately defend the United States. Such a force will not be necessary unless war actually breaks out. Until then the Andrews amendment should be a part of the law.

The second reason for this program, as indicated, is the need to furnish orders to airplane plants now idle, without competitive bids. Not a single manufacturer or representative of the aircraft industry appeared as a witness. No comprehensive figures concerning the industry were presented, merely the names of five companies which are not particularly active. From one who should know, however, Leighton W. Rogers, president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, a statement appeared in the New York Times following the President's message. I have quoted from it above.

Certainly, on the basis of recent large orders placed by foreign governments, the conditions of the industry as a whole are bound to improve this year. To allow the Air Corps to ignore the present law, which requires Government aircraft to be purchased on competitive bidding, would be to open the way once again to scandal and to raids upon the Public Treasury. Surprising as it may seem, some of the planes cost up to $600,000, the initial planes in particular classes. To award a contract for a plane at a cost of $200,000 to a company which was idle, when another company which was in full operation would build that plane for $175,000, would open up again the old question of subsidies. Anyone who reads the testimony will be satisfied that no sufficient evidence has been produced to warrant any change now in the present law.

The real purpose for bringing forward the first section of this bill at this time is, in my opinion, based largely upon the third reason, "Take it when you can get it." Let us give the Air Corps the $50,000,000 recommended by the President for the purpose of placing immediate orders for new airplanes. Then let us stop, look, and listen. Let us not be parties to any further unusual increase in our annual Budget just because some Army officials may believe that the American people have already become tired of reckless and wasteful spending, and that succeeding Presidents and Congresses will not be so easy to handle as the Seventy-sixth Congress. General Arnold testified that "in drawing up this program—for the Air Corps—there was just enough pie there to go around." Another general stated that the idea was to "take it when you can get it." In other words, there is no sound reason behind the War Department's demand that the Air Corps be given another blank check on the United States Treasury, free from congressional restraint.

I believe that it is the duty of each Congressman to see that this program, if adopted, is carried out properly and reasonably, both in the number of planes ordered in any one year and in the amount of money expended. For that reason, I feel that we should support the Andrews amendment, which would require that the Air Corps is to be limited to not more than 1,000 airplanes during any one fiscal year after June 30, 1940, except in the event of the declaration of a national emergency or by a further act of Congress.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON].

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I first wish to call attention to a statement that has been made on the floor of this House once today and once a few days ago by my good friends and fellow colleagues on the Committee on Military Affairs the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS], who seem to be rather perturbed because Assistant Secretary of War Louis Johnson did not appear before the Committee on Military Affairs on this bill. Assistant Secretary of War Johnson happens to be a distinguished constituent from my district. He is a past national commander of the American Legion and an officer of the World War with a distinguished-service record. I know personally that Assistant Secretary Johnson was not invited by the committee to appear before it, and if these gentlemen had wanted him at any time and had extended an invitation to him he would have been there to answer any inquiries they might have cared to put to him.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. I may say that the minority on the committee on three occasions asked the chairman of the committee to invite Mr. Johnson to come before us.

Mr. EDMISTON. I know nothing of the request of the minority to the chairman. I do know The Assistant Secretary would have been glad to come if he had been asked.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAY. I may say in response to the remark of the gentleman from New York that the matter was mentioned a time or two, but no formal request was made to have Mr. Johnson come before the committee. The reason he was not called is that he is to be called later in connection with another bill which is to be considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. At that time, if the gentleman wishes to find out from Mr. Johnson anything pertinent to the pending legislation, he can ask him about it.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to one provision in the bill. The language beginning at the bottom of page 5 after the "Provided further," and extending on page 6 down to and including line 13 is an amendment I offered in committee which was adopted by the committee. I shall not take time to read the language, but the effect of the amendment is to place all officers whether under the classification of Reserve, National Guard, Regular Army, or any other classification, on the same basis as to pensions, compensation, and retirement pay as officers of the Regular Army, if and when called into extended duty, and that is defined in the amendment as 30 days or more of service. The Navy and Marine Corps in the World War made no distinction between Regular officers and any other officers serving with their forces. The Army always has made a distinction. I believe this provision is a very just and fair inclusion in this bill.

Under the provisions of this bill, 3,000 Reserve Corps officers may be called into active duty. If these officers are called into active duty and are performing the same duty as Regular Army officers, they should be accorded under all circumstances the same treatment as their fellow officers. If two Air Corps officers are flying in the same ship and that ship happens to crash and they are injured to the same extent or killed in that crash, there should be no distinction between the Regular Army officer and the Reserve officer when both of them are performing the same duty under identical circumstances.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. I believe that under section 3 of the bill, at the bottom of page 3, you do not grant benefits to a student who is injured.

Mr. EDMISTON. May I explain to the gentleman why that is. These students are not in the Army. They are attending air schools operated by private individuals, to which the Government may lend officers or enlisted men as instructors. However, those students are in no way under the control of the Service or in it while attending school. After completing the course of instruction at such school and then going to Randolph Field these men are in the Army, and under this amendment would be on a par with all other cadets, or enlisted men.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman believe it would be better to have all the training under the direct control of the Army?

Mr. EDMISTON. That would be a matter of opinion. This bill does not make such provision. The students must finish a course of instruction in one of these schools to get into Randolph Field.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut, a distinguished member of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Is there not a provision in the bill that these students will be taken in under existing authorization as flying cadets and will go to the civilian schools as flying cadets who are detailed to the civilian schools under the amendment to existing law which allows the detail of a small portion of the enlisted and officer personnel today? So they will have the status of an enlisted man as a flying cadet, although their pay status is somewhat different, their status is that of an enlisted man, but they enlist as a flying cadet and will be detailed to these civilian schools for instruction and they will be on an Army status or an enlisted status as flying cadets at that time, as I understand the present plan which is contemplated in this bill.

Mr. EDMISTON. My understanding is different from that of my colleague from Connecticut with respect to their status in that until they finish at the school they are not in the military service.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Under section 2 of the bill, when the Army facilities for instruction and training are deemed by the Secretary to be insufficient, he may, under such regulations as he may prescribe, detail personnel of the Regular Army as students. It is my understanding that this includes the students in the civilian flying schools and that they are first enlisted in the Army as flying cadets, which is an enlisted status, and then detailed under section 2 of this bill.

Mr. EDMISTON. I think the gentleman is perhaps correct and I missed that thought in reading the bill.

Mr. MILLER. If that is so, and they are enlisted men assigned as flying cadets, why should they be exempt or why should their widows or dependents be exempt from any benefits that may now be available to any other enlisted man?

Mr. EDMISTON. I do not think they should be.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman notice, as he turns the page of the bill there, that their dependents are entitled to no benefits in case of injury or death?

Mr. EDMISTON. I will check that when I have the time. I missed the connection there, but if that is true, I am sorry it is true.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, who is always interested in protecting the interests of her Reserve and National Guard constituents.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that this has been done before? Some years ago provisions were made by law that would take care of the Reserve pilots who were killed or injured.

Mr. EDMISTON. What the gentlewoman from Massachusetts refers to, I presume, is that when we passed the bill providing for the cancellation of air-mail contracts and called Reserve Air Corps officers into flying the mail we provided in that act that they should be treated in all respects the same as Regular Army officers performing the same duty. So this is not a new idea, particularly for hazardous service.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman agrees, of course, that the provision which he has been discussing was placed in the bill by an amendment of the committee without any hearings whatsoever on that subject; and the gentleman also knows, as a matter of fact, there was an additional bill—H. R. 3220—to take care of this subject. Does the gentleman know the millions of dollars of additional cost of putting in this amendment?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDMISTON. I will be pleased to answer the gentleman if he will yield me 2 more minutes.

Mr. MAY. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. EDMISTON. No one can estimate what the cost of this will be, because no one can foresee how many of these Reserve and National Guard officers may be cracked up or killed. The cost will be proportionate to how many are injured or killed; and regardless of what it costs, if we injure or kill these American boys while performing a patriotic duty, in my opinion, they should all be on the same basis and should all be treated alike. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this legislation. It is good legislation and it has been based on testimony, good common-sense testimony given by our Chief of Staff and other high Army officers who have refused to become alarmed by certain stories that have been brought back here from Europe by some of our foreign envoys. At the outset I want to say that I believe one of the cheapest and best ways to promote peace and to adequately defend our Nation would be for us in Congress to find some way to padlock the lips of some of our warmongering Cabinet officers and prevent them from going around the country making very inflammatory remarks and inviting trouble. [Applause.]

There is no reason on earth for the Congress or the Nation to be frightened into a frantic expansion of our national defense by the stories we hear about the imminence of war and the inevitability of our being drawn into it.

After listening to testimony before the House Military Affairs Committee it appears highly significant that the alarmist attitude of our foreign envoys—Mr. Bullitt and Mr. Kennedy—does not agree with the attitude of Gen. Malin Craig, our Chief of Staff, and other high Army officers who have testified at the hearings.

It seems to me that we should give due consideration to the fact that not only are these military authorities just as concerned with adequate defense for this country as anybody could be, but they are in a better position to know the requirements of that defense than anybody else possibly could be. It is their business. They are trained in these matters. And it cannot be denied that our military and naval agencies of intelligence and information are equal to any in the world. These men who are educated and experienced in the business of protecting the United States and advising the Congress in the requirements for defense, regard this whole question with a dispassionate and unemotional attitude which is exceedingly important in a time like this. I have yet to hear one of them say that an emergency exists.

Even so, if this were the first emergency, or the first crisis that we have ever faced in this country in the past 6 years, then there might be some reason for our becoming so alarmed as to engage in a frantic expansion of our national defense and the building of thousands of airplanes, and the neglect of all considerations of upkeep after the defense mechanism is created. But the fact is emergencies and crises have become about the commonest things in America in the last 6 years. Every time the administration wants a bill passed in Congress it reaches into its well-stocked cupboard of emergencies and crises and drags out a couple. Then for a time they make the headlines on the first pages of newspapers, only to evaporate, one after another, after the measures have been passed or defeated, as the case may be.

So, then, this is just another case of crying "wolf"—and "wolf" has been cried out too many times for us to regard the alarm too seriously.

BEST METHOD

There is no doubt that there are certain requirements necessary to bring our national defense up to that state of efficiency and capacity which would provide the insurance that we ought always to maintain against any possible contingencies of the future. I, for one, however, am wholly inclined to go along with the cool, dispassionate, and thoroughly-considered views of the military officials and not the alarmist views of our foreign envoys, who come back here saturated with the psychology of Europe and with their hides filled with the talk of the imminence of war, and who are sent up here on Capitol Hill by the administration as high-pressure salesmen to scare the Congress into what may well be a wholly extravagant and unnecessary expansion of the national defense.

We have to keep in mind also the standpoint of the taxpayer—who, apparently, has become the forgotten man—that the first cost of national defense is not the big cost. It is the upkeep that hurts the taxpayers over the years.

Of course, the Panama Canal should be made impregnable, if it is possible to do so. We should neglect no single feature of our national defense that our Army officials regard as vitally necessary. And we should continue our policy of the Monroe Doctrine. But we should do it, not in a state of hysteria or frenzy, but in a state of cool, calm sanity that will not lead us to make mistakes which might easily precipitate, rather than avoid, a world war.

I think we may well recognize the fact that when our Ambassadors, Messrs. Bullitt, and Kennedy, and others, come back home bearing tales of terrors and messages of alarm, none of them, and nobody else, knows what is in the mind of Adolph Hitler or Benito Mussolini, or other rulers of Europe. Nobody knows whether they mean to make war next spring, or whether they mean to make another bluff. Nobody knows what they intend to do.

We cannot, in a year or two, try to create a defense which will anticipate any possible eventuality that might take place in the world, because we have seen realignments occur since the last year and we will see realignments occur again. Do not forget that in the last World War Italy was pitted against Germany. Today she is an ally of Germany.

This question of a united front for democracies, still a very ardent one to which we are devoted in this country, might turn out to be one to which some foreign nations might not be so devoted. Politics plays a great part in the affairs of the Old World. Their diplomacy has no conception of open covenants, openly arrived at. We must keep all of these things in mind when we begin to expand our defense mechanism.

We have been told—and I believe it—that no foreign government possesses bombing planes that can go farther than 800 or 900 miles, drop their bombs, and return to their home bases. The Atlantic and Pacific Oceans are still somewhat more than 800 or 900 miles wide.

Lincoln once said that the nations of Europe, with all the treasure of the world except ours and with Napoleon Bonaparte for a leader, could not take a drink of water from the Ohio or make a track in the Blue Ridge in a thousand years. Mr. Lincoln may not have envisioned all of the modern methods of transportation such as airplanes, but I am inclined to think that his statement still stands. Who is there who believes that any nation or any combination of nations in Europe could subdue or subjugate this country with airplanes? They might, of course, damage some of our coastal cities, but even that is a remote possibility which we would want to avoid. They might actually demolish some of our outlying territories, which we would want to avoid if possible. But we must remember at all times during these stressful days that there is a vast difference between a defense that is within a couple of hundred miles of its home shores and an offense that has to cross stormy oceans and maintain a line of communication in order to operate in a foreign country. We had a taste of some of those difficulties during the last Great War.

So, then, I hope we will keep our feet on the ground and our heads out of the clouds of fear while we are considering this problem of national defense.

Now, as to the question of how rapidly we should build the aircraft provided for in this legislation. The logical view which seems to be held by our military and naval authorities, as well as others, is that it is more important for us to have the facilities by which to turn rapidly to adequate volume production of airplanes when they are needed rather than build up a vast supply of airplanes to become obsolete before they are needed. For that reason I find myself constrained to support the amendment, which, I understand, will be offered tomorrow to provide that the airplanes authorized in this act shall be built at a rate of not more than 1,000 per year.

The question arises at this point as to whether or not, if we are to continue to do it, we can provide the democratic countries of Europe the quantities of planes they need and actually build as many as 1,000 planes a year for ourselves. In any event, we have been told that the construction of these planes for England and France will rapidly build up our manufacturing capacity to the point where we will be able to go into mass production very quickly if the emergency arises. We are also told that England and France are going to pay for the mistakes, engineering and otherwise, which will be made in building up this airplane-manufacturing capacity.

I am not sure as to the ethics of letting our friends, the overseas democracies, pay for our mistakes, but the administration seems to think it is both ethical and good business. At any rate, I shall not be willing to vote for the construction of more than 1,000 airplanes per year until the general staffs of the Army and Navy tell the Congress that a production above that is a vital necessity.

To what extent the administration is using this so-called emergency of national defense to cover up the failures of the New Deal on the economic front at home is open to debate. There is nothing new to the political device of distracting public attention from one's failures by directing that attention to distant horizons. It is the oldest technique in politics, but in the case of our national defense it would be an extremely costly technique so far as the taxpayers are concerned, because of the necessary upkeep of the defense mechanism after it is created.

The President himself has said in times past, and it is true, that any temporary prosperity based upon war activities would be the most disastrous mistake that this country could make. We do not have to take the President's word for it either. Look at our experience after the last war. This Nation is now paying, and will continue to pay for the next 100 years, for the folly of having thought it had emerged into new levels of prosperity by reason of the activities of the last war. Another war will be destructive and horrible beyond conception. It will be vastly worse than the last war. I think I am safe in saying that there is not an economist or statesman worthy of the name who does not realize today and say that the aftermath of another war would bring such a depression in the United States as to make the one in which we have been struggling for 9 years look like a wave of prosperity.

The whole history of the United States, as shown by economic charts, is that after every war and the boom accompanying such a war, there was a descent into a depression. I say that, without exception, this is the history of this Nation. It would be so after the next war. It is also true that over a history of 150 years every depression following every war has been deeper than the preceding depression following the preceding war, and the depression following the World War is far greater than ever before was experienced in the world.

Now, if we are to profit at all by the history and experience of the past, then we must anticipate that another war would throw us into a depression the depths of which we cannot even conceive. That would mean in this country, in all probability, such a confusion and disintegration of national unity as to make probable some form of fascism or communism or other form of dictatorial government.

The old rallying cry of Bunker Hill is still a good motto for us: "Keep your powder dry and don't fire until you see the whites of their eyes." [Applause.]

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, of all the bills that will come before this Congress providing for our national defense, this one is the least objectionable. The main purpose of the bill is to increase the air forces of the Nation from 2,468 ships to 5,500 ships, and properly train officers to handle them. In addition to this, the bill provides $110,000,000 for procurement of new equipment for the modernization of available equipment for the existing units of the Regular Army and the National Guard. The 3,032 planes are to cost $170,000,000 or approximately $56,000 for each plane.

Here in the National Capital there seems to be increasing fear that some country, somewhere, is about to land an army here and lead us all away as slaves to waiting ships. Candidly, I do not know of a single nation that has any idea of making war upon us. If we attend to our own business, no one will make war on us. If we allow England and France to inveigle us into defending them on the theory that a sister democracy should defend a democracy, we may have trouble with the enemies of England and France. My answer to this propaganda of defending the democracies of England and France is that neither one of them is a democracy. How a hereditary monarchy like England can be called a democracy is a contradiction of history. How France, where the people do not elect their congressmen, can be called a democracy is another contradiction. There is not the slightest reason on earth why we should be concerned with the so-called democracies of England and France. Since the last war these two countries have made no honest attempt to pay us the money we loaned them. If we were to collect that money today, without interest, we would have close to $8,000,000,000; and if we could collect at the same rate of interest which the farmers are forced to pay in the United States, the debt due us from England and France would amount to $18,000,000,000. That is what we received in the World War for our interest "in democracies."

The chairman of this committee has just told you that we should increase our national defense to compare favorably with the defense provided by England. That is absolutely no argument. England in itself means nothing in territory, but the British Empire is quite another thing. The sun never sets on British soil. England is a nation beyond the seas. She needs a navy and a well-equipped war machine because of her great extensive empire. As a nation she is leading a precarious existence in the defense of her dominions. She would never be able to defend them unless she edged her way into help from other nations. She did that in the World War with this country. It was easy for her to accomplish that purpose because she controlled our markets of wheat and cotton and was then, as she is now, our financial adviser. There is absolutely no question today but what England has had more to do with drumming up a war scare in this country than any other contributing factor.

A reasonable outlay for air defenses of the modern type is proper, but this program looks like a preparation for war. We do not know whom we are going to fight. We do not need to know that, yet England will tell us in due time.

We are afraid some nation will land an army here. We should stop and realize that the enemy of this great democracy has already landed an army here more dangerous to our existence than the armies of the combined nations of the world—the army of the unemployed. This Congress will not appropriate money enough to feed this great army. The Congress reduced the absolutely necessary amount for this purpose in the sum of $150,000,000, and all of the conservative elements among the Democrats and Republicans supported this cut. But today, when someone brings up this war scare, we find these same conservative elements among the Democrats and Republicans embracing each other in the aisles of Congress in their combined eagerness to defend this country. Patriotism never flows faster in the veins of these patriots than when someone objects to building more national armies here until we first feed the army of the unemployed.

The worst side of the whole picture is that unemployment will increase and not decrease as long as we allow this private enterprise of interest clipping to continue by the private control of the money that belongs to all the people. How absolutely foolish and absurd it is to talk of national defense when the same Government that desires to be defending is foreclosing in a wholesale manner on thousands and thousands of our home owners daily. How foolish to appropriate money for national defense when we have over 60,000,000 of our population in distress.

My advice is, and I am as patriotic as any man in this House, or any man who ever sat in this House, to take the load of debt off the backs of our own people and open up an opportunity for them to work for themselves and their families. Let them have a home to defend and they will defend it. Let us put our own house in order first and that is the only road to a sound national defense. If war came today we would have more trouble feeding the people behind the lines of battle than we would those engaged in it. We are not ready for war and we will not be ready until we give our own people a chance to enjoy what this Government promised them—and the only purpose for which this Government was formed—life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We are capable of bringing these blessings to all our people, but we shall never accomplish this much-prayed for existence until we stop a few individuals from grabbing all while the many suffer.

The patriots here in Congress deplore the fact that there are Communists in the United States. Of course there are Communists here—Communists always appear when there is a diseased government. When they appear we ought to know that something is wrong in the way we are operating this Government. Our job is not to chase down Communists but to correct the mistakes of government. Pain is a good thing for the patient and the doctor. Pain tells where the trouble is. The pain can be relieved by any skillful doctor of medicine, but the organic disease will continue. We had better understand our pathological condition and go to the source of the trouble in this Government and cure it. Let the people live as our forefathers planned, and all the "isms" will disappear.

My philosophy is, protect the people of the United States now when they need protection, and if, some time, war is brought to our shores, these same people will protect the Government. Make the great mass of the people of the United States understand in their hearts that we have a country worth defending, and our ingenuity, our resources, our manpower, our inventive genius, and patriotism for a land we love will defend this Nation, located as it is, against the combined forces of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER.]

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to seem to be going into ancient history, but I do feel warranted in this discussion of the expansion of our air program in reading a somewhat prophetic contribution which I made to this discussion nearly a year ago in connection with the discussion of our naval program. With the permission of the Committee, I should like to read those words into the RECORD now, as it seems to me they very forcibly call to our attention—and did even a year ago—the imperative necessity of expanding our air forces. This is found in the report of the Naval Affairs Committee submitted to the Congress on March 7, 1938, on our defense plans. In the course of an expression of the views of certain members of the committee we asked, "Why limit our aircraft?" and then went on as follows:

WHY LIMIT OUR AIRCRAFT?

The evidence before our committee emphasized the extreme flexibility of aircraft in the defense of the American continent where aircraft can be available in either ocean within 24 hours.

The Congress may also most profitably read the evidence before the committee as to the amazing advances in aircraft even in the past 2 years since the Inskip report was published. Each day witnesses new achievements by aircraft.

The disconcerting aspect of the proposed legislation in regard to aircraft is its imposition for the first time of a limit on the number of aircraft the Navy may possess.

Insofar as aircraft are concerned, this legislation limits the existing authorization.

Under the Vinson-Trammell Act it is provided that "the President is hereby authorized to procure the necessary naval aircraft for vessels and other naval purposes in numbers commensurate with a treaty navy."

The Navy decided that this meant 2,050 planes, but this limit rested solely in Executive discretion and could be altered at will.

The authorization was unlimited so far as Congress or treaty was concerned.

The proposed legislation now, for the first time, imposes a limit of 3,000.

Yet England has just presented an air program providing 12,000 planes and placed air defenses on a parity with the Army and the Navy in the amount of the appropriations. This is in startling contrast to the American allocation, although America seems ideally adapted to emphasize air defense.

I concluded:

This bill limits aircraft when the importance of aircraft for defense is increasing with revolutionary rapidity and other nations are spending 10 times what we are for experimentation in aircraft development for defense.

This paragraph is now incorporated for emphasis on the words that called the attention of Congress to this situation nearly 1 year ago.

As a result of that protest the limitation was stricken out of the naval bill on the floor after the limitation had been submitted by the Navy Department and approved by the Naval Affairs Committee.

Two thousand new planes for the Army this year, in addition to those now authorized and provided for the Navy, and 1,000 more in each of the next 2 years for the Army, in addition to what the Navy may require, are sufficient to expand American plane production to a most gratifying extent.

Any idle plant facilities will certainly be fully occupied, and both plants and personnel will be expanded to meet the requirements, civilian and military, at home and abroad.

Having lagged too long behind, it is well that now we should not go to the other extreme and produce in a single year planes that will be soon and uniformly obsolescent and planes for which, according to General Arnold, of the Air Corps, there will be no trained-pilot personnel.

This explains my sympathy with the Wadsworth-Andrews amendment.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, if the chief issue over this bill—and it seems to me it is—is whether the War Department shall build 3,000 planes in something like 2 years or less, or shall spread the program out over 3 years, it is a very happy situation in the House with respect to the national defense; and if the War Department builds these 3,000 planes within 3 years, it will be a very happy situation for the national defense in the country, because that will be just exactly 3,000 more combat planes than we had in France at the end of the World War, and the same thing was true of artillery and about all our fighting equipment. This was characteristic of the American people.

The American people are not war-minded. Their whole record shows this. As soon as a war ends they demobilize and throw away their arms and uniforms and go back to the pursuits of civil life. There is no danger of making the American people military-minded. The difficulty is to keep them sufficiently military-minded to maintain an adequate national defense.

The American people are not imperial-minded. They dream of no world empire. Any other nation but this would now own Cuba. Any other nation but this would keep the Philippines. This was the only Nation that returned to China its share of the Boxer indemnity. We are the only Nation which refused mandates out of the World War. Instances could be multiplied. There is no country on the American continent or beyond the continent that can honestly say that it fears that the United States covets a foot of its territory.

American lack of military and imperial ambition is basic in our national lives. It has marked our whole history as a people. It is the national philosophy. But this philosophy, fortified by our geographic isolation from the other great nations of the world, appears to have built up an attitude regarding the national defense which is no longer justified in the light of revolutionary changes in transportation and communication and in weapons of war, which bring the whole world to the doorstep of every nation.

I recall once standing on this floor advocating the expansion of the Navy, but not of the Army, on the ground that any war in which we might engage would be fought on the high seas; that no other nation could undertake to invade this Nation, and that this Nation would undertake to invade no other nation. Six years later we had an Army of 2,000,000 men in France and 2,000,000 more in course of preparation.

A controversy has been raging over an alleged private remark of the President that the frontier of America is on the Rhine. Whether he said it or not, the frontier of America has been on the Rhine, and beyond. An American Army has trod the soil of Germany. The American frontier has been on the coasts of Europe, of Africa, and of Asia, when those coasts were vastly more distant from ours than they are today. We have had naval engagements on all those coasts.

The overwhelming majority of Americans now agree that we should build up and maintain an adequate national defense, but when it comes to blueprinting that proposition we are as far apart as the poles. A retired major general of Marines visited Colorado last fall and in discussing the national defense said, in so many words, to applauding audiences, that we ought to have a Navy which we could let out on ropes during the day and haul in at night. It is well nigh unbelievable. There is some of that attitude in Congress. It was in evidence in speeches on the Ludlow war referendum resolution and the naval program of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

The controversy wages around what constitutes a defensive navy. Some gentlemen would draw imaginary lines in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans and say that we want a Navy which is capable of defending us behind those lines, and no farther. They want a Navy that can defend us at Honolulu on the west and Puerto Rico on the east. If we build a Navy capable of fighting beyond these imaginary lines it is a Navy for offense, for aggressive action against other nations. Such views would be funny if it were not for the fact that they are expressed by national representatives supposed to be capable of sound judgment on questions vital to the safety of this Nation, and having a vote on these questions.

Perhaps long adherence to a viewpoint is calculated to cause one to give it undue weight, but it has always been my viewpoint that a navy which is not capable of taking the offensive is not capable of maintaining the defensive. It is my viewpoint that a navy adequate to the defense of the United States—and that means the defense of the continent of America—is a navy able to go wherever the water is deep enough to float it. Any lesser navy would be a provocation to war, not an insurance against it.

There is no sure way to avoid war. But the surest way is to be so ready that the other fellow cannot start. Nothing would be so dangerous to the peace and security of our country as a belief on the part of war-minded nations that we were not ready and were not willing to take any measures whatsoever requisite to preserve the sovereignty, the integrity, and the peace of America.

It has always been my conviction that the thought in the mind of the German high command that this country would not and could not enter the World War on the side of the Allies, their contempt openly expressed for our military ability, was responsible for the ruthless conduct which forced us into that war. I have hoped that the tremendous achievement of this country in the World War would serve as a permanent reminder to war-minded nations that this country is willing and able to fight; but if the World War taught the world anything, apparently it has been forgotten, and today there are marked trends in world affairs of which we must take cognizance and against which we must prepare. It would be the height of national folly to disregard these developments and their possibilities as they may affect us.

The slogan invented by Wilson "to make the world safe for democracy" was an inspiration of genius which welded the world together against the Germanic allies, but I know in the bottom of my heart that at the back of this since much-criticized slogan was the purpose to make the world safe for the United States. I felt then what I hardly dared say, that unless the United States stopped Germany in France we would some day have to stop her in South America. It seems less wild now that we still may have to do that. The surest way not to have to do it is to be ready to stop it.

I shall be agreeably disappointed if the final outcome of the Spanish war does not advance the frontiers of Germany and Italy toward the continent of America. I greatly fear that the satisfaction of those who have favored the Fascist rebellion in Spain will be short-lived. I cannot envision the Fascist dictators turning Spain over to France and England, or relinquishing the military advantages won by Fascist blood and money in Spain. They are on the march and they must continue.

There are other eventualities in the making on the map of the world which behoove us to be prepared. They are in the Pacific. It is as certain as sunrise that when Japan has completed her program on the Asiatic mainland and consolidated her gains and gotten under her control the material resources, she will face the question mark overhanging the Pacific. Now we are in a controversy over the suggested fortification of Guam. I am not ready with the answer.

I am ready, however, to say that it must be fortified soon or abandoned later.

If we could draw that imaginary line in the Pacific from the tip of the Aleutian Islands to Australia, and get an unbreakable guaranty that the line would stay there for even 30 years, I would be willing to relinquish what is on the other side of it. But if anything has been proved in the last 30 years it is that international guaranties are absolutely worthless; the neutrality of Belgium was worthless; the Nine Power Pact was worthless; the Washington naval disarmament agreement was worthless, the agreement, in the execution of which, as Will Rogers aptly said, "We sunk our ships and England sunk her blueprints."

There is no assurance whatever in treaties of peace, and there is none in neutrality acts. We have passed three neutrality acts in the past 4 years, and all of them not only unworkable, but dangerous. We have found that you cannot blueprint a future course of international conduct today and have it fit the picture tomorrow.

International friendship is a diplomatic myth. It shatters under very slight provocation. We are not blameless. If it is even suspected that the President is making a gesture of friendship to the democracies of England and France against the fascist dictators of Europe, the outcry goes over the land, in the language of the late Herbert Hoover, that "the President is leading the country down the road to war."

We have chosen a policy of isolation and we must be able to defend it against the world. It has been well said that neutrality is a good thing if you are able to defend it. We need a stronger defense than if we had an alliance with England and France: A Navy and an air force equal to the best, with a margin of safety in case of doubt; a military establishment such as is contemplated in the pending legislation; arms and munition plants capable of rapid expansion to large production; and constant research in the field of improvement in arms and munitions.

Some opponents of such a program here on Capitol Hill say we already have such an establishment. I hope they are right. Unfortunately for me, some of the gentlemen here on the Hill who specialize on foreign policy and the national defense are peculiarly unconvincing. There is a marked note of unsoundness running through everything they say. The more they talk the more I thank God they are not in a position to do anything else.

Two Members of this body who are very vocal along these lines, as recently as last October proposed to impeach the President for his failure to enforce the Neutrality Act and lay an embargo against Japan, notwithstanding all the other signatories to the nine-power pact under which Japan guaranteed the inviolability of China, were refusing to act. To my ears, their views on the national defense and foreign policy are as "tinkling cymbals and sounding brass." They do, however, serve to muddle the mind of the country, and make more difficult the great responsibilities devolving on the President. It is reassuring to note that the press, regardless of politics, is criticizing them and supporting the administration.

Democracies are at one great disadvantage as compared with dictatorships. Democracies have no secrets. They have to conduct their business touching the national defense and foreign policy on the town-hall plan, with an international hook-up. It is demanded that the President and the Secretary of State come up to Congress and tell the world just what they are doing, and why. A whisper in Washington echoes in Berlin and Tokyo the same day. Perhaps it makes little difference whether state secrets are spilled at open hearings or relayed from congressional committee rooms. There is one secret I hope they will all ultimately possess fully, the secret that we are ready, willing, and able.

If we are asked where we are going to get the money for a great armament program, there are two answers: One is, we are still the richest Nation on earth, with a superabundance of everything. The other is, money is not necessary. Three comparatively small, impoverished nations, with meager natural resources, are remaking the map of the world. There is an aspect of Germany worth considering. Ten years ago she was prostrate and helpless. Today Germany is the most feared power in Europe, with Hitler building a greater empire than Bismarck. So let us not worry too much about the cost.

My ideas of foreign policy are sketchy and changeable, although I would prefer an axis of democracies against the dictatorships. My ideas about neutrality acts are about as muddled as the acts themselves, but I am consoled by the reflection that if I could write a perfect law it would not work either. But in one field I am disturbed by no doubt whatever. In five Congresses I have voted for every dollar carried in every bill for the national defense and I shall do so in this Congress.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who just preceded me mentioned the situation we were in at the time of the last war in regard to equipment in France, and I think that brings up perhaps the most important part of this whole program. It is not a spectacular part of our program, such as the air-defense part of it, but it is something that is essential to preparedness, and that is the furnishing of the equipment for our troops. In this program the Army has laid out a proposition to furnish equipment for what they call the initial protective force, the force that they would call upon first to defend this country if attacked.

That force is nothing more nor less than the present standing Regular Army and National Guard, augmented to some degree by the Regular Army Enlisted Reserve. It would amount to a total of some 400,000 men, when we have in the Enlisted Reserve the total number which we expect, over the period of the next 3 or 4 years. At the present time it would not reach 400,000 men, but we hope to get it up to that figure. It is the peacetime standing Army and National Guard of the country. Today we are very deficient in weapons and in ammunition merely for that force. We do not have modern rifles; we do not have sufficient ammunition even for war-time rifles and artillery for that force itself.

In this program—although not included in this bill, because the present authorizations will allow its manufacture if we furnish the funds this year, but in this year's extraordinary national-defense program—we provide $110,000,000 to bring up to a better condition the ammunition and weapons of that initial protective force of our Regular Army and the National Guard. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] said, I think that is about the most important, although not the most spectacular, part of this program. That will not furnish those 400,000 men the necessary equipment and ammunition to carry them over until we can start bringing in ammunition in quantity, if they are engaged in war, under our present set-up. It would take about $430,000,000 to properly equip that force of 400,000 men. With $110,000,000 we can furnish some of the most important items, however, such as the semiautomatic rifles, modernization of the artillery, and completion of most of our antiaircraft regiments.

There is another program which we entered into last year, for which we carry $32,500,000 additional authorization in this bill, which will go a long way toward making it possible for us to produce, if we should be in war or a national emergency, the ammunition and equipment to furnish this initial protective force and the troops which follow it with ammunition and equipment, as I have said. That is the educational orders program. It takes a long while to manufacture those items of military equipment. Most of them are not manufactured in peacetime on any commercial basis. Even those which were turned out in great quantities during the World War cannot be made now, because in most cases the tools have been destroyed, in some cases the plants have gone out of business, and in all cases the men who made them have largely gone out of the industry today. So that it takes anywhere from 4 to 18 months, on the average, to tool a plant to start to get into production of these war munitions. Even with regard to the smaller munitions, such as ordinary steel shells, it takes a long time to get the plants tooled and actually into production.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Last year we entered into a program to place small orders with commercial plants to allow them to tool-up to turn out munitions in peacetime. We did not do that to furnish any physical reserve of those munitions. The peacetime production of munitions is still in our arsenals, but we wanted to equip private plants with the machinery and with the experience, so that in case of war they could go into production after a reasonable length of time, so that we would not be held up as we were during the World War, 17 or 18 months, before we could get into production.

In this program we included 55 critical items—items which the War Department considers absolutely necessary. The program of educational orders, of training the industry, will cut down the time it will take to get these items in quantity on an average about 8 months. It will run from 4 months' saving in time on some items to 11 months on others, and the average saving will be about 8 months. We know from experience that actually we are not going to build up a great physical reserve of munitions which we will need in case of war. We do not appropriate the money to do that.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I wish the gentleman would explain to the membership of the committee just the difficulty that the evidence disclosed was encountered in the matter of providing the necessary tools and implements, and whether or not there are probably two or three thousand different kinds in some different machines necessary to the manufacture of certain parts of munitions.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Many of these items are complicated and difficult to manufacture and require a great many aids to manufacture. The 50-caliber machine gun, for instance, requires some 4,500 different tools, jigs, dies, and fixtures to set up one production line for the production of that one instrument. It is not the most complicated, but it is one that we need in time of war, and one which our arsenals cannot turn out in large quantities. It would take many months to make those tools to set up a production line in any private industry.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The provision in the bill providing for educational orders deals with products that are entirely noncommercial in their nature and which do not go on the commercial market at all.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. That is entirely true. The noncommercial nature of the items is the thing which makes it impossible to secure them on short notice in case of emergency. We need some such preparation.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Does this bill provide, as part of our preparation, for laying up a further stock pile of critical materials such, for instance, as manganese?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. This bill does not provide for any such stock-pile reserve. I believe the regular War Department appropriation bill will carry an item providing for part of the necessary stock pile of some of these items.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. For the last 2 years the Navy Department bills have provided for such stock piles.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. But they have been very inadequate.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that it might be well to provide for the production of this critical material within our own country, as a further safeguard?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. In those cases and where it can be done at a fairly reasonable cost and where the quantity would be adequate to be of value to us in case of emergency.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am told that I introduced the first educational-order bill that was ever introduced in Congress. At that time I was told that unless these jigs and dies, and so forth, were made and the work kept up we would lose the men skilled in such fine machine work and that in a short time it would be impossible to make them without long delay because of the absence of skilled workmen.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Although there are many machine-tool men out of work today, it is true that war-time needs would create a great and serious shortage of that type of skilled workmen. The War Department has been seeking to inaugurate such a program ever since the World War, and we finally started on it last year. As I say, $32,500,000 additional authorization for educational orders is carried in this bill and will cover some 55 critical items. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak a few words on behalf of the aeromechanic, who will become a very important factor under this bill.

The aeromechanic is not trained in a day or two; he is a man who has arrived at his position in the airplane industry through long training and experience. It has been found that those who enter the airplane industry from other types of production parallel to it, such as the automobile industry, do not readily grasp the methods of production in the manufacture of planes. If we conduct this program in such a way that at one time there is large production and at another time small production, we shall vitally affect the welfare of these mechanics. I believe the thing to do is to adopt the program of constant airplane production proposed by the minority so that the mechanics may be well trained and continue in the industry rather than float off in other directions.

Another subject I would like to mention and bring to the attention of all those present is that one of the most important items of national defense is a smooth-running, prosperous industry and commerce all over the United States. This, I believe, is the very foundation of a true national defense. Secondly, we discovered in the World War that probably the first line of national defense was our agriculture. This is not the time to go into this subject, but I hope that in considering the legislation now before us, and bearing in mind throughout the session the needs of national defense, the Members will recognize that when we so restrict our crops that it is necessary to import a great quantity of agricultural products we are not developing our own agricultural resources against the day when we may need them. To have true national defense we must not be faced with the necessity of importing foodstuffs but must grow them at home; we must be freed of dependence on a merchant marine to bring us agricultural products from foreign countries. [Applause.] The merchant marine must be otherwise engaged if war should come.

These are merely points that have to do with our national defense. I shall not enlarge on them at this time, but will do so at a later date.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN].

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a copy of a letter from the national president of the Workers' Alliance of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would have to submit the request to include other matter when we go back in the House.

Mr. BOREN. I withdraw that part of my request for the moment, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is a very fine piece of work. It covers the field in splendid fashion.

MILLIONS FOR DEFENSE; NOT ONE CENT FOR DEFIANCE

The construction of war planes is an evident necessity for our national defense. More than a year ago the International News Service carried the expression of my views on this subject in relation to a program of aviation training similar to the present program of Reserve officer training in the United States. On the naval bill of last year I was one of those who expressed a wish to see one less battleship built and the use of that $60,000,000 in the construction of airplanes. I am not unaware of the need of the country for the other equipment for defense, but I am convinced that the next war—and I am dreadfully afraid that the next world war is an almost certain event—will find aviation a far more important factor than we have recognized in our expenditures for the national defense. I recognize the need for an adequate navy, but I remember all the experts before the Naval Affairs Committee last year agreed that one ship near its base was equal to three ships the width of an ocean away from their base; and so if it would take three American ships to defeat one British ship in British waters, the converse is true, and our program should be directed accordingly. I think the determining factor as to what we should do on this and subsequent bills, at least by title "for the national defense," should be based on a clear and definite determination as to whether or not our armaments are to be used on this side of the Atlantic and the Pacific or on the other side. I, for one, am determinedly opposed to the use of our armaments for any purpose other than strictly defensive purposes for the American continents and the insular possessions of the United States.

I would remind you that the price of one battleship would pay the cost of 250 of the largest war planes known to human invention, and it would be hard to convince me that I could not send 250 war planes to the Philippines to sink a single battleship and still be certain of the return of a good proportion of those ships after the destruction of the foe defined.

Our preparations for the national defense cannot be intelligently directed until we first determine the lines of that defense. I am willing to spend millions for the defense of the Americas but not one cent nor one life as a sacrifice to European or Asiatic entanglements. I want the American military branches shod with impregnable materials for defense, but I do not want to give our military establishments seven-league boots with which to step across the Atlantic or Pacific to perpetuate an imaginary diplomatic line of defense, unrecognized by the people of America as their objective and defined by the diplomacy of secrecy and a policy of saber-rattling, unwanted and disapproved by the elected representatives of the people of the United States.

What we want in America is peace. We want to go about our ways unmolested. We want peace built on the quiet self-assurance of our unquestionable ability to defend ourselves against aggressors or invasion of our rights and realms.

Let us once and for all discard the ancient and futile theory of secrecy. Let us define in unquestionable terms what our objectives are; what we will and will not do; what we will and will not permit; let the world and the American people have a frank understanding. We here in the Congress should guarantee to the people of America that the perpetual war taxation in time of peace shall be directed only to the certain arrest of lawless operations against American realms or American rights and liberties. There is no question but that every straight-thinking man, woman, and child in America wants peace. We should let the world know that. There is also no question but that every thinking man, woman, and child in America has the courage and the determination to give his life and his property for the defense of our country if necessity should arise for the physical expression of that courage and determination. The American philosophy is simple and understandable. If I came to your house tonight and you should insult me and order me out of the house I would go without question and without combat. If you should come to my house tonight and insult me and order me out of my house, by the eternal, there would be a different story. This simple philosophy is applicable to the position of the United States in reference to all other countries in the community of nations.

Let us remember that the greatest evil connected with rival armaments is that they destroy the strongest motives for peace. Surely, the World War has given to America some idea of the predisposing power which an immense series of preparations for war has in actually begetting war. Armaments familiarize ideas which lose their horrors. They feed an inward flame of excitement which, when it becomes habitual, produces a loss of consciousness for peace.

Just as I am determined to protect the sanctity of my home, even though I lose my life in that determination, I am determined to protect the security of America and am willing to take all the steps for the security of the Nation which I would take for the security of my home under similar evidences of need, but I must be certain on every piece of legislation that arises here that the adequacy of preparation is determined on the basis of protection insurance only. We are spending this year twice as much in armaments as the war year of 1917-18, and I am obliged to consider whether this war taxation is not required for circumstances and objects far different from those which a time of peace requires.

The evident need for a growth in our military establishments does not convince me that these establishments should become overgrown. I fear that this headlong rush for preparation is seeking military armaments in a proportion which belongs to a state of war rather than a state of peace.

The probability of a World War is evident, and the historic lessons of war must certainly convince us that no matter what result, nothing of any practical value to mankind will be gained by war. I am reminded of Robert Southey's reminiscences on the Battle of Blenheim.

"Now tell us what 'twas all about,"
Young Peterkin, he cries,
And little Wilhelmine looks up
With wonder-waiting eyes—
"Now tell us all about the war
And what they killed each other for."
"It was the English," Kaspar cried,
"That put the French to rout;
But what they fought each other for
I could not well make out."

And again I remember that Alice Corbin says:

If war is right, then God is might
And every prayer is vain.

Yet we went into the World War in the belief that the war was right. Our entrance was popular in America. We fought in the delusion that the war would make the world safe for democracy, and I repeat today the indisputable fact that nothing of any practical value to America or to mankind was gained by our entrance into that war. The belief that animated the people was that western civilization was threatened in its essential conceptions of individual and political liberty and now, in 1939, as it was a little more than 20 years ago, the same voice is raised with the same cry. Surely the lessons of the last great war are worth a moment's consideration. Do we have to discover many times over again, as we must learn after a war, that little or nothing has been gained by all the fighting?

The Crimean War is an outstanding example of the stupidity of the so-called world diplomacy. Multiplied thousands of lives and multiplied millions of dollars were spent to maintain the mythical balance of power. History has not failed to remind us, also, that wars have been fought to preserve holy places on the theory that there is no better way than using gunpowder and bayonets just to show a Christian nation's religious fervor.

The doctrine of the balance of power has become a tradition of so-called diplomacy and, let me say once and for all, that I do not care a tinker's dam about maintaining the balance of power in Tunisia or in Hong Kong if it means that we must fortify the island of Guam, shoot another $20,000,000,000 into hell, and sacrifice another 100,000 lives on the fields of battle. Another thing we have greatly overestimated is the importance of great armaments to see to it that certain capitalists "have a place in the sun" and that the missionaries we do not need at home shall not lose their lives abroad.

The responsibility of America to maintain the balance of power between the so-called democracies and the so-called totalitarian states is simply a new assertion of the ancient myth called balance of power. Millions of lives in many ages have been sacrificed in battle to help pay the bill for maintaining the balance, and now we are told that America must come quickly to the aid of England and France to maintain the balance of power. We sacrificed thousands of lives and spent billions of dollars for England and France some 20 years ago, but I do not see anything in the world that was preserved or maintained as a result of that war to be worth that sacrifice. The balance of power has been constantly shifting, unbalanced throughout the centuries. Never was such a wobbly thing invented to inflict so much misery on mankind.

Let us here today indict the perpetrator of the crime of war. Let us connect so-called diplomacy with the horrors of war, which is diplomacy's premeditated crime. I want it clearly understood that these remarks are not directed against any individual and particularly have no intent to disparage our great Secretary of State, who, in my judgment, is one of the ablest and wisest men that has ever held that high post. Such men, ministers and secretaries of state, are here today and gone in the cycle of tomorrow, but the upstree of traditional diplomacy remains. The utterly false idea that the term diplomacy is synonymous with peace has crept into the minds of the people and there remains. We, in America have accepted the ridiculous propaganda that foreign policy is something too complicated for the understanding of an ordinary citizen. So the machinations of our so-called diplomats seldom reach the mind of the majority of our people. A little while ago the propagandists cited the great achievements of the Lima conference. I feel certain that anyone who is under the impression that the unification of the Americas was accomplished in that conference is greatly misled. I am, personally, of the opinion that the tangle and wrangle of that conference was equal to the quarrels of a pack of fishwives with the exception that there was some suppression and disguise of attitudes and motives.

I believe a great idealism gave birth to the doctrine of collective security and has promoted the subsequent trade agreements of the good-neighbor policy; but, while America has given full faith to these programs, even to the favored-nation endowments, the actions and methods of other countries in relation to us in those agreements are comparable to the old first Mondays in which all the horse traders came to the swapping place and, in this instance, as sometimes occurred there, all profited on an unlearned and unsuspecting buyer. I challenge anyone to show that the bargains of the so-called trade agreements have in any instance satisfied either the seller or the buyer. I am of the opinion also that in the drives of 1940-41, or of whatever period the next great outbreak comes, these treaties will go up in a whirlwind as so many more scraps of paper.

We are about to engage in another great carnage with the whole world, dedicated to the idea that a Hitler or a Mussolini must be subdued because he is a danger to the peace of the world and a menace to democracy. A little more than a century ago the vast majority of the millions of Europe believed it was absolutely necessary for nations to sacrifice thousands of lives and millions of dollars in subduing Napoleon because he was a danger to the peace of the world and a menace to democracy.

A constant carnage and destruction through a score of years covered fields extending from Moscow to Africa and at last the monster was subdued, but the nations did not beat their swords into plowshares, nor decide battleships would be required no more. If it is our purpose to destroy Hitler or Mussolini, we might direct our efforts against the individual rather than against a nation. Is it not just a little bit silly to remember that millions of people were engaged in an attempt to arrest and bring to justice the Kaiser, who was a danger to the peace of the world and a menace to democracy, and, though the blood of American youth was poured out on European battlefields, that arch criminal lives in peace and quiet, enjoying the comforts and the luxuries of his castle at Doorn?

When all the periodicals and the speakers in America start telling the people that they must fight again for the protection and in the interests of the people, remember that that is what they told us in the World War, while the Kaiser was telling the German boys the same thing, the Czar was telling the same story to the Russians, and the French Government was telling the French people that they should all be slain for their own benefit. Soon they will be telling us that same story. Hitler will be telling it to Germans, Mussolini to Italians, Stalin to Russians, and the French and British Governments to their own people. Just this moment they are repeating the horrid lie that arms in themselves mean peace—a lie that is as old as the ages and that has robbed labor and industry in every nation of the world. It has become a parent to the orphan and consort to the widow of every land and clime.

So-called democracies have always fought presumably for the principles of democracy, and I agree that they are worth fighting for, but I think we could better be putting these principles into practice and in due time the principles will fight for themselves. Let us remember that little more than 100 years ago Great Britain said of Napoleon what she had said of predecessors of Napoleon. Let us remember that a little more than a score of years ago Great Britain said of the Kaiser what she had said of Napoleon, and let us realize that today Great Britain is saying of Hitler what she said of the Kaiser. Let us also remember that Great Britain's seizure of territory throughout the world followed very much the same course in other days which has been followed by these totalitarian states in more recent times. The whole theory of justice to Great Britain seems to be based on the theory that possession is nine points of the law, since Great Britain has taken possession of India, Egypt, and other portions of the globe too numerous to mention.

I doubt if there are any religious persecutions in the world which would justify our militant concern. Let us remember that a great many of those leaders of religious bodies did not hesitate to identify themselves with the business of warfare and its dividends just 20 years ago.

It is well that America consider very carefully the ghastly proportions and possibilities of another war. There never was a single year when Napoleon's government voted even the price of one present-day battleship for total naval purposes. Today a street urchin could tell Napoleon things about explosives and submarines that would make his hair stand on end. Our Americans cannot conceive of the differences of the proportions of war between the time of Napoleon and the present day. It is beyond my imagination to grasp the fact that the total cost of the Revolutionary War, which gave us the land and liberties which we hold dear, was spent in blood and in money in just 4 minutes of the last World War.

And what is the result of these unimaginable costs? The situation of America at the successful close of the World War is worthy of observation. Did peace bring us security? Did peace bring us retrenchment? Did peace bring us relief from burdens? Did peace extend our commerce? Did peace bring us the friendship of the very powers for whom we fought? Did peace bring us wealth, prosperity, and employment?

Of all the countries, the chief one against which we fought has come out of the contest with the least harm.

Now, my colleagues, I wish it were possible for us to put the finger of certainty on our responsible agents, to have every man with any power to entangle us internationally responsible directly to us, who are the selected Representatives of the people of America and who, in turn, are amenable to their constant wish and are directed to the constant service of their welfare. Let me remind you that we, the elected Representatives of the people, do not even know if there is an alliance between this country and France. When Ambassador Bullitt said last year that the United States and France were ineffectively united in peace or in war, I wired the Secretary of State, and the subsequent events in that connection speak for themselves. Every American citizen has the right to know every action of this Government in relation to foreign powers. We do not know what secret scraps of paper exist or what secret understandings. You know there has never been anything like "a scrap of paper" for bringing nations at each other's throats either to keep the scrap of paper whole or to tear it to shreds. England and France have always talked big to the United States and have done little. I am of the opinion that had I been a Czechoslovak I would have fought for the independence of my country, but it is also reasonably clear that the imaginary advantage to the world of maintaining the integrity of Czechoslovakia was scarcely of more importance than the peace of Europe.

We fought a war to give some nations illegitimate birth and those nations that were born from the womb of the World War do not necessarily commit the world to war for their preservation, for, fundamentally, they were created by diplomatic deals of which the people of America knew little and cared less. I think if the American people could detach themselves to cool and calm consideration they would prefer peace to the strict observance of treaties made by men who have never consulted the people of America. Another war would simply mean signing away other peoples' rights and the handing of people themselves to a new-born state to which they owe no allegiance.

I have heard a great deal of maintaining diplomatic honor. The value of diplomatic honor in a game that is carried on without the participation of the people means very little to me. America's prestige and honor has been toused a good deal in the course of its history through diplomatic deals unsought by the American people and unappreciated by the other countries affected. To strike straight at the heart of the problem in America today, we must point out that American diplomacy carries on its work in secret and that our foreign affairs are removed from the notice of the general public.

Even Members of Congress, when considering some foreign policy or some act of our Government in international affairs, are often silenced by the reply that "it would not be to the public interest to give out the information." We have built up mysterious walls around our State Department and it sounds damn silly to me to say that the American people have any interest that is best kept unknown to them. It is like the manager of a department store saying to the owner of the firm that he feels it is for his interest not to know what sales are made that day, but at the same time urges the owner to spend a great amount of money in the new purchase of supplies. I am of the opinion that there is a vast danger in allying ourselves with France who, undoubtedly, would be glad to drag us into war with Italy or Germany and who certainly will, sooner or later, take part in a blaze that will sweep all of Europe in a great conflagration. We have loaded our Nation with debt and taxes and sacrificed the lives of thousands of Americans and desolated the homes of thousands of families for France. The result of that profligate expenditure in the last war: On one end of the social scale, millionaires; on the other end, mendicants and multiplied unemployed.

It is debatable whether one generation has the right to impose the obligations of war on the next generation and we have not clearly differentiated between international affairs that directly affect the true interests of the American people and the traffickings which are done in the name of the people without the people's consent. The grave question of our neutrality is in the minds of the statesman and the man in the street. Undoubtedly, we have already departed from strict neutrality, and it is time now that we make a decision as to whether or not we want to guarantee to the American his place in America or whether we want to assign him to a place in a foreign trench. That decision should be made now and our future actions suited to that decision. As for me, I have decided; I am for defense, not defiance. Millions for defense but not one cent to support foreign entanglements.

This country must not be fettered by secret understandings. We must not have our neutrality destroyed by predilection. I am impressed with the notion that we are committed up to the hilt to support France if she is attacked by a third power. If this is true, our position as a so-called neutral power is ridiculously absurd. Our position appears to be one of secret agreements covered up by diplomatic subterfuge and pretense. The American people are not asses to be hoodwinked by touting diplomats. The policy of the State Department that will permit secret agreements is a most sinister menace to the peace of America. If there are no secret agreements, tacit understandings are equally sinister agents of the historic force known as diplomacy. The American people will support the things that are open and aboveboard and right, but we do not want to be duped.

We are confronted with the most momentous decisions of our generation. No sanctimonious lifting of hands to heaven as though heaven were a colony of America established for the residence of American diplomats can camouflage the truth to my satisfaction. Everybody knows that the people of America have no say as to whether they go to war or not. I do not believe that a popular referendum on that subject is workable, at least not under present facilities for such a referendum and considering conditions that might arise in theoretical circumstances. But certainly, elected representatives of the people should exercise some power over whether this country goes to war or not, because those representatives know what the people of America want and, as a body, will undoubtedly serve the wishes and the welfare of the constituency represented. As I say, everybody knows that the people of America have no voice in whether we go to war or not, but everybody does not know that the representatives of the people, the Congress, has no voice in whether this Nation goes to war or not. You, in the Congress know, though, that we are voiceless on that question. You know that the declaration of war is a formal farce after a state of war already exists. And you know that that state of war is always the result of the actions of the Executive of the Nation and of the State Department? I have a very great admiration and respect for our great President and great Secretary of State. I have confidence in them but that does not mean that I want to abdicate to them on questions of international affairs.

I believe that the people in the Fourth Congressional District of Oklahoma want me to decide in keeping with their interests on questions of international policy. I believe that the people of that great district want national defense but are opposed to entangling us in another European war. I had a good deal of admiration and respect and confidence for Woodrow Wilson, another great President, and William Jennings Bryan, another great Secretary of State; but we all know that the Congress was powerless in the development of those circumstances; we all know that Congress has no voice in the real determination of war or peace. We must either have a determining voice in foreign affairs or we would be better off to abolish the State Department and the systems of so-called diplomacy.

We are in a mad rush of preparations for war. All these preparations parade under the guise of preparations for peace but certainly clear thought can see beyond that mirage. Some of the bills brought in here to increase our national armaments I shall vote for, as I have voted for this bill today to increase the strength of American aviation, but a number of the bills brought in here to expand our armament programs I shall vote against because, as I say, I am willing to spend millions for defense but not one cent for defiance.

While I am thinking about the cost of a battleship, I must necessarily think about the cost of work relief and I must remember the infant mortality, insanity, social diseases, and unemployment which have been increased by the spending for armaments that led us into the last war, and that the army which we muster into service, battalions for war, leave battalions of unemployed in every town in the land when war is over. I am willing to give careful consideration to the battalions needed in an increased military establishment but I must also think of the battalions in the ranks of the American unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, in my home town there are some 2,000 boys on the verge of maturity. Seminole, Okla., at her own expense, has cared for their health, has nurtured and developed them with difficulty and sorrow, has fed them up to manhood, has invested in their education, has trained them to their crafts and trades; and Seminole needs the income from that investment. It needs their services and their productive activity. It needs the work of their brains and their hands.

I presume, sir, that in some village in Germany there are today 2,000 other youths on the verge of maturity. The village, at her own expense, has cared for their health, has nurtured and developed them with difficulty and sorrow, has fed them up to manhood, has invested in their education, has trained them to their crafts and trades, and this village needs the income from that investment. It needs their services and their productive activity. It needs the work of their brains and their hands. And soon we will have to make a decision as to whether this 2,000 shall meet that 2,000 in deadly combat. Presuming that we dressed our 2,000 in khaki and shipped them away at the public expense 3,000 miles to the shores of the Rhine, and at that same spot they are placed in position opposite to the 2,000 from the German village, and in the combat of war they are destroyed, we must bury them with the tears and the heartaches of the mothers who sacrificed for their birth and development, and instead of 2,000 useful craftsmen for Seminole and 2,000 useful craftsmen for the German village, the world has 4,000 corpses and 10,000 broken hearts. Do these men have any quarrel? Not the smallest. They are the entrest of strangers, and the only relation that exists between them is some mutual helpfulness born of commerce. They are destroyed because of simoleon governments, and such is the history of war.

Do you suppose, Mr. Chairman, that anyone in these Halls has such little regard for the welfare of the communities he represents as to vote for sending these boys from their communities into the situation which I have pictured here? Do you suppose, sir, that the diplomats of the world believe that the peoples of the nations would agree to their perpetrating such a system?

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that in these rambling remarks I have dipped here and there in many phases of the general question of international relationship, but I hope that these somewhat disjointed and unorganized remarks will have reflected at least some glimpses of the thoughts that permeate my days, that haunt my nights, and that burden my prayers in the face of the responsibilities here connected with the close approach of war.

Mr. Chairman, I am voting for this bill because I believe it is money spent for adequate defense but I will vote against any measure that goes beyond the purposes of defense because I am opposed to defiance and aggression.

And may I close these remarks with the reminder that I seldom rise to speak on the floor of the House and that I have no wish to bandy words in the waste of time. What I have said today comes from a heart made heavy by my mind's prophecy of another war, and I hope that my words and actions may contribute something toward directing this Nation away from war.

I charge every American to acquaint himself with the facts that the diplomatic relations of America and of most all the nations of the world are conducted absolutely without responsibility to the peoples of the nations of the world or to their elected representatives, and America is no exception in any sense or application. Our foreign affairs are conducted by agents who have absolutely no tangible responsibility to the people or the representatives of the people of the United States. It is a bad system, so bad that we would be better off to have it destroyed rather than to have it as it is.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are headed for war, but not with my consent, and every step that we take in that direction will be taken over my protest and opposition. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress, had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, on August 18, 1920, the sixteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution of the United States. This was, if you recall, at the end of President Wilson's administration, a Democratic administration. Similar to many other measures enacted under the present administration, the sixteenth amendment was "love's labor lost."

The sixteenth amendment is unusual because it was not needed, and it accomplished only one purpose—that of prohibiting the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

The power to lay and collect taxes has always been a part of the Constitution. I quote article I, section 8, paragraph 1:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

And I quote for comparison amendment 16:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Under section 8 the power to collect taxes is entirely in the hands of Congress, and so is the power to issue tax-exempt securities; but under the sixteenth amendment "taxes on incomes from whatever source derived" conflicts with section 8, because it specifies income, and more or less makes it mandatory upon the Federal Government to collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived; and in such income we may include all securities which have been tax-exempt. Section 8 leaves Congress free to lay taxes for the general welfare of the United States, while amendment 16 ends in a blind alley.

INTERPRETATION OF H. R. 3790

Mr. Speaker and Members of Congress, on January 19 Congress was informed, in the President's message, that legislation should be enacted to stop the Treasury Department from levying retroactive income taxes on salaries of innocent offenders. On January 30 and February 7, in a discussion before the House, I said the sixteenth amendment did not contain power for retroactive taxation, and that salary was not the same as income, and therefore not subject to income tax. On February 9, H. R. 3790 was introduced and enacted. The bill cancels retroactive taxes on State employees in all departments. If the President was right and believed his own statement, he approved and recommended the passing of an unconstitutional measure.

This bill—H. R. 3790—provides for mutual taxing power between the Federal Government and all the States.

SEC. 3 The United States hereby consents to the taxation of compensation after December 31, 1938.

The States, however, are not asked to give their consent to such unconstitutional invasion of their rights, but it is instead given for them by their own Representatives in Congress. Forty-eight States were sold out to the Federal Government on February 9, 1939.

Since the enactment of H. R. 3790 I can now understand why we are submerged by a mass of ridiculous laws, archaic and incomprehensible. After watching the House enacting a most contemptible and unconstitutional measure into our Nation's law, I can foresee only national dissolution from the sheer weight of such legislative stupidity.

Congress alone will be responsible and so held by every American citizen. Opinions expressed on this floor as to the responsibility of Congress astonish me. It appears to me that some Members of this body accept the philosophy that the only duty of Congress is to appropriate money and enact legislation. They seem to forget that Congress is responsible to the people for all Government operations. Congress alone has the power to appropriate money, which is a further evidence of its power, for money is needed to pay the Federal Government's expenses.

Congress should, however, bear in mind that the money appropriated is not earned by the Federal Government but is instead earned by the business people in our country, the people whom Congress represents. They are the same people the Congress is dispossessing of property and the right to earn a living therefrom by placing the Federal Government in direct competition with them. Congress is also responsible for enacting legislation which is now used to dispossess our people of their Government and of their constitutional rights, and which is gradually converting a republican democracy into a totalitarian state.

Congress will also be responsible when this Nation becomes involved in internecine conflict—when we become involved in massive strikes and internal revolution.

Congress will be guilty of an unforgivable crime when our children must fight and die to restore a republican democratic government. I say this because there are too many intelligent men and women in the United States who will not tolerate a dictatorial government. I now say that such plans, while reasonably well camouflaged, are contemplated by someone, and it is the duty of Congress to recognize that threat now. Private corporations now owned and operated by the Federal Government are a part of this plan. H. R. 3790, which was enacted here last Thursday, February 9, is another move to obtain control by the Government. The next and necessary step is to establish control of, and to socialize, or communize, medicine. Federal ownership and control of this well-regulated organization is necessary to establish centralization. Such Federal power of regulation and control enhances its appeal for public support through offers of free medical care and free treatment. That, however, is not the real intention of the secret council, the advisers behind this move. It is more insidious and far-reaching than that. Control of medicine opens private homes to dissemination of false and misleading information, and offers an unparalleled opportunity for propaganda. My colleagues, of course, know that the Federal Government is employing immense publicity organizations in many departments for no other purpose than to shape public opinion.

No one can stop this but Congress, and if my colleagues fail to recognize danger, as they failed last Thursday when they voted "aye" for H. R. 3790, we cannot but betray the American people.

There is not a Member of this House who would not resent the invasion of his home by local government, and fight to keep it free from such intrusion. That is your constitutional right. Last Thursday you denied that right to the States when you enacted H. R. 3790, as requested by the President.

Every State in the Union will resent invasion and destruction of its sovereign rights. No State will capitulate without fighting to protect the liberties and rights of its people and the honor of the State. That is the State's constitutional right. Those who forced the enactment of H. R. 3790 helped to destroy that much-cherished States' right, which is the bond that binds our Union.

Last Thursday the Republican Party and a few Democrats fought bitterly every step against the enactment of this legislation only to meet overwhelming defeat by the New Deal party majority. After fighting a losing battle some of those who had helped in the fight voted for the passage of the bill, not because they believed in it but to please their constituents at home. I was obligated, with the others, to oppose retroactive taxation, but I shall never obligate myself to destroy constitutional government.

Congress has no power to enforce legislation which destroys the rights of the States and which threatens the sovereignty of the States. Realizing this, I voted "no" to H. R. 3790, to protect not only my own State but every State in this Union, and that is the duty of this Congress.

I shall now call my colleagues' attention to the President's message of January 19, 1939. The first eight paragraphs of this message deal generally with the taxing of Federal, State, or municipal obligations. From paragraph 1 of the President's message I quote:

I urged that the time had come when private income should not be exempt either from Federal or State income tax simply because such private income is derived as interest from Federal, State, or municipal obligations, or because it is received as compensation for services rendered to the Federal, State, or municipal governments.

H. R. 3790 did not touch upon this phase of taxing, and under the sixteenth amendment, all income from Federal and municipal bonds is still taxable under the sixteenth amendment. This cannot be changed by any act of Congress or decision of the Supreme Court. It can only be changed by a constitutional amendment. Note, however, that retroactive taxes cannot be levied or collected under the sixteenth amendment.

Title II of H. R. 3790 sets aside retroactive collection of taxes on the salaries of State employees only, before January 1, 1938. It did not change or influence the sixteenth amendment in any manner, but is instead an amendment to section 22 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1938, an act which in itself is unconstitutional.

I said in a previous discussion before this House that the sixteenth amendment does not provide for taxation upon salaries but only upon income from whatever source derived. If this is not true, why is special reference made to tax on salaries in the Revenue Act of 1938 and in H. R. 3790? The title of H. R. 3790 is: "That this act may be cited as the 'Public Salary Tax Act of 1939,'" and I now quote section 22 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1938, as amended:

"Gross income" includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including personal service as an officer or employee of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership, or use of, or interest in such properties; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever. In the case of Presidents of the United States and judges of courts of the United States taking office after July 6, 1932, the compensation received as such shall be included in gross income; and all acts fixing the compensation of such Presidents and judges are hereby amended accordingly.

The sixteenth amendment reads:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

If the sixteenth amendment had read "taxes on incomes and salaries from whatever source derived," section 22 of the Revenue Act of 1938 would have been unnecessary.

In the President's message to Congress January 19, 1939, he said—paragraph 8:

Unless the Congress passes some legislation dealing with this situation prior to March 15, I am informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that he will be obliged to collect back taxes for at least 3 years upon the employees of many State agencies and upon the security holders of many State corporate instrumentalities, who mistakenly but in good faith believed they were tax exempt. The assessment and collection of these taxes will doubtlessly in many cases produce great hardship.

Paragraph 9:

Accordingly, I recommend legislation to correct the existing inequitable situation, and at the same time to make private income from all Government salaries hereafter earned and from all Government securities hereafter issued subject to the general income-tax laws of the Nation and of the several States. It is difficult for almost all citizens to understand why a constitutional provision permitting taxes on "income from whatever source derived" does not mean "from whatever source derived."

If "income" is synonymous with "salary," and so held by the Constitution, as the President and Secretary of the Treasury claim to believe, why did Congress enact the Revenue Act of 1938, and, if the sixteenth amendment has retroactive taxing power, as the President and the Secretary of the Treasury claim it has, why did the President recommend the passing of H. R. 3790 to cancel such retroactive taxing power, a clearly unconstitutional procedure? As a matter of fact, no one should get very much disturbed about it because the sixteenth amendment never had retroactive taxing power, and it has not been changed by this act.

The title of H. R. 3790, which is "Public Salary Tax Act," should be changed to read, "The Internecion Tax Act," for it is that and nothing else. First, when the Federal Government and State governments begin to tax each other, the end of free government is near. It can only terminate in vicious taxing between governments, and no doubt will end in dissension, strife, and even loss of life. Second, it is a direct attack on the sovereignty of the States by Federal invasion and taxing of all State employees, a clear violation of amendments 9 and 10 in the Bill of Rights.

Contrary to the President's opinion many people understand the Constitution. They should because it is for their own protection. The people understand that the President obligates himself to "preserve, protect, and defend" their law, the Constitution. And they also understand that the President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

In paragraph 8 the President referred to those "who mistakenly but in good faith believe they were tax exempt." The people are not mistaken, but the Government is. For tax-exempt securities are issued to the people by the Government so Congress can borrow money on the credit of the United States. I realize that exemption of such income is in violation of the sixteenth amendment, but it cannot be blamed on the people.

To force bills through Congress is easy because of its personnel and the position its Members take in relation to the President. It is hazardous for a Member to question constitutionality without inviting ridicule or patient toleration for every one lives in dread of the opinion of the Supreme Court. Yet the Supreme Court is by no means infallible. Its split decisions are evidence of that. The proper thing, of course, would be for Congress to pass on the constitutionality of all legislation. But how can anyone expect a Member to interpose his own opinion when some day he might otherwise be eligible for a district or Supreme Court judgeship?

The psychology of Congress favors the passing of all legislation if it is recommended by the President, the Attorney General, or some department having access to proper advice. It seems to be easier to do that than it would be to look up the constitutionality of the proposed measure, as should be done by every Member of Congress. I can find no better example nor more recent one than H. R. 3790. Whoever drafted this resolution endeavors to prove its right of existence, not upon the Constitution but, instead, upon a decision rendered in the case of Helvering v. Gerhardt (304 U. S. 405). This decision is incorporated in H. R. 3790, and is used to establish the right of retroactive taxing. No further evidence is required than this to show that Congress relies upon decisions of the courts to prove constitutionality instead of upon the Constitution itself.

Many seem to forget that decisions involving a constitutional question must not be based upon previous decisions, but, instead, upon the Constitution itself. If everyone adhered to that, no doubt there would be only a few split decisions on this issue. It would certainly be a blessing to the American Nation, because we are overburdened with unconstitutional laws, and that in reality is the cause of our trouble today. We have a massive legal structure, too cumbersome and too costly to administer, full of restrictions, so that our own people become victims of persecution by their own laws.

Let us review the past so as to get straight on this issue. All of you, of course, are aware of the tremendous publicity bureau which is operating in Washington to shape public opinion in favor of the administration. I cannot but compliment this organization on its success. Early last year information leaked out inadvertently, as is customary, that the Treasury Department contemplated taxing back salaries of State employees. They, of course, became more or less disturbed about it, and rightly so, because their salaries cannot withstand such extra taxes. The purpose of this propaganda was to start a flow of resolutions to Representatives in Congress against such law. I received many of them and I am sure that others were equally well supplied. Members of Congress immediately stepped up in front and said, "We are opposed to it. Don't you folks at home worry about it, because we will fight against it." This is the beginning. On January 19, 1939, the President in his message said that if a law were not passed to stop it the Secretary of the Treasury would be forced to collect back taxes for at least 3 years. That was all. Some more resolutions came in and powerful support was indicated in favor of the enactment of legislation against retroactive taxation.

Now, another pause and a measure comes to the House in the form of H. R. 3790, not to stop retroactive taxation, except as a gesture, but instead to tax the salaries of all State employees, who had never been taxed before. That was not all. It knocked the sovereignty of the States into a cocked hat, and I do not believe a State in the Union will submit to this measure.

If the Members of Congress had read the Constitution, I do not believe the measure would have passed; but the stage was set by the secret propaganda council and the President favored the passage of the bill. It was enacted by a large majority. But remember, it did not change the retroactive taxing power for that never existed in the sixteenth amendment or anywhere else in the Constitution. It did violate the ninth, tenth, and the sixteenth amendments. It violated the ninth and tenth because the Federal Government invades the States' domain and the sovereign rights of the States. It violated the sixteenth amendment because it repealed retroactive taxes on the salaries of State employees. The Government has not observed the sixteenth amendment because it has failed to collect taxes on income from whatever source derived; namely, Federal, State, and municipal bonds, the so-called tax-exempt securities held by private investors.

Today the newspapers are full of war news and the State Department is beating the war drums. The State and other departments talk about foreign governments and meddle in their affairs, while their own Government is tottering and wobbling on the mountain of unsound policies. Congress sits here and lays golden eggs for the wonder boys who run the Government by graphs, charts, and statistics. They are the boys who make the profit on paper and balance budgets by borrowing more money on the credit of the United States. We seem to be unable to determine whether legislation is constitutional, and the Supreme Court fails to do any better, judging by the mass of unconstitutional and unsound legislation now in force.

Can we reach a department head on the phone? No. They are either too important or too busy to be bothered with Members of Congress. They seem to live in a world of their own and are using the Representatives in Congress for a convenience to them. It is even difficult to reach the third and fourth assistant secretaries of the various departments and multitudinous bureaus. The best the Members of Congress can do is to talk to the telephone operator in the office, and she does not know what it is all about. We have a vacuolated Capital, swarming with jaywalkers. One wonders where they all came from. Congress is stampeded into acquiescence by some unknown force and enacts unsound and unconstitutional legislation of which H. R. 3790 is an example. The majority in Congress seems to believe that it is representing the President and the New Deal party instead of the people in the United States, who are not only paying the salary of Congress but all other expenses as well. It is my desire to warn this body that if Congress does not take an interest, the Nation is going to explode, and for that no one will be responsible except the Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Father, we praise Thee that the light of another day has broken on our mortal vision. Duties await us; responsibilities are upon us. May the words of our mouth and the meditations of our heart be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the morning press carries the account of the meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor at Miami, Fla., on yesterday, at which time they issued what is to my mind a momentous statement on the economic conditions of the country. The American Federation of Labor, long a potent factor in advancing the cause of the workers of America, represents the great conservative opinion of American labor. The statement of Mr. Green representing the council follows hereafter. I was particularly impressed with his statement that it is the duty of the Government to remove "fear, lack of confidence, and distrust from the path of industrial expansion." Also the statement "we cannot accept the reasoning of those who maintain that we must prepare to maintain constantly an army of unemployed as the wards of the Government." Mr. Speaker, this statement coming from the ranks of labor is significant. It is also fundamentally true.

In line with this sentiment, I take the liberty of quoting from a speech I made in the House of Representatives on April 4, 1938, when the House had under consideration the reorganization bill. I quote a brief paragraph from that speech:

Increased costs of Government mean an added burden to every citizen of our land from the highest to the humblest. Every workman bending under the burden of the costs of living; every housewife as she goes to market; every farmer as he strives to overcome a disjointed economic order, pays tribute to the tax gatherer as he passes among us to collect his toll. Nothing we could do would so quickly bring back confidence and start anew the wheels of progress as to make a real serious effort to set our financial house in order. Nothing we could do would bring such a sense of security to our workers as to reassure business and industry that we meant what we said about reducing the burdensome costs of Government.

Events which have transpired since the date of this speech convinces me that nothing we can do would be so helpful to American labor as to set about seriously to stabilize our economic conditions so that the workers would be called back to regular and permanent employment and not be forced to rely for their daily bread upon a hand-out from the Government. The statement of the American Federation of Labor executive council is, in part, as follows:

We are firmly convinced that various forms of Government spending, either in the distribution of relief or in the development and maintenance of work projects designed to supply relief wages to unemployed, can only serve as temporary measures and cannot and do not provide a permanent solution for unemployment.

The market for the sale of goods and services can be increased and enlarged only through the application of a sound, economic policy whereby there is placed in the hands of the masses of the people a buying power which will enable them to buy, use, and consume the manufactured goods and services which private industry is prepared to supply.

This leads to the inevitable conclusion that private industry and business generally should be stimulated so that the facilities of production may be increased and millions more working men and women may be employed.

What can be done and what should be done, therefore, are the problems which, at the moment, call for consideration and a proper solution. We do not believe that the Nation has reached the maximum in production or consumption of manufactured goods. For that reason we cannot accept the reasoning of those who maintain that we must prepare to maintain constantly an army of unemployed as the wards of the Government. We must turn to private industry for the solution. It should and must serve the Nation. Our national interests require that private industry be accorded the widest opportunity to do so. Obviously, the next step must be the establishment of credit and the will and purpose, on the part of the owners of industry, to risk, invest, build, and construct. The basis for such procedure must be found in the creation of a favorable state of mind. Fear, a lack of confidence, and distrust in governmental, social, and economic procedure, should be removed. A political and economic state of mind should be created which would enable all financiers and the owners and management of industry to face the future with confidence, willing to risk in the expenditure of funds for the development of industrial enterprises and in the manufacture and sale of manufactured products. * * *

Some strong, powerful, and influential representatives of private industry maintain that in order that private enterprise may go forward it is necessary that the rules and laws under which industry should operate should be more definite, clear, and understandable. * * *

The executive council is firmly of the opinion that this issue should be met squarely. All should understand that no new rules or stipulations will be promulgated by some administrative bureau other than the rules and regulations definitely set forth in regulatory statutes enacted by the Congress of the United States. Such action will serve to help business, labor, and the people generally. Under such a plan industrial management would be accorded the widest opportunity to render service in the solution of our unemployment problem.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is with distinct pride, as well as with an appreciation of responsibility, that I rise on this occasion to pay tribute to a great American woman—Susan B. Anthony.

It is not necessary for us to ask what it is that makes a nation great, or what makes America outstanding among the nations of the world. It is not, after all, her enormous and hidden wealth. It is not her landscapes—beautiful and attractive as they may be. It is not her cities, with towering skyscraper buildings, or the immense industries that she has builded. It is not alone her schools or her institutions of learning, that prove the advancement we have made in our civilization. These are of vast importance—but, in addition to these, and of still more significance—America is great because of the splendid record of her noble men and women who have given—yes, even sacrificed—their lives for their country, which we call our own.

In each generation, there are certain men and women who stand out among the mass of our people—men and women who not only have more than ordinary talents—but who are willing and eager to use those talents and sacrifice their very lives in order to give their country and the world certain outstanding contributions that will live through generations to come.

And so today we honor the memory of a great woman. Not alone because she was an illustrious character. Not so much because of her unusual talents, and not only because of the principles which she advocated—but also because of certain basic concepts and beliefs to which she adhered and ever remained steadfast.

Susan B. Anthony was born in Adams, Mass., of Quaker parentage, on February 15, 1820. She was nurtured and reared in the atmosphere of those surroundings, and impressed with the homely virtues of right thinking, right living, thrift, and industry. She had the advantage of a thorough education in accordance with the conditions of the times, and she made the very best possible use of her training. After her graduation, she became a teacher in the schools, and as a young woman—she determined to give her life to champion the cause of woman's rights.

From that time until her death at the age of 87 years—she worked unceasingly for the cause of woman's suffrage. Many books could be written about her half century of pioneering amidst persecution for the emancipation of women, and her crusade for the equal rights amendment to the Constitution, which was proclaimed the law of the land more than 50 years later.

I think it is not unfair for me to digress for a moment, to express appreciation on behalf of the people of my State of Kansas, for the influence of this great woman who came to our commonwealth when Kansas was in its infancy. Miss Anthony spent a considerable amount of time in Kansas. She lectured there in the very days of our statehood. She lived there for a while. Her brother was one of our outstanding Governors. Another brother was one of our early and leading editors. Her nephew represented one of our Kansas districts in this Congress in later years. And so, as a Kansan, I am especially proud of having a part in paying tribute to her this afternoon.

Susan B. Anthony appeared on the horizon at a time when the cause she championed was not only unpopular among men but among women as well. It was for her to kindle the spark of public opinion in favor of the cause of woman suffrage. It is said that public opinion is the greatest factor in America, and when it is refined by the fire of full and free discussion it becomes a wholesome expression of the views of the people.

Susan B. Anthony was encouraged by meeting obstacles and overcoming them. She was strengthened in her cause by her disappointments. For half a century she fought what appeared to be a losing battle. She died at the age of 87 years, seeing her cause only partly achieved, but sincerely believing that righteousness would triumph in the minds of men and women.

And so today we are honored on this occasion by paying tribute to a great woman who belongs with the history makers of this Republic. While she did not begin or end woman's struggle toward equality with man she left upon the whole movement the stamp of her imperishable personality. America is different, is ennobled and enriched, because of the indelible influence of her great character. We honor ourselves today in honoring this distinguished woman. Her life was dedicated to a splendid public service. She is exemplified in the beautiful thought that—

We live in deeds, not years,
In thoughts, not breaths,
In feelings, not in figures on a dial,
We should count time by heart throbs.
He lives most who thinks most,
Feels the noblest—acts the best.

THE MEANINGFUL STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, while Congress weighs the impregnability of our shores and looks to our national defenses, it is by an odd and evil twist of fate that a famous member of the Metropolitan Opera Co. should arrive in Washington and declare that the words of our national anthem are meaningless to our people.

As the echo of marching feet, the drone of fighting planes, and the cries of persecuted minorities roll across the Atlantic from dictator nations to our free shores, it is shocking to learn that an American citizen finds no meaning in those sacred words:

'Tis the star-spangled banner: oh, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

The man credited with the outburst of feeling against The Star-Spangled Banner is Frederick Jagel, American-born tenor, who is appearing in Washington tonight to sing the title role in Lohengrin.

His philosophy is quoted in yesterday's Washington Times-Herald as follows:

The words of that song—it's really not a song but a "glee" written for three voices—mean nothing to an American. They were written on the inspiration of a battle.

And we, in our great land, have no need to glorify battle. * * *

The average person does not know the words of our anthem—and little wonder.

The reason for this is that the words mean nothing in our daily life. * * *

Thus an American opera star, who received considerable of his training in the dictator countries, vociferates nefariously against something near and dear to every school child in the land.

I can take Tenor Jagel into the Eight Congressional District of Michigan, which I represent, where 95 percent of the people, including their Congressman, have never witnessed an opera, and give him a visual lesson on the meaning that song has to those red-blooded citizens.

I can take him to any public school in my district, any Grange hall, church, town building, or other public meeting place, and show him a thrill in those words "This be our motto, 'In God is our trust,' and the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave," not to be found or compared to anything in Lohengrin, even at $3.30 per head, which people will pay to hear Mr. Jagel tonight.

Mr. Jagel may be famed for hitting the high notes in Aida or La Boheme, but he has struck a new low note in disrespect for an anthem that has thrilled Americans for a century and a quarter, if he made the statement published.

From the lips of a country schoolmaster I learned that The Star-Spangled Banner was written to glorify a victory and the glorious sight of the stars and stripes waving in the sunlight following a jittery and desperate night in which the future of the Nation hung in the balance.

Furthermore, this opera star appears to be distressed by the fact this famous poem is sung to the tune of a song made famous by a club founded in a London coffee house half a century before the British raid on Baltimore's Fort McHenry. Numerous contradictory claims have been made, but, granting it to be the case, shall we likewise discard our laws because they are founded on old English laws?

Whose tune was used when music was applied to the historic poem is beside the point, for it appears that by common consent Americans adopted that particular arrangement of musical notes and have applied them lustily in proclaiming to the world their pride in The Star-Spangled Banner for many, many decades. The musical arrangement is not the worst part of Mr. Jagel's complaint.

The resolvable phase of his utterance is the implication the words of the song are meaningless.

With the crumbled ruins of tottered democracies strewn on the face of the earth today, place yourself in a position similar to that of Francis Scott Key in a night of anguish during which you knew not whether the morrow would find your land of freedom manacled once again by a foreign power or whether out of the confusion would come some symbol that bravery prevailed and that the Nation was preserved.

Feel the thrill that coursed the veins of Francis Scott Key when time reached the threshold of dawn on that memorable day and he and members of his party strained their eyes to peer through the fog suddenly to see the first beam of sunlight flash on our flag waving above those ramparts so gallantly defended. Would you still say these are meaningless words? Hardly so.

Mr. Speaker, to this proposal to streamline the national anthem may I affix a thousand times "no," and as for my choice between The Star-Spangled Banner and some other scheme of song proposed by the Metropolitan Opera star, give me the song inspired by Old Glory at Fort McHenry.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the authority conferred upon the Speaker by House Resolution 65 and House Resolution 90 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints the following minority Members of the House to fill the existing vacancies on the Special Committee on Wildlife Conservation: MESSRS. HOLMES, of Massachusetts; ANGELL, of Oregon; and KEEFE, of Wisconsin.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3791, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss just one or two features of this bill in the few minutes allotted to me. In the beginning I may say I am heartily in favor of this entire measure as it is written. I believe it is a wholly helpful and needed plan, a conservative program for affording to the United States an adequate national defense.

It has been mentioned in the debate here that as the bill was originally introduced it provided for an authorization of 6,000 planes, and that this figure was later cut to an authorization of 5,500 planes. That is true. The original bill did provide an authorization of 6,000 planes, but when the officials of the War Department testified before our committee and showed that the entire program was pitched upon an authorization of 5,500 planes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] offered an amendment cutting the authorized strength to 5,500, and that amendment was supported unanimously by the committee. I do not recall that there was a single dissenting vote.

Something has been said here about the failure of The Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Johnson, to testify before our committee, and some intimation has been made that he had advocated a much larger number of planes. I have followed rather closely the newspaper accounts relating to this program; I have followed the speeches that have been made, particularly by Mr. Johnson, relating to this program; I have talked with Mr. Johnson about this program, and I have seen mimeographed copies of his speeches, and I do not believe anyone can point out any speech Mr. Johnson ever made in which any number as large as 10,000 or any other number larger than what we are authorizing in this program was referred to by him.

The first time Mr. Johnson spoke on this program was at a meeting at some point in New England which I do not now recall. In this speech—and I have seen later speeches in which he has repeated the same thought—he said that in order to give us an adequate defense in the air it would be necessary to increase greatly our present air strength. He said it would be necessary to double our air strength, triple it, or perhaps even quadruple it. If we should quadruple our air strength, which is the very maximum he set, we would not have as many as 6,000 first-class fighting planes under this program, and that is the very extreme prediction that Mr. Johnson or, as far as I know, any representative of the War Department, has ever made in regard to our air-defense program.

This authorization is not for an extravagant number of planes. It is a conservative number, and I may say that this program should not be restricted by any such amendment as is proposed by the minority. If I read that amendment aright, it means that our Government would not be authorized to contract for more than 1,000 planes in any one year.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the amendment was adopted, the Government would be able to contract during the first year for 2,022 planes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That includes those that are already on order or proposed to be ordered out of the regular appropriation.

Mr. ANDREWS. But they would, within 1 year, contract for more than 2,000 planes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In the first year?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is right.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But as I read the amendment it states that for the fiscal year 1939 and 1940, in addition to those under order now or those that will be under order for the first fiscal year, not more than 1,000 airplanes may be contracted for during any one fiscal year except in the event of a declaration of an emergency.

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman is quite correct. Actually, as it would work out, it would mean we would only be restricted to ordering 1,000 planes during the 2 years following this year.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct; in other words, you propose, as I understand, to spread the program over 3 years, but what are you going to do about the obsolete planes you are going to have to throw out during that period and those that are washed out or destroyed in crashes? Your 1,000 would certainly include that number and would not be an adequate authorization.

Mr. ANDREWS. If the gentleman reads section 1 carefully, he will see that is provided for in another provision of the section.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, but under your proposed amendment you are specifically limiting the contract during any one fiscal year to 1,000 planes.

Anyhow, be that as it may, that is a matter of difference of opinion between the majority side and the minority side, and it is about the only point, as I understand it, in controversy in this program.

I now want to take just a few minutes to discuss one item in this bill and to say that I am happy to see it included, and that is the proposal to spend $27,000,000 on our Panama defenses. Of this sum, $23,500,000 is to be used for construction and $3,500,000 for subsistence, equipment, maintenance, and transportation.

It was my good fortune to be able to visit Panama during the past summer and to have an opportunity to visit and inspect the various installations there. I was greatly interested in them, but I was astonished to find a condition that I considered absolutely deplorable in any defense set-up of the United States. I found, first of all, to my surprise, that there was a wholly inadequate road network; that there is no road crossing the Isthmus; that we have a great many guns, searchlights, and other installations placed out in the jungle that during the rainy season, extending from May to December, are absolutely inaccessible except to men on foot. In some instances these men would have to struggle for hours to get up these trails in order to carry gasoline to operate the motors necessary to keep the equipment in good shape, and in some instances the installations actually had to be removed prior to the onset of the rainy season, due to the fact that it would not be possible to get to them to give them the care and attention that is necessary to keep them in good condition during the rainy season.

I am pleased to note that this program provides some funds for the building of this road network which is absolutely necessary for the adequate defense of this key defense possession of the United States. In time of peace the highly necessary routine of service to the anti-aircraft defense installations during the wet season is seriously hindered. Servicing parties struggle on foot for hours through the mud, carrying gasoline and oil to reach an installation which could be reached in minutes were the road hard-surfaced. In time of emergency it is even more essential that the defenses be quickly accessible, not only for immediate defense purposes but also for the supplying of food and equipment and the possible evacuation of the wounded. The vital anti-aircraft defenses of the Panama Canal department should be rescued from the mud.

I found housing conditions that I could not believe existed anywhere in the Army of the United States. I found millions of dollars worth of property housed in buildings that are nothing but firetraps. I found double-deck bunking in that tropical country not suitable for the Tropics. I found men living in tents the year round, using old, discarded railroad cars for dining rooms and kitchens. I found employees of the Army living in buildings that had been found unfit for the employees of the Panama Canal and had been condemned for use by them, and yet our Army employees were living in those buildings. I found in one of the Army posts 111 men living in a building that had a capacity of 88, and in another one I found 88 men living in a building with a capacity of only 52. At one place I found 179 men with only 10 washbasins and mirrors to service all of those men and with only 16 toilet stools. There were narrow stairways, and only a few years ago a man was killed trying to get out of the building when we had an earthquake tremor. Companies have to feed in double shifts because of lack of space. This condition is more or less typical in several of the posts in that key defense position. I am glad to see some relief given to these conditions that today exist in Panama.

There is just one other thing I want to mention, and this program falls far short of it. This, to my way of thinking, is not a complete program. Out of all this money only six and a half million dollars is provided for our seacoast defense; and should the time ever come when our Navy is cut off from the Atlantic or from the Pacific seaboard, and the Panama Canal should be endangered or should be closed, then our other seacoast as it exists today will be practically defenseless. I believe our program will not have been completed until a much larger and more adequate provision is made for our seacoast defenses and our harbor defenses, where heavy guns and antiaircraft material and personnel are needed. Great metropolitan areas, such as the city of New York, for instance, find themselves today defended by nothing more than what amounts to a corporal's guard—simply caretakers of our guns in our harbor defenses. Six and a half million dollars is simply a start, and is far short of an adequate program in providing necessary equipment for these posts and for these defenses, to say nothing of the increased personnel that will be required to build these defenses up to what they ought to be. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, again my position on the Committee on Expenditures of the Government serves as a slight excuse for my entering the discussion. No one wishes to oppose this bill, but the minority advises that a reasonable approach to the problem be made and has given you such good reasons therefor that you should go along with them, I am sure. This discussion has been unusually harmonious. I said recently that the best rampart is a sound Treasury and that a vast public debt is not a good rampart for national defense. To spend money unnecessarily or unadvisedly is wrong. To build a great many planes at $50,000 each that will so soon become obsolete and saddle upon ourselves the maintenance of them is not good sense. I asked the question yesterday of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] whether the specifications of any plane yet owned by a foreign nation are such that they could come over here, bomb our shores, and return home again. He said, "Of course, not"; and we all know that. So we should not become hysterical as to any immediate danger. I asked him again why these planes are being built and whether it was possible that we were building them to sell to France and England. Evidently that will be the place where they will be used. He said in effect, "I believe that France and England should buy as many planes as they desire if they will put the cash on the barrel head." He approved of that. I think many so approve, but perhaps we had better not say so. There are very weird stories abroad today about our foreign policy.

I do not suppose that what a mere Congressman says would amount to anything. The President determines our foreign policy, and the blustering Ickes, representing the President, may also supposedly have an inkling as to what that foreign policy is. But we are still kept in the dark. As far as France and England are concerned, perhaps we, in our deep sympathy for democracies, fully endorse what the gentleman from Texas says. I did not ask him, because I feared he did not want to yield further, and I did not wish to embarrass him, but I did want to ask if he thought we ought to sell to Germany, in the event that Germany also put the cash on the barrel head. What do you suppose he would have said?

In view of what has been said and written, lately, of course it may have been only a phrase maker who said that our frontier probably is the Rhine. But he was no "boob." It was an apt phrase and can hardly be criticized, especially since it served to bring the whole situation to the attention of the country. And when the epithet "liar" was hurled at United States Senators, that was an example of petulance deserving of notice, and a cause for anxiety over the state of mind in high places. We recall that the press was exonerated and finally the leak or misconception was placed at the door of the United States Senators.

Like the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN], who said the other day that he sometimes likes to take a ringside seat and laugh his head off, I was similarly affected, yesterday I wanted to laugh my head off when the gentleman from Massachusetts, my friend, Mr. McCORMACK, tried to justify the withholding of information that at least could have been presented to the great Committee on Ways and Means by a committee of their own advisers, highly able, highly paid, to whom they usually turn for advice. Do not tell me that they did not know that advice was ready for them, or I shall indeed laugh my head off. So strange that so many knew it several days before. After months of study, how suddenly the report appears for use in another body!

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] in his admirable address yesterday, said no one had been before the Military Affairs Committee to explain, or touch upon, our foreign policy. No one apparently knows what it is. But perhaps that is an incorrect statement as we can now guess fairly well what that foreign policy is. It would, of course, be unwise to have it stated since the lack of a statement thereof may be our real safety. Of course we do not actually know, but from what we read and hear we have a right to assume what our foreign policy is to be. Actions speak much louder than words, and when we have no definite statement of policy we must form our opinion, and certainly can assume what it is when asked to vote large sums for military operations.

We heard some months ago that certain nations ought to be quarantined. Those are fighting words. They cannot be forgotten. Certain nations have abused us roundly since that utterance. When we show eagerness to sell airplanes to democracies, and unwillingness to sell to totalitarian nations, the inference is dreadfully plain that we may be willing to ally ourselves with countries with which our leaders are in sympathy, and that we are about to entangle ourselves by such procedure. We do not say so, but our actions point to it. There is certainly not a lack of suspicion that our neutrality policy, which we adopted, is gradually being undermined in order that the President may name the aggressor, and the victim, and thereby prepare our people for what he has termed "practical" assistance.

Accumulation of expressed opinions will lead us to a point where we can safely assume the policy desired by the administration. We may well assume that these planes we will now build are not to meet any enemy planes which could not reach our shores, but that they may be extremely useful to our friends, even if a little later, for that would be only one step further, they would be unable to put the cash on the barrel head.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield. I wish to yield. Shed some light on this, will you?

Mr. MAY. I just wanted to ask the gentleman, in addition to agreeing with him on the question that France and England should put the cash on the barrel—

Mr. GIFFORD. Did I say I agree to that?

Mr. MAY. I think you said you were in favor of their putting the cash on the barrel. I would like to ask the gentleman if he objects to their rehabilitating our idle plants by giving them business, and paying cash for it?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, my deep sympathy is for democracies; but I am not saying so, and you ought not say so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman know for certain that we are getting cash on the barrel head for the planes that have been sold? There has been nothing brought to my attention that indicates for certain that we are.

Mr. GIFFORD. No. I cannot vouch for that, but I have the word of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] that if the cash is on the barrel, it will be all right.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Is it not a fact that we are exporting airplanes, engines, and so on, war machinery of different sorts, and we are importing all agricultural products? Is not that true?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, of course, it is true. The whole situation on all fronts, under the guidance of this New Deal party, has gone haywire. At this time I want to remind you that on that side of the House not a single so-called conservative Democrat has this year ventured to take the floor in opposition to the criticisms and attacks and the lesson of the last election. They have been sufficiently baited. It has been left for two or three of your enthusiastic new dealers to defend indefensible Presidential appointments and party policies. Oh, why so reticent? It is so unlike last session's hilarity. I often speak for you, because you lack willingness to speak. You agree with me so perfectly, I do appreciate it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. How about your President? Have you not confidence in him, too?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Yes. I have confidence in him, and I have confidence in you. I believe you are frank and that is the reason I am asking you this question.

Mr. GIFFORD. It is strange I should ever be reelected, is it not? Probably too much frankness.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I do not know your constituency, but I should think they would show good judgment in sending you back here.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The question I wanted to ask is this: The gentleman is criticizing, indirectly, the sale of airplanes to France by our manufacturers.

Mr. GIFFORD. Was I?

Mr. MASSINGALE. What I want to know is, what is the gentleman's idea of the moral distinction, if any, between selling airplanes to France and selling scrap iron and other war materials to Japan?

Mr. GIFFORD. Why, the gentleman is bringing his own indictment; is he not?

Mr. MASSINGALE. Well, I am asking you the question.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the gentleman has suggested his own criticism. He now brings to your attention the fact that we have sold perhaps 10 times as much scrap iron as formerly to Japan to murder Chinese, when his sympathy is probably with the Chinese as the victims, rather than with the Japanese, the aggressors. The gentleman does not need me to enlarge upon that. I thank the gentleman for the suggested criticism.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Many people in the United States feel that England is a Shylock. They resent the fact that England is supreme on the seas, yet they ignore the fact that through the expenditure of billions of dollars on the British Navy the British have given the people of the United States much security. My question is: In the event certain dictator nations in Europe went to war with England and sank the British Navy, or took it over, what effect would that have on the security of the people in the Western Hemisphere?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does not need to ask me or anybody else that. I know, living where I do, that our coast defenses need airplanes. I am glad to vote for this bill. We are simply criticizing the number and the amount that may be manufactured each year. We know what, if England were overcome, our danger might possibly be, but that is not an immediate danger. Does the gentleman think it is?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I was asking the gentleman that question.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am unable to visualize that as an immediate danger. When I vote for this bill it will be taking a reasonable attitude. I am depressed and shocked when I think of the vast sums that have already been expended considering the results attained. Under permission to extend my remarks I shall set forth further facts in this regard for I have them here; large sums spent yearly and culminating this coming year in an expenditure of $1,600,- 000,000. During the blank-check period for the W. P. A. purposes, notice the large sums diverted by the President from relief funds for the Military Establishment:

1933-34	$540,356,000
1934-35	709,931,000
1935-36	921,684,000
1936-37	935,114,000
1937-38	1,027,841,000
1938-39	1,119,810,000
1939-40	1,668,283,000

Total 6,933,019,000

Each year the President has spent not merely the sums appropriated by Congress for national defense, but also many millions which he has allocated from recovery and relief funds. The amounts are very great. Here they are by years:

1933-34	$60,663,000
1934-35	176,335,000
1935-36	147,246,000
1936-37	79,004,000
1937-38	53,735,000
1938-39	77,604,000
1939-40	50,726,000

Total 645,313,000

About these allocations two very significant features appear. First of all these are sums not appropriated by Congress, but appropriated by the President himself. Thus, in 1935, Congress appropriated $553,596,000 for national defense. But Congress has been turning over to the President billions each year to spend as he likes. And in 1936 he appropriated another $176,000,000 for national defense.

The gentleman who preceded me caused me to marvel at the facts he disclosed. Despite the huge expenditure of W. P. A. funds for housing he found it necessary to stand up here and indict the housing conditions of our Military Establishment as being so deplorable. What have they done with the money?

Mr. THORKEKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. THORKEKELSON. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that in the event of that happening which he outlined in his question, the United States would have to take care of the British possessions. That is why we need a navy.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; but my time is running, so I ask the gentleman to be brief.

Mr. THILL. Does the gentleman know of any nation anywhere that might want to attack us in the near future?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly not. Hemmed in by potential enemies of their own, all of those "brigand nations," as Ickes calls them, have their hands full; economically they have their hands full. That they seek war with us is a ridiculous assumption. Our foreign policy at the moment is seemingly, indeed, a weird one. South America is probably the answer; Mexico, loving us so much, expropriating our properties, depends upon our silver policy and our Navy. But we have agreed to protect them. Mexico and Brazil, when they speak of the United States Navy, call it "our Navy." We know that we are building largely because of them. And I have read that "while we do not want to meddle in the affairs of Europe at the present time when she is so out of her senses, when she comes to her senses we shall need not meddle with her."

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. If the gentleman had had the power, would he have prevented the sale of the airplanes to France?

Mr. GIFFORD. I thought I told the gentleman that I have very deep sympathy with that operation, but I did not feel it was quite wise to go on record, either the gentleman or I, lest Hitler hear of it.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I believe we should feel thankful that our airplane factories are of such outstanding character that France is willing to send her gold here for their airplanes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And I will ask the gentleman if he thinks it is a good idea to sell airplanes to Germany? Is he willing to sell them to Germany? The gentleman asked me a question; I now ask him one.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No; I would not; I would not.

Mr. GIFFORD. It now appears that the party was no "boob" who said that the Rhine is our frontier.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I do not regard Germany as being in the same category with England and France. I, as a Representative from a Western State, feel sorry for the fate I fear stands waiting for France and England, which may flow from the extremes to which the autocratic powers I fear will force her.

Mr. GIFFORD. The President is evidently being very successful in shaping the opinion of this House. His foreign policy is seemingly already meeting with approval.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I often speak seriously and frankly, as one gentleman has stated. Certainly I do not want to appear to be too critical, but I am, indeed, greatly worried about our own financial condition, especially our huge national debt. I feel that it is incumbent upon me to take the floor of this House often to portray this situation and comment on the consequences thereof. I dread to think of the constant stream of recommendations from our President to spend borrowed money. I had hoped we were getting away from extravagant expenditures.

I have for several years been greatly amused when he would thank Congress for its cooperation. It was not cooperation at all, it was submission, rubber-stamp business. [Laughter.] I thought it rather sarcastic to thank us for cooperation.

We must hesitate to enter into any foreign alliances although our sympathies may well go out to so-called democracies. In closing, having touched on our very costly needs and experiments, I would add a pleasantry—in making costly alliances when we are unable to meet our expenses, I offer the following: "I cannot marry you," he said, "because I am not making my expenses." She said, "Marry me and I will make plenty of expenses." [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE.]

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be helpful if we go back to school for a few minutes and study our history and geography. We have before us the pending bill. Next week we will have the Navy bill, which will be followed by the supply bills for the Army and Navy.

I want to preface my remarks by stating that I do not favor this Nation forming any entangling alliance with any other nation on earth; neither do I favor sending our boys to a foreign country to participate in a war. On that premise I want to address myself to the statement that we Americans are safe so long as England and France stand, and we will be in immediate danger should they fall.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct attention to this world map. Let me go back to 1918 and to the Versailles Treaty. Under this treaty Germany was compelled, according to the terms of peace, to yield every colonial or outlying possession. May I point out some of the territory that Germany surrendered? She surrendered this territory here in Africa [indicating on map]. She surrendered this section in Africa [indicating]. She surrendered this section in Africa [indicating] which she is raising Cain about now and the one she is most anxious about. She surrendered this section right in here just below Ethiopia [indicating]. More important than that, she surrendered these islands here, which are now a mandate of the Japanese. You see this border line here [indicating]. She was required to surrender every island within this border except the island of Guam, of which you have heard so much today. All of these are under Japanese mandate [indicating]. Rumor has it that contrary to the mandate agreement, the Japanese have fortified one or two of these islands.

Mr. Chairman, this section over here in Europe [indicating] can be likened to a keg of dynamite, and several people have a match in their hand ready to light the keg.

We must remember that every implement of war which Germany has today is modern. All of the old materials were taken from them. Consequently, all of their guns and planes are up-to-date and modern. If Germany intends to strike, it is to its interest to strike soon, while it holds the mastery of the air and while it has such a well-equipped army. It is my candid judgment that Hitler is holding back today only for two reasons: One is to complete his submarines in order to handle the British shipping and the other is fear of the United States.

Here is the section that Mussolini right now is demanding [indicating]. At this time Germany maintains a plane service to South America. These planes leave here [indicating], and I am not sure but I think they go down to the Canary Islands under an agreement with Spain, land there, come across here [indicating], go down to Buenos Aires, come across, and go up here [indicating], gradually extending their line up to here [indicating].

Forget for a minute whether or not you like the President of the United States. Let us assume that war comes in Europe and that it comes sometime during the spring. Let us assume further that this time Germany and its allies are victorious. God forbid, but let us assume they should be. Mr. Chairman, do you not think that under these circumstances Germany would demand of England and France not only the return of its own colonial possessions but would also demand the surrender of many British and French possessions? Mark me, I began by saying that so long as England and France stand we are safe. The moment they fall we are in danger.

Let us assume that the terms of the next treaty will require exactly what England and France required of Germany. You see that dot right there [indicating]. It is 600 miles from our shores; it is the Bermuda Islands. You may say that you are not going to let Germany take over the Bermuda Islands, you would not let any hostile nation do that; but if Germany secures Bermuda under the terms of a treaty, it secures that possession in a peaceful manner, and when we dash over to keep Germany from taking possession of the Bermuda Islands we are the aggressor, are we not?

Here is another point over here [indicating] right off the coast of Florida, the Bahama Islands belonging to Great Britain. There is a little section over here in Central America, Honduras, which belongs to Britain. There is British Guiana in South America. There is French Guiana in South America. Well, you say, no unfriendly nation will take those, because we will not let them. I do not think we will, either. But that is war, is it not? I ask the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts now, in connection with the discussion involving the question of the sale of planes to England and France, is it not better that we sell England and France for cash the planes they need for their defense than for ourselves to go to war with whoever is the conqueror in the event England and France should go down?

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman makes the point of France and Great Britain against Germany. What happened in connection with the Czechoslovakian business, at the time of the Munich Conference? Did not France and England then have an opportunity to demonstrate their love for democracy? What happened?

Mr. PACE. I may say to the gentleman I do not think they had the opportunity, for this reason: Here is Czechoslovakia over here [indicating]. The attitude of Russia was unknown. England and France in order to get to Czechoslovakia would have to cross over Germany, and all they could furnish were planes. At that time, as well as at the present time, Germany had 10,000 modern planes.

England had probably 1,500 modern planes and France about 500. What chance does the gentleman believe England and France would have had to aid Czechoslovakia with 2,000 planes crossing over a country with 10,000 planes? The evidence is that England and France would not have had a plane in the air inside of 7 days.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. If as a matter of fact France and England permitted the emasculation of Czechoslovakia as a means of appeasement or to secure the continuation of peace with Germany, might they not be put in a position to concede the bases the gentleman has been describing in the Western Hemisphere as another means of appeasement?

Mr. PACE. They might; but, of course, I hope they will not.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not true that since the Munich conference it has been revealed pretty generally that Hitler was bluffing and they yielded to his bluff?

Mr. PACE. No; I think the fact has been developed that Mr. Chamberlain thought Hitler was bluffing until he made his first trip to Munich, and then he found out Hitler was not bluffing.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman from Texas made the statement yesterday that the United States stands fifth in number of planes.

Mr. PACE. Yes; I have those figures.

Mr. ENGEL. He also stated that England had 7,000 planes and France had 4,000 planes. The gentleman gave these figures as an argument that we ought to increase the number of our planes. Now, however, the gentleman from Georgia states that France has 500 planes and England 1,500.

Mr. PACE. No; I said 500 modern planes; and let me tell the gentleman his own nation has only 500 modern army planes.

Mr. ENGEL. I am only reconciling the statement of the gentleman with the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PACE. We have today approximately 1,700 Army planes in this Nation, but the testimony is that we have only 500 modern planes, planes that could stay in the air against an enemy. The same is true of France, and that is the reason France yesterday placed an additional order for 500 American planes in an attempt to obtain modern planes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In discussing the relationship of countries like Germany with the nations they possibly might conquer and thus acquire bases of operations, a real threat might come from the annexation of Mexico by Germany, which would afford entrance into the United States?

Mr. PACE. The Mexicans are good neighbors, and I hope they will have regard for our welfare. You can talk about no one being able to attack us, and say it cannot be done, but all an attacking fleet needs is a landing place, an overnight base. If they should be tempted, Mexico could give an enemy a temporary landing place. It may be said an attacking fleet could not come here and return, but it could come nearby, land, refuel, strike, and go; there is no question about that.

This little place known as the Panama Canal is the key to the defense of this Nation. Why? We must get our fleet across this strip of land. We cannot maintain a fleet large enough to defend both the Atlantic and the Pacific. We must keep this Canal open. Two or three well-placed bombs would destroy the Panama Canal as far as getting ships through it is concerned. The testimony before the committee is that the modern planes and the modern antiaircraft guns we have at the Canal would have exactly 20 seconds within which to shoot down an enemy plane going from 300 to 350 miles an hour. Our forces would have 20 seconds to get that plane, and 20 seconds is not very long. Consider what would happen if a foreign country should as a result of peace terms following a war take possession of any of this territory that belongs to Britain and France, Bermuda, for instance, or any of these islands here. This is the one hundred and eightieth meridian, at which the Republican policy committee has recommended we stop our defense. You may say these British Islands are too far away, but we are committed to defend this entire area, North and South America, and the Canal is not too far from South America for bases to be established here.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. It strikes me the gentleman is proceeding rather rapidly and pointing out the very dangers into which we are going to be brought as the result of a war. Possibly the gentleman has more definite information than those on the committee have received as to the imminency of an attack by Germany and Italy on England and France. I heard nothing in the committee to that effect. I wonder if the gentleman would mind telling us what he believes Germany intends to do next.

Mr. PACE. I can give the gentleman no official opinion, of course, but only a summation of all that the gentleman and I have read and studied. I believe Germany today is ready to strike.

Mr. ANDREWS. Did the gentleman say "strike"? Where?

Mr. PACE. They could demand the Ukraine tomorrow.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would England object? Would anyone object?

Mr. PACE. You and I do not know. Italy can demand Tunisia tomorrow.

Let me point out, in speaking about planes, that I believe we ought to get all these planes right now. We are committed to defend Canada. I believe the whole American people applauded the President when he told the people of Canada that if they got in trouble we would come to their aid, and we should, because I believe if we got into a death struggle they would come to our aid. In addition, for selfish reasons we could not afford to let any enemy get into Canada. Do you know how many planes Canada has? Forty.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In speaking of Mexico, I hope it is not inappropriate to say that I might invite the attention of the committee to the fact that in the United States of America today there reside between 300,000 and 400,000 Mexicans who have not declared their intention of becoming citizens of this land.

Mr. PACE. They are a potential danger.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman does not mean to imply he would favor our going to war to join Great Britain, who had been joined by Canada in some European conflict. The gentleman confines that statement to an invasion for the acquisition of Canada.

Mr. PACE. I mean to convey the idea that if Canada is attacked it is to our purely selfish interest, in the matter of our own defense, to go to their assistance.

Mr. MAHON. If Canada is attacked in Canada.

Mr. PACE. That is correct. I prefaced my remarks by stating I did not favor going into a foreign war.

I want to make this statement. I do not think the President of the United States said, in fact, I know in my own mind he did not say that our frontier is on the Rhine. He may have said, and in my judgment he could have well said, that our first line of defense is England and France, and I repeat to you that whenever we see England and France go down we, as a nation, are in immediate danger.

Unfortunately, there is nobody in this world who loves us. We are either hated or we are the object of the envy of every person outside of our own people. Hidden yonder in the valleys of Kentucky is practically two-thirds of all the gold in the world, and with our rich oil fields, mineral deposits, our fertile fields, we are the object of either envy or hate of everybody and it is my judgment, and my candid judgment, while we should never go over there with our boys, yet when England and France are in trouble, it'll become us to sit here and make objections when they come here with the cash money and put it on the barrel head to get something with which to defend themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am a new Member in Congress, and I do not understand a lot of these things, but I should like to get this clear for myself and my constituents: Is this program one to defend America—

Mr. PACE. Solely.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Or is it a program to attack one particular nation—Germany?

Mr. PACE. This program, I may say, so far as my knowledge of it is concerned, is to try to modernize the American forces; to try to secure for the American forces what the War Department has been recommending for the last 15 years; that is, to give our boys in the National Guard and the standing Army, numbering 400,000, some modern guns, which they do not have now, and to give them a supply of ammunition to last for 30 days, to equip them with gas masks and uniforms and shoes, and to build sufficient anti-aircraft guns and airships to defend this Nation for the first 30 days, and that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman one further question?

Mr. PACE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman has made the statement that no nation loves us—

Mr. PACE. I do not think so.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Then, should not our policy be to prepare for defense against possible enemies from anywhere?

Mr. PACE. That is right, exactly. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ARENDS. If my colleague has any information along this line, would he tell us what percentage of hits he thinks would be possible at the Panama Canal with airplanes traveling 350 miles an hour, where we have only 20 seconds within which to fire?

Mr. PACE. Of course, it would depend upon the number of planes. I think you would get about 1 hit out of 20 or 30, possibly. It would be a very small percentage.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes available I should like to make a few general observations on this question of national defense, raise a question on certain sections of the bill which are perhaps not clear to me, and mention one or two parts with which I disagree.

I have been pleased that thus far the debate has been absolutely nonpartisan and I hope that the day will never come when we will allow partisanship to affect our judgment on matters relating to national defense. [Applause.]

I am deeply interested in the question of national defense, and I express the wish that some Congress prior to 1917 had given like consideration to our aviation needs. [Applause.] If that had been done I might not today be speaking to you from a wheelchair.

It seems to me that our air industry in many ways has been stifled. I had the opportunity just last December to go through one of the larger factories manufacturing airplane motors, and I want to say that I have nothing but praise for the men who are operating our aircraft industry and for the employees in our aircraft factories. You can go to any factory or any industry in the United States and you will not find a higher type of man than those who are turning out the aircraft that our Government and the world need.

It seems to me that the hand of our own Government has been rather heavy on this industry. The gross profits have been limited under one act; the Wage and Hour Act has placed certain restrictions on the industry that have prevented young and enthusiastic engineers from devoting desirable time to the study of the problems affecting the aircraft industry. All of this raises the question of where the money is going to come from for necessary research in this industry. One of three things will happen. The industry must be given the opportunity to earn money to spend in research, the Government can provide that money, or we are going to drop behind the other nations of the world in the matter of aircraft and air-motor production.

There has been a great deal of discussion, at least in the cloakrooms and through the press, about moving some of the national defense equipment factories to the interior. It is true that I live near the coast, and I am interested in the State of Connecticut, and in a district of that State in which are maintained two very important factories turning out material for our Army and Navy; but leaving that one thought aside, I cannot become much disturbed about the possibility of enemy aircraft bombing factories that are turning out supplies for our Government. I submit this question. If it were possible at the present time, and I am sure it is not, for an enemy bombing plane to come over here and plant its load, I raise this question: Would they pick out an aircraft factory, a munitions factory along the coast, or, for the effect it would have on the United States and the people of the United States, would they go on to the city of New York or even to the Capital here in Washington? I think that is something about which we need not be greatly concerned.

Another reason why I think it is very dangerous to consider moving these industries is that many of the men who have developed this industry have inherited their ability to work with fine tools. I do not believe that the money that is being appropriated or that will be appropriated for aircraft can in any sense of the word be considered wasted money. It seems to me it is practically the same as paying an insurance premium. We do not feel badly if we do not die within 6 months after we pay our first life-insurance premium, and I am willing to spend enough to give us the protection we need and hope to God that we never have to use it. An additional thought: One factory alone in the aircraft industry is today buying materials from and furnishing work for 68 different firms, employing 54,410 employees.

So much for general observation. I would like to mention now just a few of the sections of this bill, starting with section 13, which relates to the procurement of gages, jigs, and so forth. In this connection I pay my respects and compliments to my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH], who worked so hard for a period of years to bring this important matter to the attention of Congress, and I hope that when this bill is enacted he will feel that his efforts have been well repaid. [Applause.] It is a mighty important section of the bill. To go to the other end, section 8 of this act replaces section 8 of the 1936 act. The provision is not to exceed 5,500 serviceable airplanes and such number of airships and free and captive balloons as the Secretary of War may determine to be necessary. In my humble opinion, 5,500 serviceable airplanes, including training ships which do not become obsolete as fast as pursuit ships, is not an exorbitant request. I believe it is a very reasonable request. The question has been raised and very ably presented that we should perhaps limit this program to not more than 1,000 planes each year. I believe that will be offered as an amendment. When I first heard of that proposal I felt it was sound, and then I read the testimony of General Arnold offered before the Military Affairs Committee; I talked with people who were interested in the aircraft industry.

It seems that both they and the War Department feel they should be allowed to go ahead and build these 3,000 planes, if that is the number, and do it as fast as they can, in order to find out, if we can, where the bottle necks are in the aircraft industry, so that should there be an acute emergency we will know just how long it will take the industry to turn out a given number of planes in a given time. [Applause.]

Section 2 provides for the utilization of civilian flying schools, and provides that the Army may detail personnel to assist and to instruct the instructors of these civilian schools. I dislike to pit my limited knowledge against the judgment of some who testified before the committee, but I think it a very radical departure, and in some ways it seems, from my limited experience in the Air Service, a dangerous precedent. I see no value in training young men to fly commercial ships: I realize that the War Department will be asked and will make available military ships, and that there is nothing in the act to prevent these schools from giving their primary training on civilian ships. In that I see a great danger to the lives and necks of many students, because if these men get primary training on slow commercial ships and then try to do things with fast Army ships there will enter into it a large element of danger.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. COSTELLO. The purpose of allowing the civilian instructors from the civilian schools to go to Randolph Field is to obviate that thing. In other words, training instructors at Randolph Field will teach them the practices and methods of the Army in training the flying cadets. They will install those methods at the civilian schools. The Air Corps, under section 4, will loan Army aircraft, parts, and matériel to the civilian schools, so that they will use Army ships and Army equipment in their training. They will not use any civilian equipment at all.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman assure us that they will not? I understand section 4 provides as the gentleman says, but is there anything in the act that will prevent them from giving their primary training, in order to speed this thing along, to allow them to get their primary flying in civilian commercial ships?

Mr. COSTELLO. No. If the student does not qualify, he is dismissed and does not go to Randolph Field at all. Unless they can qualify for the War Department specifications, as will be laid down by the Secretary of War, the graduates of those schools at the end of 3 months will not go to Randolph Field at all. The primary training will be wasted as far as they are concerned. In 3 months they will not learn enough about aviation to even be qualified for civilian flying.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Connecticut 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I raised the question on section 3 and I have had an answer to the question that was in my mind, that I could not find in any of the testimony, and I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] for his information.

Further, in section 3, I call attention to the fact, and I raised it in asking a question of one of my colleagues speaking yesterday afternoon, that the latter part of the section provides that no pension, compensation, and so forth, shall be paid in the event of personal injury. I submit that in this period of primary training, whether it is on War Department ships as we are told it will be, or on commercial planes, it is the most dangerous period of any pilot's training—when he makes his first solo hop. I cannot understand why that provision is written in to prevent them from receiving benefits in case of permanent injury, or their dependents in case of death.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The gentleman is making a very fine statement on this act, but I would like to point out that this section 3 applies to men who are instructors in the civilian schools, who are being brought to the Army training centers to standardize their methods of instruction. It does not apply to the students who are coming in as flying cadets and will go to the Army schools and become Air Corps officers. It applies to those civilian instructors only, to give them a brush-up course, to standardize their methods of training with the Army methods. They are paid by civilian schools. They are professional instructors, and for that reason, because they have no status in the Army, in section 3 they were not provided with any protection against injury. They have to provide that themselves. Their schools provide for their pay and any protection they get. That section, as I understand it, is limited only to those civilian instructors.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask further in that connection, section 3 provides for the enrollment of students in the Air Corps. When they go to Randolph Field, having completed their primary training, will they be entitled to the same protection as any air service cadet?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. They are enrolled as students at the training school, but not in the Air Corps.

Mr. MILLER. And they will not be entitled to any of the benefits while taking training?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Does the gentleman refer to these civilian instructors?

Mr. MILLER. No; I mean the students.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Oh, the students will be enlisted men under the same provisions as the flying cadets today; with the same protection that they receive today, as flying cadets. There is no change in that. The authorization is in existing law for the flying cadets.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman. My colleague has answered two or three questions on which I had notes, but I also want to refer to section 3, and I assume it is covered by the same provision the gentleman has outlined. It provides that the Medical Corps and hospitals will be made available in case of injury, but there are added the words "not including medicines or supplies." That provision rather puzzled me. If one of these fellows should crash, they would be put in a hospital, but they would have to send down to the corner drug store for a shot of antitetanus.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I assume that would be paid for by the civilian school, because section 3 applies only to civilian instructors who are being given additional instruction.

Mr. MILLER. May I make this observation, that it seemed rather bad to set up anything that might cause delay at a time when no delay should be allowed. Whether these men are civilians or instructors or students, if they have a crash there should be nothing in the regulations that will prevent them from getting medicine and supplies if they are needed. I hope that at the proper time we can move to strike out those four words and clear up any possible misunderstanding in such cases.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I have not thoroughly studied that language. It strikes me that the phrase "including medicines and supplies" is intended to be an exception for which the Government shall not be charged.

Mr. MILLER. It would appear so, but it does seem like very unkind treatment to a person who has crashed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut and wish to ask him a question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. I am wondering if the gentleman from Connecticut, in connection with his proposed amendment to section 1, realizes what the adoption of the amendment suggested would do? We still have in process this year on order over 2,000 planes. An additional 2,000 planes on top of orders from foreign governments would utilize practically the total productive capacity of the entire aviation industry of this country as outlined in the report of the retiring president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. MILLER. I am aware of that; the gentleman is correct. This will require a total of almost 5,000 planes to be built in a year. I understood from the testimony of the Air Corps, however, that they wanted to find out what the industry could do. I provide the opportunity. I may say in this connection that I have seen the clause in the contracts relating to the manufacture of airplanes and motors for France, which provides that if any procurement officer of the United States sets up the claim that the foreign order or orders interfere with production for the United States, the needs of the United States must be given the right-of-way.

I think it is our duty to find out what the capacity of the aviation industry is, whether it is the 5,000 a year they claim. I want to give them a chance to show what they can do or if they can do what they say they can.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. You were one of those who flew in the World War—and I pay tribute to you. Is it not a fact that today we are recognizing that the Air Corps is going to be increasingly more important to us in the successful prosecution of any war in which we may engage?

Mr. MILLER. I believe so very definitely. I read a very interesting article by the French Air Minister in which he said that, regardless of the Army and the Navy, their future defense must come from the air. The same thing may apply to us. It depends on what they do for their air service. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, we have in the world two kinds of armies: One is the conscripted army—large in numbers, poorly paid, and rather poorly trained, the other is the small voluntarily enlisted army—we might call a professional army, highly trained—and comparatively well paid. We of the United States maintain the latter kind of army because it is in accord with our national policies. We as a nation object to a large standing army. We desire to menace no one, but we are determined to protect ourselves and our national interests wherever or whenever such protection may be necessary.

In our Army we have what is known as the initial protective force, that is a force composed of the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Reserves of the Regular Army. This protective force is believed to be sufficient in time of an emergency to protect this Nation until the final protective force has been formed. This initial protective force consists of approximately 400,000 men. The final protective force will consist of 600,000 additional men, which will make our forces at that time 1,000,000 men. Then, under the protection of this force, will be inducted, trained, and equipped the army necessary to take care of the situation at hand.

In order that we may preserve our national traditions in a military sense, and in order that we may protect American interests wherever they may be and whenever the necessity arises it is necessary that we be able to expand our system of national defense in the face of emergency to a point where it is capable of taking care of whatever demands that may be made upon it. For this reason and the others I have mentioned we prefer to have in our Regular Establishment and in our National Guard as high a class of men as possible, because in time of emergency when we go to expand our forces, we must use the organizations we have in existence as a skeleton on which to build the final protective force and the forces to follow. This is possible because of our system of voluntary service in time of peace.

Our needs in the matter of national defense are calculated upon the protection of the continental United States, our possessions in the Caribbean Sea, the Panama Canal Zone, Hawaii, Alaska, and the Aleutian Islands; and our initial protective force is composed of the components of our system of national defense in all of those areas.

The question has been raised here several times about the foreign policy of the United States in connection with this program. I want to speak a little bit about this foreign policy and its relation to the present program. As everyone in the United States knows, regardless of the remarks of some of our professional isolationists who seek to capitalize upon their positions in order to make their presence upon the lecture platform more valuable, our position in regard to foreign affairs today is just the same as it has been ever since we have been a nation. Ever since we have been a nation our position in regard to our foreign policy has been that we are going to defend the United States of America and our direct possessions, and that we are going to protect American trade and American interests throughout the world. We have never had any other foreign policy, except, of course, the Monroe Doctrine. The Monroe Doctrine has been definitely defined and fixed, but in all other respects and under all other conditions our foreign policy has been flexible enough to meet whatever the demands in order to protect American trade and American interests. Regardless of what may be said, regardless of what may be inferred, our foreign policy today is the same as it has always been. I want to call to the memory of the Members of this Committee the fact that at one time we found it necessary to send a force to Africa to put down the Barbary pirates in order to protect American commerce. That was our foreign policy at that time.

I suspect there were ancestors of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] who at that time were engaged in the shipping business out of the New England States. I imagine those men welcomed the use of the American Navy under a flexible foreign policy when it was sent over there to suppress the depredations of the Barbary pirates, and maintain the prestige of a growing nation.

Later it was necessary in the interest of trade to send some American gunboats to Naples. Later on, if you will remember, the American Navy opened up the ports of Japan to American trade. Later on, under the administration of the Republican Party, we undertook a program of imperialism. We took the Philippine Islands, and we have them today. That was our foreign policy of that day. Later on, under the administration of a great Republican President, it was found to be expedient to interfere with a war between two great powers in the East—Japan and Russia. Later on, under the administration of a Democratic President, it was found to be expedient to engage in the World War. Never in all of our history has it been deemed wise to formulate our foreign policy in the public square or cry it from the house-tops. Why should we do so today?

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we are a commercial nation, and we live by commerce. The commerce of this Nation is the commerce of the people of the Nation. It is not the commerce of the Grundys, the Mellons, or the Rockefeller. It is the commerce of all the people. It is not alone the commerce of Wall Street. It is just as much the commerce of Main Street and the streets across the railroad tracks. It is the commerce of the men who work in the mines and in the mills and on the farms. If you would shut us up within the boundaries of the United States of America and do away with that small percentage of goods that we export every year we would have an internal revolution. We cannot and must not become isolationists.

After all, when we adopt a policy of national defense, it is absolutely necessary that we adopt a policy which will be able to take care of the exigencies of whatever situation may arise in regard to our commerce and our rights as citizens of the world. Is there any man of responsibility in the United States of America today who would advocate in case of war that we abandon our traditional freedom of the seas? Is there any man, in case of war any place in the world, who would accept a mandate from any nation that would say, "Your ships must stay in your own ports"? You only have to go back in American history to the time preceding the War of 1812 and see what a disastrous effect an embargo on American commerce had within the Nation. As unpopular as the War of 1812 proved to be in certain sections of the United States, as that war went on and trade lanes were opened up once more for American commerce, the war became popular in that section of the country.

Mr. Chairman, war is like any other contest. It is waged with an object in view. Wars are fought for the control of markets, for the control of trade lanes, or for the control of raw materials. Wars are but commercial contests appealed to the court of last resort in this world—the court of Mars. So, wherever trade lanes converge, wherever commercial interests conflict, whenever great supplies of raw materials lie undeveloped, there lie the seeds of warfare, and any nation which is to remain a prosperous and a mighty nation in this world must be prepared to protect its interests and maintain its national prestige.

This is a program which applies principally to the expansion of the Air Corps. It can by no means be called a program which might make for aggression or conquest, because there is no possible chance of conquest anywhere by an air corps. An air corps is not a self-sufficient unit. It cannot seize and hold territory. Although you might cross the sea with an air corps and create tremendous damage in the territory of an enemy, you could not seize and hold one foot of their territory by the use of airplanes. The only mission an air corps can be used for is to protect this Nation from invasion by a hostile air corps or to assist the mission of the land or water forces; and we are increasing those forces only very slightly.

Mr. Chairman, I want to leave with the membership of this Committee one thought. In the use of an air corps to repel an invasion, it would not be possible to keep that air corps within the continental limits of the United States in the hope of meeting an invading air force if one should come. An air force operates in three dimensions. There is a great deal of space in the air and before an air corps can afford sufficient protection to a nation it is necessary that it seek out the air force of the enemy, wherever it may be, and bomb or destroy the installations of the enemy's air corps before it can come to the shores of this Nation. To await the arrival of the enemy will be too late. Once on the way, the air corps of the enemy will discharge their load of bombs before turning back.

At the present time there is no possibility that any nation in the world could invade us from the air, unless they would acquire bases somewhere near this Nation, or unless they would use an airplane carrier to transport their planes at least a large proportion of the way across the ocean. No one knows, however, what range the planes of tomorrow may have or what air bases any foreign nation may procure. We must be prepared for any eventuality. The bomber is the capital ship of the Air Corps, just the same as the battleship is the capital ship of the Navy. The pursuit plane, the observation plane, the reconnaissance plane can do almost no damage. The bomber is the engine of destruction.

I am glad, therefore, that this program carries in it a large percentage of bombers, the ship of the air that can go out, meet, and destroy the airplane carriers of any foreign nation that intends to invade us, the ship of the air that can go to some base which an enemy nation may establish in this hemisphere, and destroy its airplanes before they can take off and reach this Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, the program is drawn with the idea of furnishing us, when it has been completed, with a well-balanced system of national defense, one that will leave us in a position to carry on a method of training that will build a sufficient program of national defense to take care of whatever needs we may have in wartime. There is almost no additional personnel connected with this legislation, except the additional personnel for the Air Corps and a little personnel to take care of the needs of the defense of the Panama Canal.

Anyone who will look over this program and consider the entire program will see that there is nothing in it that will enable this Nation to be an aggressor nation at any time.

None of the components of national defense included in this program will enable this Nation to go abroad or seize any territory of any nation whatever. This is a program designed purely and simply for national defense, a program incapable of being diverted to any other purpose, so far as our foreign policy is concerned and there is no possibility that this program can be used to promote any different kind of foreign policy than the one we have had throughout the entire history of our national existence. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN.]

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is very little that I can add to the very splendid discussion of the older members of the Committee on Military Affairs who have already presented their views so ably and clearly.

I wish to commend the witnesses who appeared before the committee for their very fair statements regarding the needs for adequate national defense. The War Department has been very, very sensible in what it is asking. It has kept its feet on the ground and held steady in the face of all alarms. It has asked just enough to bring our initial defensive forces, the Regular Army and the National Guard up to date in matériel.

The committee has done a good job, too, in holding strictly to the defense aim. There is only one hump in the program which I think should not be there—the immediate authorization for a total of 5,500 planes. For that reason, I joined in the minority report signed by 11 members of the committee, recommending that the authorization of 5,500 planes be limited to the extent that not more than 1,000 planes may be procured each year, in addition to those now on order or to be ordered under the current War Department appropriation bill for 1939-40.

In case of a declared emergency, the minority report provides that the full 5,500 planes be immediately authorized.

One object in recommending the 3-year period was to avoid overexpansion of plane factories, followed by a possible lull in which there would be no United States Government market for planes of the types needed for military purposes.

The plan recommended by the minority report would provide a more stable, long-range program for building up the airplane industry.

Another object is to prevent acquirement of a lot of planes built on frozen specifications, which would quickly become obsolete, and which obsolescence would prove very costly. In addition to giving our Army the advantage of further improvements that may be developed within the next 3 years while expanding to the total authorization of 5,500 planes, a major consideration for spreading the authorization over a 3-year period is, of course, economy. It has been estimated that the Committee on Military Affairs, in reducing the total authorization from 6,000 down to 5,500 planes, effected a saving of more than $31,000,000; and when we consider that each 1,000 planes represents an expense of approximately $56,000,000, it is easy to see why a Congressman representing an agricultural district with depression prices for agricultural products still prevailing is in sympathy with any reasonable and practical modification in the direction of economy.

With that background, I have carefully studied the evidence presented before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have joined wholeheartedly with the minority group in recommending a proposal that should be a more helpful guide to the Appropriations Committee in shaping the appropriation bill than a blanket authorization in excess of apparent immediate needs.

All members of the committee have the same general objective—to provide an adequate and reasonable defensive protection for the Nation. That objective is sound and worthy of the support of Congress.

My distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] yesterday made the comment on the floor that every emergency that has been conjured up or pulled out of the hat by the present national administration during the past 6 years has evaporated into thin air. I would like to call attention to one emergency that the present national administration has not dramatized in the headlines and one which will not evaporate quickly. That emergency monster lurking back of nearly every bill we consider is the forty-four and one-half billion-dollar debt. Let us let the Army fly, but let us level off at a safe and sensible altitude.

There is one provision contained in H. R. 3791 to which I wish to direct a few remarks, particularly with a view to bringing to your attention a few of the questions that have been passing through my own mind and for which I do not have the answers. I refer particularly to the last provision in section 5 starting on page 5, line 25, and continuing to the end of section 5.

This provision would extend retirement rights to officers and men of the National Guard, Reserve Corps, or any other armed forces of the United States who serve more than 30 days and incur disability in line of duty. By the terms of this bill, retirement is provided these men on the same footing as to pensions, compensation, retirement pay, and hospital benefits as officers and enlisted men of the corresponding grades and length of service of the Regular Army. Knowing nothing of the background of this provision, which was hastily added in the concluding half hour of committee consideration without a word of testimony before the committee, I have a few questions to ask, which I hope will bring before the House a better background for consideration of this measure than I myself have at this time.

I am asking these questions not in opposition to the idea of retirement or other adequate protection to officers and men who are not members of the Regular Establishment. I am submitting these questions for your consideration in perfecting this measure to a more workable form if possible.

(1) Will this bill give retirement exclusively on the basis of disability to perform line duty in the armed forces, even though the disability may not interfere with ability to return to and engage in his civilian occupation?

(2) Does the bill give any consideration to the much less fortunate situation confronting the Regular Army officer who has been separated from any civilian occupation so long as to make it well-nigh impossible for him to take up a civilian occupation without extended training, and then only if he is in a position to afford and to undergo that training?

(3) Will the award of retirement for disability impose upon those retired under this bill any of the restrictions or liabilities governing retired officers and men of the Regular Establishment?

(4) Does the provision contemplate granting of retirement in the grade in which the officer or enlisted man is serving, regardless of total length of service?

(5) Does the length of service include any part of the period of service during which active duty of less than 30 days was performed?

(6) To whom is the administration of the bill delegated?

(7) Who are eligible to serve on the retirement boards?

(8) Will those retired under this bill be restricted concerning future occupation and pay such as that now imposed upon the retired personnel of the Regular Army?

(9) Will those retired be subject to call to active duty in emergency?

(10) Will they be subject to the Articles of War?

(11) Will they be tryable by courts martial?

(12) What constitutes the "armed forces" as that term is used in the bill?

(13) How many men are affected by the bill in the initial protective force, in a mobilization force, in a force of four and one-half million men if and when they may ever be called to duty?

(14) Has the War Department any estimate of the probable cost of this measure?

It seems to me that these questions are deserving of an answer, and it seems to me that Congress has the right to expect an answer to these questions from the members of the Committee on Military Affairs before being called upon to enact the measure into law.

Not knowing the answers to these questions, I can only close my remarks with an expression of hope that the members of the Military Affairs Committee and other Members of Congress who may know the answers will volunteer to answer these questions fully and completely before Congress is asked to vote on the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, we are all for adequate defense for our country, but the question that is giving me concern is, Just what does this defense plan contemplate? Is it a part of a larger plan that may be all-embracing? It seems to me there is a lack of definite policy on the part of this administration, not alone in its dealings with foreign countries but as to the question of defense and also on domestic problems. Just how far are we going to go? How far east will our first line of defense extend, how far west, and how far south? That will make all the difference in the world. You can hold a short line with a regiment but if the line is extended far enough many divisions may be required.

I ask you, just whom are we arming against? It would seem that the time has come for the administration to take Congress into its confidence. I fear we are placing altogether too much emphasis on the dangers that lie without and at the same time ignoring most vital problems at home.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. If I do not have my history mixed up, I believe the gentleman is the only Member of the present Congress who voted against this country's entry into the World War when the matter was brought up on the floor of the House in April 1917.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true.

Mr. BURDICK. At that time was there not a great deal of propaganda throughout the Nation that was very similar in character to what we hear now about war?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say to my good friend from North Dakota that we are now paralleling the history we enacted back in 1916 and 1917. If we follow that course we shall be drawn into another war just as sure as the rising of tomorrow's sun.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] told us at some length how the powers of the world envy and hate us. I believe that is true, and it leads to but one conclusion, that the "good neighbor" policy of this administration has bogged down. We have given vast sums of money to other countries. We have given them our home market. I ask you, in all sincerity, what else can we give them in order to get their good will? Would the President have us go over there again to make the world safe for democracy?

Mr. Chairman, the danger to the Republic lies within rather than without, with ten or twelve million men and women out of work, with over 3,000,000 families on relief, and with the small-business men facing bankruptcy. I received a letter this morning from one small-business man who stated that the taxes we have piled upon business are gradually squeezing out their lifeblood. Agricultural prices are at an all-time low when measured on a gold basis.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. Does the gentleman have in mind any information as to who disseminated the war-scare propaganda during the World War? Who was behind it?

Mr. KNUTSON. Most of it came from London and Paris, and we are getting another barrage from there now. The same old propaganda mills are grinding now that were grinding 22 years ago.

We sit here and waste our time setting up straw men to knock down. Do you realize that in the last 6 years one farm out of every five has been lost either through foreclosure or tax delinquency? Our national debt is at an all-time high, and the country is gripped with fear and uncertainty.

Let me call to your attention the mounting cost of government in this country. I hold in my hand an outline map of the Republic, the continental United States. The cost of government in this country consumes the equivalent of the entire income of every State west of the Mississippi River except Louisiana. Think of it! We are spending $18,000,000,000 a year for government in this country. The cost of government takes all the oil of Oklahoma and Texas, all the gold of California, all the silver of Nevada, all the copper of Montana, all the wheat of Kansas and the Dakotas, all the corn of Iowa, all the manufacturing of St. Louis and Kansas City, all the aluminum bauxite of Arkansas, all the dairying of Minnesota, all the hard toil of the Nebraskans, all the coal of Colorado, all the potatoes of Idaho, all the ranches of Wyoming, all the apples of Washington, all the lumber of Oregon, all the sugar beets of Utah, all the mines of New Mexico, and all the desert produce of Arizona. Think of it! All those things we are spending on government. Where is the promise you new dealers made to us back in 1932 that you would reduce the cost of government 25 percent when you got in office? Instead you have increased the cost of operating the Federal Government from $5,785,000,000 in the fiscal year 1933, when you took over the Government, to $11,361,000,000 for the current fiscal year. In other words, you have doubled the cost of government instead of reducing it as you promised. Is that playing fair with our people? Where is your promise made back in 1932 that you would put the idle back to work, reopen the factories, and put this country back on a prosperous basis? Words, words, empty words—just promises that you had no idea of keeping, and when I say "you" I am talking of your leaders, promises your leaders had no idea of keeping. They were merely uttered to get votes.

I may tell you my friends, this country is honeycombed with festering sores of economic ills which, if not cured soon, will destroy the Republic. We sit here and fiddle with airplanes while ten or twelve million men and women are walking the streets looking for work and over 3,000,000 families are on relief. We are fiddling while Rome is burning. My God, have you lost your sense of perspective?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; briefly.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman know just exactly how much money we are going to spend under this bill? The bill is not clear in that respect, but I understand it is about $375,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not believe anybody knows for sure.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman know whether it is $375,000,000 or more?

Mr. KNUTSON. The $375,000,000 is merely a start. Can the gentleman recall an appropriation this Congress ever made that was sufficient? This is but the beginning of a military program that may crush us in time.

Mr. STEFAN. Well, of course, Government business is the highest-priced business in the world.

Mr. KNUTSON. Especially under the New Deal.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman knows that in national defense it is also very important to have food. Did the gentleman recently hear that there will come out a statement today from the Department of Agriculture that the price of lard is going to go down to 5 cents a pound? Does the gentleman also know that we are annually importing into this country about a billion pounds of foreign fats and oils, and that the excuse for running the price of lard down is that we are raising too many hogs and too much corn? Does the gentleman believe in that sort of psychology?

Will not the gentleman agree that our food supply is our first line of defense and will be indispensable to us in the event of war?

Mr. KNUTSON. I agree with my friend from Nebraska 100 percent. It may be that we are raising too many political hogs. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Brooks].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, a great deal of discussion has already ensued in reference to this very important bill. It is, therefore, not my purpose to go into the technical features of the bill, but rather to outline my own attitude in reference to the measure and what I believe to be the attitude of the other members of the committee with reference to this matter.

Over a month ago the Committee on Military Affairs took up the consideration of this national defense bill. We have heard witnesses from the Military Establishment of the United States. Our testimony has been confined almost exclusively to this type of witness. The committee has received the very best there is in the way of expert testimony throughout the country and I believe the committee and the Congress likewise are armed fully with all the facts necessary to decide this important question.
